Mr. BUCKALEW. The Senator will allow me to interrupt him for a moment. He will see by referring to the resolution that it does not mention the House at all. I understand him to speak on the face of the resolution. The House is not named in the resolution of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. YATES. I understand that; but the managers are the representatives of the House in the case, and are supposed to speak the will of the House in this matter. Now, all that I have to say in summing up this whole matter is that nobody should refuse investigation. These charges have been made; they are made all over the country; the air is full of them; the newspapers are full of them; and already opinions have been formed. Reports prejudicial to the character of certain Senators have already gone abroad. Now, as an act of justice to those Senators, that they may exculpate themselves, that this may stand fair before their country, their friends, instead of opposing this investigation, should court it, demand it, insist upon it, by the appointment of committees of investigation, and by resorting to every mode and measure which would induce a proper consideration of the whole subject. I should consider that it was for me, for my vindication, that this investigation should be prosecuted. Is it not a serious charge? Does not the resolution of the House of Representatives say that there is reason to believe that corrupt means have been used? Is not the distinguished Senator from Missouri informed that his testimony is important in this regard? I know not what he may say; I only know, as I repeat again, that he is innocent, so far as the use of money is concerned, at all events, and innocent of any other improper or corrupt motive, I believe. But, sir, his testimony may be of the utmost importance; and it may be of importance, although he may not know now what is the point which they wish to prove by him. It may be one of a series of facts that they wish to establish by his testimony, a circumstance which of itself is immaterial, but which, when connected with other evidence, may be of the utmost importance.

It is not, sir, that the President may be convicted, it is not that any Senator may be found guilty of these charges, that I demand investigation; but it is that they may be exculpated; that the highest officer known to our laws, the Chief Magistrate of the nation, may exculpate himself, may vindicate himself before the American people.

It is for that reason that I want investigation, that I demand investigation; and it is in behalf of the Senate of the United States to vindicate its purity, to sustain its dignity, to show that it is above corruption, and that in a matter involving such gigantic interests, and in this tremendous hour of the Republic, we shall show that in this sacred Hall corruption has never entered, and that no Senator has been tainted by a bribe to give a dishonest vote.

These are the motives which influence me, and while I do think that the resolution of the Senator from Kentucky reflects upon the House of Representatives, or at all events upon its Representatives, the managers, yet I think investigation so important, so necessary, so demanded by the circumstances of the case and by the expectations of the country, that it ought not to be refused, and I trust will not be refused, by any Senator.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. HARLAN. I will ask the Senator if he will withdraw that for a moment. I think there ought to be an executive session of two or three minutes at least for the purpose of referring some papers. If the Senator from New York will withdraw his proposition, I will make that motion.

Mr. CONKLING. I will withdraw my motion for that purpose.

Mr. HARLAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and after some time spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, May 23, 1868.

The House met at twelve o'clock m.

By unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of Wednesday last was dispensed with.

On motion of Mr. WINDOM, the House adjourned.

MEMORIAL.

The following memorial was presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committee:

By Mr. SCHENCK: A memorial of Alexander C. Blount and 9 others, citizens of Florida and attorneys practicing before the United States district court, praying for the passage of a bill now pending before the Committee on the Judiciary.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, May 25, 1868.

Prayer by Rev. E. H. GRAY, D. D.

On motion of Mr. MORTON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of Thursday last was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of the Interior, communicating an estimate of appropriations required to carry out the stipulations of the third article of the treaty of November 15, 1861, with the Pottawatomie Indians, as modified by the treaty of March 29, 1866; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MORTON. I present a petition signed by some seventy-nine steamboat captains and pilots on the Ohio river and living at Pittsburgh, in which they represent that the railroad bridge over the Ohio river at Steubenville is an obstruction to navigation, and protest against the construction of any more bridges having a settled span less than five hundred feet in width.

I also present a memorial signed by nearly two hundred of the principal merchants and manufacturers of Pittsburgh to the same effect, in which they state that the result of the Steubenville bridge has been a great obstruction to navigation, and that in order to preserve the navigation of the Ohio river no more bridges should be allowed to be built with a span of less than five hundred feet over the current. I move the reference of these petitions to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COLE presented resolutions of the Legislature of California, in favor of aid to Captain Thomas Truesworthy in improving the navigation of the Colorado river; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a resolution of the Legislature of California, in favor of an appropriation of $100,000 for the survey of the public lands in California; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented the memorial of the Legislature of California, in favor of the payment of damages for property destroyed by the Indians in the counties of Humboldt, Klamath, Del Norte, and Trinity, in that State, in the years 1861, 1862, and 1863; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented resolutions of the Legislature of California, denouncing the arrest of American citizens in Great Britain, and pledging the people of that State to the support of measures for their protection; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented resolutions of the Legislature of California, in favor of the establishment of a weekly mail route from Stockton to Millerton, and the establishment of post offices at Tuolumne City, Welch's Store, and Apple's, in that State; which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a resolution of the Legislature of California, in favor of a reduction of the tax on brandy made from native wine or grapes, to the end that the production of the grape may be encouraged; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented resolutions of the Legislature of California, in favor of granting aid to the Southern Pacific railroad; which were referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

He also presented a resolution of the Legislature of California, praying the passage of an act to authorize that State to invest the proceeds of the sale of agricultural college lands in productive real estate; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HARLAN presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Iowa, in favor of the passage of a law by Congress making postmasters special agents for the sale of revenue stamps; which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented two memorials of honorably discharged officers of the Army, citizens of Iowa, remonstrating against the passage of the bill prohibiting the commutation for pay of officers' servants; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present the proceedings of the Cincinnati Board of Underwriters in regard to the Cincinnati and Newport bridge, and also the opinion of Western river pilots in regard to bridging the Ohio river. They represent that the construction of a bridge of less than five hundred feet span over the lower part of the Ohio river would be detrimental to the interests of commerce. I move that these petitions take the course of the petitions already presented by the Senator from Indiana on this subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. WILSON presented the petition of Thomas C. Moody, of South Carolina; the petition of James M. Martin, of South Carolina; and the petition of James M. Calhoun, of Atlanta, Georgia, praying the removal of the political disabilities imposed on them by acts of Congress; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of Ellen Simms, of Baltimore, Maryland, praying to be allowed the bounty due her nephew, York Williams, late of company D, thirty-eighth regiment United States colored troops; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Massachusetts, praying that Indians who took part in the late rebellion, whose annuities have been restored to them, may be compelled to pay out of future grants of money debts due by them to loyal citizens of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MORGAN presented the petition of F. A. Merrill and others, of New York, praying that an American register be granted to the American built bark Carlotta; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. TRUMBULL presented the petition of A. Sidney Robertson, of Louisiana, praying to be relieved from civil disabilities imposed on him by acts of Congress; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SUMNER. I present a memorial from the American Geographical and Statistical Society, in which they set forth that having closely studied the existing authentic sources of information, both official and private, concerning the northwestern territory recently ceded to the United States by the Russian Government, they find eminent reason to believe that the territory possesses resources of much greater value and importance than has heretofore been generally supposed, and whose rapid development by explorations in geodesy and natural history is highly necessary to the general interests of our country, of science, and of commerce. Therefore they ask Congress that the earliest possible action may be taken by the Government of the United States to secure a proper survey and examination upon the coast and within the Territory of Alaska, by officers of the United States Coast Survey and other gentlemen of competent scientific ability and experience. I hardly know to what committee I should have this memorial referred; but on consideration I conclude that it is best to move its reference to the Committee on Appropriations. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. TRUMBULL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 431) to authorize the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from New Orleans, in the State of Louisiana, to Mobile, in the State of Alabama, and to secure to the Government the use of the same as a military and post road, and for other purposes, reported adversely thereon, and moved the indefinite postponement of the bill; which was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 274) providing for holding a circuit court at the city of Erie, Pennsylvania, have directed me to report it back adversely, and to ask its indefinite postponement. That subject has been disposed of, and the committee would like to get it off the Calendar by taking the question on the report now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the indefinite postponement of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 304) to provide for holding terms of the United States district court for the western district of Missouri at St. Joseph, in said State, reported adversely thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 361) relating to the Supreme Court of the United States, reported it with an amendment.

CHANGE OF MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. RAMSEY. The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 134) authorizing a change of mail service between Fort Abercrombie and Helena, have instructed me to report it back without amendment and recommend its passage; and, as there is nothing else particularly occupying the attention of the Senate, I should be very glad if they would proceed to the consideration of the resolution now.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It proposes to authorize the Postmaster General to change the character of the mail service from Fort Abercrombie, Dakota Territory, to Helena, Montana Territory, to post-coach service.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. COLE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 484) to aid the San Francisco and Humboldt Bay Railroad Company in the construction of a railroad from the city of San Francisco to the town of Humboldt Bay, in the State of California; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 485) providing for the examination of the claim of J. Marino Bonilla to the rancho "La Cuesta," in the State of California; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 136) for the relief of Jacob P. Leese; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEWART asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 486) to facilitate the settlement of certain prize cases in the southern district of Florida; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGES ON OHIO AND MISSISSIPPI RIVERS.

Mr. RAMSEY. I wish now, if it be in order, to move to reconsider a resolution that was passed at the instance of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORRIS] on Thursday last, proposing to recommit a certain bridge bill, proposing to construct a bridge on the Ohio, to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, with instructions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order, if there be no further morning business.

Mr. RAMSEY. I make the motion with a view of calling the attention of the Senator to what I think, as a member of that committee, would be the wiser course in regard to the proposed bridges upon the Ohio river, about which there seems, from the number of petitions presented recently, to be considerable feeling in the city of Cincinnati and other towns upon the river. In the appropriation bill for rivers and harbors, approved June 27, 1866, an appropriation was made, among other things, "for examining and reporting upon the subject of constructing railroad bridges across the Mississippi river between St. Paul, in Minnesota, and St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, upon such plans of construction as will offer the least impediment to the navigation of the river."

In pursuance of this authority the engineer bureau of the War Office have since been making surveys and examinations with a view of determining the kind of bridge that the interests of navigation and the interests of the railroads proposing to cross the river would mutually allow. I would respectfully suggest to the Senator from Indiana that in the appropriation bill making appropriations for river and harbor improvements now pending a similar clause be inserted in regard to the Ohio river; and if it is the desire of the people of the Ohio valley and of the railroads who seek to cross that river that action should be deferred till such a report is made, the committee to whom this bill is recommitted need take no action until a report be had from the engineer bureau.

Mr. MORTON. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Post Office Committee whether, under the provision of the statute to which he has referred, any survey or examination of the Ohio river is to be made, or is it confined to the upper Mississippi?

Mr. RAMSEY. It is confined to the upper Mississippi. The character of the two rivers differs very much. The Ohio river rises thirty, forty, or fifty feet at times. I think I have never known the Mississippi to rise more than ten feet at St. Paul, certainly, and I think not more than that at any point between there and St. Louis.

The motion of the Senator from Indiana, however, had reference to but one bill. There is another bill pending. House bill No. 725, proposing to bridge the Ohio river. It is entitled a supplement to an act approved July 24, 1862, entitled "An act to establish certain post roads." It proposes, I think, a general bridge bill for all railroads across the Ohio river above the mouth of the Licking. It might be well to recommit that, also, with instructions to await such a report as the Senator may get by the plan I suggest from the War Office. I think there is even another bill, but the title of it I do not now recollect.

I can say to the Senator from Indiana that when the subject of bridging the upper Mississippi river at some half a dozen points was before the Post Office Committee the committee consulted the best engineers who had turned their attention to that subject—one of the engineers of the War Office and others—and had correspondence with a number of persons interested in the navigation of that river. The committee kept up their inquiry during several months, obtaining all the information they possibly could upon the subject. They did not rashly and inconsiderately stipulate the terms upon which the bridges were to be erected. A span of three hundred feet was all that was asked for by the interests of navigation then. The board of commerce and other persons, who devoted themselves especially to the interest of navigation in the city of St. Louis, asked for but a span of three hundred feet; and the size of draw-bridge for which we provided is larger even than was asked for by that interest. Our action was taken considerably and upon the best information that could be obtained by the committee. I do not think it would be wise to modify what was then agreed upon, or to take any further steps in the matter until the information which has been called for from the War Office shall have been obtained. I would respectfully suggest to the Senator that he also call upon the War Office for some proper plan of constructing bridges upon the Ohio river.

The two interests are antagonistic to each other. The railroads require a bridge inexpensive and without regard probably to the preservation of the navigation of the river. Upon the other hand the river interest would almost deny a bridge at all crossing the stream. A compromise somewhere between the two antagonistic interests must be struck. Where it can be done is of course a question of science. The engineer bureau of the War Office had better be consulted so as to give us the best data on the subject. I have moved the reconsideration so as to bring the matter to the notice of the Senate again, and the Senator from Indiana, if it is agreeable to him, can propose to recommit the other bill.

Mr. MORTON. I will move to recommit the other bill. Does the Senator withdraw his motion to reconsider the recommitment of the Paducah bill?

Mr. RAMSEY. I will if the Senator wishes it.

Mr. MORTON. Before that is done I desire to lay before the Senate some additional papers that I have received since last Thursday. It was remarked by the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. POMEROY,] I believe, on that occasion, in speaking of what I had alleged as to the great width of tows of coal boats, salt boats, and iron boats, that there was no evidence that they were one hundred and fifty feet wide. I have here several affidavits from coal and salt men of Pittsburg and along the Ohio river in which this method of shipping is described. First I will present one from Mr. Willock:

PITTSBURG, May 22, 1868.

SIR: In answer to your inquiry as to what size tows we take out with the tow-boat Diamond, I would say that our tows usually are as follows:

When hitched up in three lengths, five hundred and thirty feet long and ninety-six feet wide (530×96).
When hitched up in two lengths, four hundred feet long by one hundred and forty-four feet wide (400×144).

Or, in other words, say from one hundred and twenty to one hundred and fifty thousand bushels coal.

Yours, truly,
JOHN S. WILLOCK,
For Hays's Coal Company.

JOHN F. DRAW, esq.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 22d day of May, A. D. 1868.
[Notarial seal.] JOSEPH SNOWDEN,
Notary Public.

I next submit the deposition of Mr. Fawcett:

PITTSBURG, May 22, 1868.

DEAR SIR: In compliance with your request, I would state that the steamer Boaz left here in January last with a tow of coal consisting of nine coal boats and two fuel boats, the space in width covered by this fleet being about one hundred and forty feet and in length, including steamboat, say four hundred and ninety feet. Total amount of coal two hundred thousand bushels.

Yours, truly,
THOMAS FAWCETT.

JOHN F. DRAW, esq., President Coal Exchange.

Sworn and subscribed before me this 22d day of May, A. D. 1868.
[Notarial seal.] JOSEPH SNOWDEN,
Notary Public.

The next deposition is that of Mr. Brown:

PITTSBURG, May 22, 1868.

DEAR SIR: In answer to your inquiries as to the dimensions of coal tows shipped by me, I have to reply as follows:

Steamer Shark, fourteen barges: length of tow five hundred and eighty-five feet, width one hundred and twenty-five feet, contents one hundred and sixty thousand bushels.

Steamer Mary Alice, twelve boats: length of tow five hundred and forty feet, width one hundred and fifty feet, contents two hundred and forty thousand bushels.

These are among our largest tows, and require a favorable stage of water and wide spans to insure safety.

Also, my losses by detention occasioned by Steubenville bridge, without taking into account contact with piers, amounts to over eight thousand dollars annually.

Yours, truly,
WILLIAM H. BROWN.

JOHN F. DRAW, President Coal Exchange.

Sworn and subscribed before me this 22d day of May, A. D. 1868.
[Notarial seal.] JOSEPH SNOWDEN,
Notary Public.

I wish to call the especial attention of the Senate to the contents of that deposition. In one tow they take two hundred and forty thousand bushels of coal, equal to eight thousand five hundred and seventy-two tons, or five hundred and seventy-three car loads. This coal operator states that his losses from simple detentions at the Steubenville bridge in one year, independent of collision or destruction produced by contact with the bridge, was $8,000.

The Steubenville bridge has furnished us an experience that river men never had before. It has been shown by absolute experience at Steubenville, which is a point in the river favorable to building a bridge, perhaps as favorable a point as could be found with a view to the current, the river being straight, it has been shown by the Steubenville bridge that navigation must be seriously and dangerously obstructed by a bridge with a span of only three hundred feet. This is not mere theory, but it is the result of absolute experience. Before that time a three hundred feet span had not been tried on the Ohio, but now it has been tried, and this is the result. In this connection I desire to present some further testimony:

PITTSBURG, May 22, 1868.

SIR: In reply to your inquiries concerning the size of tows of coal taken down the Ohio river by our tow-boat, we would say that the steamer Coal Hill, on the 1st of May, 1868, took fourteen barges of coal, the length of the same being five hundred and forty feet, including the steamboat, and the width of the same being one hundred and twenty feet. Also on the 3d of May, 1867, the same steamer took eleven (11) barges, the length of which was four hundred and twenty feet and the width of the same was one hundred and sixty feet.

GEORGE LYSLE, SONS & CO.

JOHN F. DRAW, esq., President of Coal Exchange.

CITY OF PITTSBURG, ss.:

Before me, an alderman in and for said city, personally came A. Lysle, one of the firm of George Lysle, Sons & Co., who, upon oath duly administered according to law, says that the above statement is just and correct.

ADDISON LYSLE.

Sworn and subscribed before me this 22d day of May, A. D. 1868.

ANDREW HUMBERT,
Alderman and Justice of the Peace.

PITTSBURG, May 23, 1868.

DEAR SIR: In compliance with your request we would state that the tow-boats Simpson Horner, Mary Ann, and Stella, have taken out the following tows:

March 11, 1868.—Tow-boat Simpson Horner, six (6) coal boats, four (4) barges, and one (1) French Creek, containing one hundred and seventy-two thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight (172,888) bushels. Length of tow, including steamboat, four hundred and eighty-five (485) feet; width of tow one hundred and fifty (150) feet.

April 18, 1868.—Tow-boat Mary Ann, two (2) coal boats, five (5) barges, one (1) hull, and one (1) French Creek, containing one hundred and thirty-seven thousand nine hundred and ninety-seven (137,997) bushels. Length of tow, including steamboat, four hundred and sixty-seven (467) feet; width of tow one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet.

May 7, 1868.—Tow-boat Stella, five (5) coal boats, two (2) barges, three (3) French Creeks, containing one hundred and fifty-one thousand nine hundred and ninety-nine (151,999) bushels. Length of tow, including steamboat, five hundred (500) feet; width of tow one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet.

Yours, &c.,
HORNER, WOOD & CO.,
Per Barrows.

JOHN F. DRAW, President Coal Exchange, Pittsburg, Pennsylvania.

STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA, Alleghany county:

Before me, a notary public in and for said Alleghany county and city of Pittsburg, State of Pennsylvania, personally came Richard Barrows, who, being duly sworn according to law, doth depose and say that the foregoing statements are true.

RICHARD BARROWS.

Sworn to and subscribed before me, May 25, 1868.

Witness my hand and notarial seal.

[Notarial seal.] LEONARD S. JOHNS,
Notary Public.

I shall be glad to have the motion to reconsider prevail, and then have all the bills that appertain to bridging the Ohio river recommitment to the committee, that they may have the whole subject under consideration; and then I will offer a resolution calling on the Secretary of War to have a survey made and a report from engineers on the subject. There is a commission of that kind already in existence in regard to the upper Mississippi, and I shall ask to have it extended to the Ohio.

Mr. RAMSEY. Of course, Mr. President, we who live on the Mississippi river would be very glad if bridges could be dispensed with entirely, but that is not likely to be the case, and we cannot expect that the bridge interest shall be entirely sacrificed. When this matter was before the Post Office Committee some two years since we thought we made a very fair compromise; we got terms out of the railroad interest that we did not at first expect to succeed in obtaining when we commenced our investigation.

The legislation on the subject of bridges in charge of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, as is witnessed by the act of July 25, 1866, was intended to be, and really was, highly protective of the interests of navigation. For the first time in our history the span of the main channel was required to be three hundred feet; the height of the span above high-water mark was first fixed at fifty feet; the piers were required to be parallel with the current, to guard against the mischief occasioned by the misconstruction in this respect of the piers of the Rock Island bridge. If the bridge should be a draw, as might be required in certain localities, then two open spaces of one hundred and sixty feet on either side of the pivot pier were insisted on. All of these details were the suggestions of engineers and others representing the river interest, and the spans and elevations were invariably greater than the railroad interests desired. And that the interests of navigation might be entirely secured the act of July 25, 1866, concluded in the thirteenth section as follows:

"That the right to alter or amend this act so as to prevent or remove all material obstructions to the navigation of said river by the construction of bridges is hereby expressly reserved."

So, Mr. President, the Senate may congratulate itself upon its watchful care over the interests of the great rivers of the continent.

But bridges will be erected, railroads will be constructed, and the rivalries of these interests must be harmonized; the pilots upon our rivers must be up to the march of the times, and by their alertness and skill learn to carry the crops in their charge as safely through a span of three hundred or five hundred feet, as in more primitive times, when bridges on the great rivers were unknown; they navigated then in the full face of the river. Times change and men must change with them.

I have already stated that the bridge policy contained in our legislation of July 25, 1866, was regarded as a great advantage to the navigation interest; in fact, in that legislation the navigation interest secured much better terms than I at one time thought could be obtained. To show that I am not mistaken on this point let me read from a pamphlet, issued at that time in St. Louis on behalf of the navigating interest, embodying their views:

"The width of passage between piers embracing the channel is a matter of most serious moment. Commerce, navigation, is making giant strides; due provision should be made therefor. On the high seas, on the lakes, where billows roll and craft must have her own means of propulsion and steering; increase the size as you can or will, each must have her own rig and appurtenances.

"On the western rivers the conditions are different. Step by step, point by point, we have advanced till we have the Ajax, a tow-boat, successfully navigating fifteen barges with three hundred thousand bushels coal, equivalent to eleven thousand four hundred tons, manned by a crew of twenty-five. Still more has been accomplished. So far as wheat, corn, and other cheap bulky commodities are concerned, they can be carried as readily as coal.

"The current is mainly the motive power when loaded—a cheap one, the gift of the Almighty—the benefit of which we earnestly pray you will in no wise rend from us. Up the stream, the barges being simply strong shells, merely skimming the surface of the water when unloaded, a greater number can be towed if offered.

"Below are given dimensions of barges now built and owned at St. Louis and above, remarking that with us this mode is yet in its infancy, and we trust will by you be carefully nurtured, not willfully or unnecessarily crushed in the bud:

Part Northwestern Packet Company's Barges at Dubuque.

Duke, length 155 feet; beam 26; depth 7; 20,000 bushels capacity.

Duchess, length, 155 feet; beam 26; depth 7; 20,000 bushels capacity.

Part Mississippi Valley Transportation Company's Barges.

	Length.	Beam.	Depth.
No. 13.....	177 5-10 feet;	31 3-10 feet;	5 2-10 feet.
No. 14.....	177 4-10 feet;	31 4-10 feet;	5 5-10 feet.
No. 17.....	175 feet;	30 feet;	5 3-4 feet.
No. 19.....	175 feet;	30 5-10 feet;	5 3-4 feet.
No. 20.....	174 5-10 feet;	30 2-10 feet;	5 1-3 feet.

"These may be towed and controlled by a powerful tow-boat in lines three or four abreast and four or five deep, the tow-boat always in the rear, steering accomplished by putting the fleet back till in such position that the current carries all in the required direction. The line of a fleet of barges five tier deep will be eight hundred and seventy-nine feet, exclusive of spar room; a fleet of four tier deep, seven hundred and five feet. During a side wind three hundred feet water-passage between piers is a confined space wherein to handle such a fleet with safety, it being impossible to keep the line of barges perfectly straight with the current; yet, as under fair contingencies a fleet can there be handled with ordinary safety, the navigation interest are willing three hundred feet be the limit. As bridges can and have repeatedly been constructed with three hundred feet water-passage, we claim that portion of the public right be imperatively insisted on.

Mr. Griffin, who spoke on behalf of this great interest, then told the committee this:

"The three hundred feet span and fifty feet altitude should be enforced, that steamers, particularly those having large fleets of barges in tow, have sufficient space to navigate at all hours; in darkness, storms, and bad weather, when they can navigate ordinary portions of the river. They should be located where the channel and current in approach and through is in a direct line with the piers at all seasons of the year; fifty feet altitude gives the pilot sight at an acute angle whereby he can correctly calculate how best he can obviate the difficulties he must encounter in expert steering in close places."

Mr. MORTON. What is the date of that pamphlet?

Mr. RAMSEY. It bears no date, but it was issued in 1866.

Mr. POMEROY. The remarks I made the other day in reference to the examination that was had before the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads related to an investigation with regard to the upper Mississippi and not in regard to the Ohio. I do not know that the committee have ever been in the possession of any very definite information as to what the span should be on the Ohio, nor in regard to the width of the boats that were towed. We had particular reference to the character of the service as performed on the upper Mississippi, not on the Ohio. The Senator from Indiana may be entirely correct so far as relates to the boats on the Ohio, and I presume he is.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I do not wish the railroad interest to be sacrificed or seriously damaged. By the system that I am asking for, in regard to the bridging of the Ohio river, the railroads and the navigation of that river can exist in harmony and each can be protected. But I make this proposition, and I think it cannot be successfully met, that if it is shown that by an increased cost—it may be of one half, or even if it should be as much again—the rivers can be bridged by bridges with a span of five hundred feet, which will not interfere with navigation, railroad companies should be required to build bridges of that character. Even if it costs as much again, or three times as much, the increased cost of a bridge that will not interfere with navigation is a mere bagatelle when compared with protecting the navigation of such a river as that. If the navigation is obstructed it is a continuing obstruction, a continual loss to the whole country. The increased cost of a bridge with a span of five hundred feet is a mere drop in the bucket when compared with the continuing damage done to the country by obstructing the navigation. I insist that it has been shown that a bridge of five hundred feet span can be built as readily as one of three hundred feet. In the advance of engineering science it has been done. It has been done repeatedly, and it can be done again.

Mr. POMEROY. Where they combine the suspension with the truss?

Mr. MORTON. Yes, sir. At St. Louis, from which I believe the pamphlet read by the chairman of the committee emanates, they were willing three years ago to have a bridge with a span of three hundred feet when they were discussing the bridge question, but they have since determined by absolute experience that they will have none with a span of less than five hundred feet.

Mr. RAMSEY. They are required by law to have a bridge with five hundred feet span. Two years ago we passed a bill requiring them to construct a bridge of that span.

Mr. MORTON. That, I believe, was upon a showing that a bridge with a span of less than five hundred feet would be an obstruction to the navigation of the river. Therefore, the bridge at St. Louis has three spans, one of five hundred and eighteen feet and two of four hundred and ninety-seven feet.

Mr. POMEROY. A suspension bridge?

Mr. MORTON. A combination of the suspension and truss, and I believe it will turn out that a bridge built in that way will be at very little increased expense over one built in the ordinary way. Thus the navigation is protected, the railroad interest is protected, and all the great interests in the country flourish together.

I move now to recommit to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads all the bills before the Senate on the subject of bridging the Ohio river.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, my State is interested in the navigation of the Ohio river to the extent of eight or nine hundred miles of its shore, and consequently it has a very deep interest in the subject of bridging that river. I have been asked by a friend of mine, a member of the other House, to look to the interests of this bridge constructing over the Ohio river. I have listened with much attention to the remarks and the documentary evidence produced by the honorable Senator from Indiana in support of his views, and he expresses the very views that I have always entertained in relation to bridging the Ohio river; and I return my thanks to him for the facts he has presented, and the energy and ability with which he has maintained them on the present occasion. In my judgment, the question does not admit of any serious doubt. No bridge ought ever to be permitted to be erected over the Ohio river with a span of less than five hundred feet; and the same is true of the Mississippi river. I admit that this matter of bridging streams is a question to be decided by the size and navigable capacities of the river. In relation to these streams those facts and capacities are well known. When the Steubenville bridge bill was before the Senate I then voted in favor of the proposition of a five hundred feet span, if I recollect aright. But, sir, the relative superior importance of the river navigation of such streams as the Mississippi and the Ohio was well stated, and not overstated, on a former day when this subject was up, by the Senator from Indiana. He said that it was a fact according to his information, though he had not verified it, and therefore could not vouch for its truth, that the amount of freight upon the Ohio river was greater than the aggregate amount of freight on all the railroads of the United States.

Mr. RAMSEY. That cannot be possible.

Mr. DAVIS. Whether it is possible or not, there is a very great preponderance in favor of the river trade. When the bounty of Nature has given to this great country such channels of international commerce and communication as these streams, and their navigation is sought to be impeded or interrupted seriously by the erection of bridges, and it is perfectly demonstrable and undeniable that the erection of bridges of the span of three hundred feet will produce serious impediment and obstruction to the transportation on the Ohio river, it seems to me that it ought not to admit a moment's doubt to proscribe such bridges and to require a greater amount of span. Why, sir, if the people who are interested in the navigation of the Ohio river had the question propounded to them would they give up that stream if it was possible, or all the railroads that could be constructed across it, they would not hesitate to accept the latter proposition.

Mr. RAMSEY. Is not that the river that Randolph said was frozen up one half the year and dried up the other half? [Laughter.]

Mr. DAVIS. That was one of John Randolph's sarcasms. He would like to have had a few more such, at any rate. No, sir; it is a great stream. It washes one of the most fertile sections of the United States. There is a vast amount of agricultural products and of the products of manufactures, and of growing manufactures immediately contiguous to it, all of which find their transportation to market upon its beautiful bosom. When there is a proposition to obstruct seriously that stream by a bridge with such a span as three hundred feet it ought not to be entertained for a moment; and I am rather surprised at the pertinacity with which gentlemen will continue to make propositions to erect numerous bridges of so short a span as three hundred feet. I believe, as the honorable Senator from Indiana said on Thursday, there are numerous bridges chartered and in contemplation of construction over this stream to the number, he said, of twelve, that are yet to be undertaken.

Mr. RAMSEY. Where?

Mr. DAVIS. On the Ohio river.

Mr. RAMSEY. Oh, no; ten on the Mississippi.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not know; I take the facts of the honorable Senator from Indiana; but, ten or one, I am against any bridge that has a less span than five hundred feet. Whether it is one or fifty, I should be equally opposed to such a restrictive span as that. I have no doubt from the facts and documents which the honorable Senator from Indiana read and stated, that by a combination of the two principles of a trusswork bridge and the wire or suspension bridge and by an inconsiderable addition to the cost of each bridge, a bridge of five hundred feet span could be erected at every needful point across that river.

I therefore hope that this subject will be re-committed to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and I should like the honorable Senator from Indiana to introduce a positive proposition instructing that committee peremptorily to report not only that all future bridges should be constructed with a span of five hundred feet, but that those bridges now in existence and operation should be taken down and the span extended to five hundred feet. Gentlemen need not expect to construct bridges across that stream with that narrow span which will not be resisted perseveringly now and in the future, and the resistance will accumulate until it prevails over narrow-span bridges and requires that they shall be extended; and that principle had better now be adopted, as the honorable Senator from Indiana said, before so many of these bridges are undertaken. It is easier and less expensive to build bridges upon that principle than to have them demolished after they are built and larger bridges upon the plan and of the extent now proposed erected. I think, sir, it is a plain question in which the whole country bordering and contiguous to those two great streams, the Mississippi, the Father of Waters, and the Ohio, are interested, and in which their interests demand that bridges of not less extent than five hundred feet span shall be required to be constructed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on recommitting all the bills on the subject of bridges across the Ohio river to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

POLITICAL DISABILITIES OF R. R. BUTLER.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move to take up for consideration House bill No. 870, to remove political disabilities from Roderick R. Butler, of Tennessee. It is a matter that has been pending for some time, and it ought to be disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the morning business is through, the joint resolution can be taken up on a motion.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Illinois whether it is likely to occupy much time?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope not. It relates to a member of the House of Representatives. It has been pending here for a long time, and it is a question that ought to be disposed of at the earliest opportunity. I cannot say, but I hope it will take only a little time.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I wish to finish the Army appropriation bill to-day. It was considered some time ago and amended.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think we can do both. I imagine this bill is not going to take long.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. With that understanding I will not interfere.

Mr. DAVIS. I will remark to the honorable Senator from Illinois that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCKALEW] was in the midst of a speech in opposition to the passage of the bill that he moves to take up. He went home a few days ago, and I understood from him that he would be back to-day. I have no particular opposition to the bill myself, but I hope the honorable Senator will extend the courtesy to the Senator from Pennsylvania to await until to-morrow or some subsequent day of the session.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I supposed the Senator from Pennsylvania had concluded his remarks on this bill. The Senator from Kentucky will recollect that the bill was recommitted, on some suggestions which were made by the Senator from Pennsylvania, to the Committee on the Judiciary. They have taken some testimony since, and it has been printed and laid upon our tables; and I was not advised that the Senator from Pennsylvania would pursue the matter any further. It was in reference to some testimony contained in the report of the testimony taken in the House of Representatives which the Senator from Pennsylvania supposed showed that Mr. Butler had, in the prosecution of guerrillas, or in the prosecution of the war, been guilty of acts that were not proper in civilized warfare. Mr. Butler himself has been examined under oath, and Colonel Stokes also, and that testimony has been printed, which explains those transactions; and I was not aware that the Senator from Pennsylvania designed further to oppose the bill. If the Senator from Kentucky is advised that he does, it may go over.

Mr. DAVIS. In answer to the Senator I will simply state that Mr. BUCKALEW remarked to me at the time he ceased to speak on that subject that he had not concluded his remarks upon it. That is all I know in relation to it.

I have no doubt that he contemplates making still further remarks upon that bill.

Mr. MORTON. The Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BUCKALEW,] on the evening of our last adjournment, said to me that he had not concluded his speech upon the Arkansas bill.

Mr. TRUMBULL. This is not the Arkansas bill. It is a House bill in reference to the removal of the political disabilities of a member of the House, Judge Butler, of Tennessee.

Mr. MORTON. I understood him as speaking about the Arkansas bill. He may have referred to the matter in Tennessee; but he said he had not concluded his speech, and he hoped the bill would not be pressed to-day. I presume he referred to the Tennessee matter, but I understood him as speaking of the Arkansas matter.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I will state that the Senator from Pennsylvania spoke to me in regard to the Arkansas bill, and although I should be very glad now to call up that bill, it was not my intention to call it up, because I supposed it would be impossible to get consideration definitely upon it. I wish, however, to give notice to the Senate that the day after to-morrow I shall make an effort to call up and dispose of the bill recognizing the State government in Arkansas. In reference to that bill the Senator from Pennsylvania spoke to me. However, I am not disposed to do any discourteous act to anybody, and if the Senator from Kentucky supposes that the Senator from Pennsylvania desires to be heard further in reference to this matter I shall not press my motion, and withdraw it.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate at this time to move that Mr. GRIMES be excused from serving as one of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 678) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1869. He is ill and unable to complete the duties of his appointment. The conference has not made any report. I move that he be excused in order that some gentleman may fill his place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made if there be no objection. No objection being made, the Senator from Iowa is excused.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The place will need to be filled by the appointment by the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will appoint Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, on that committee in place of Mr. GRIMES.

HARBORS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. COLE. I move to take up Senate joint resolution No. 46, for the purpose of moving an amendment to it.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (S. R. No. 46) in relation to a harbor at or near Point Sal, on the coast of California, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It requires the Secretary of the Treasury to cause investigation to be made, as soon as practicable, by the officers of the United States Coast Survey in California, as to the existence of a harbor in the vicinity of Point Sal, on the coast of California.

Mr. COLE. I move as an amendment to the joint resolution to add the following:

Also, to cause an examination to be made of the mouth of Bel river, in Mendocino county, in that State, with a view to its improvement for navigation; and also to cause to be examined the harbors of New San Pedro or Wilmington, San Diego, and Santa Cruz, with a view to their improvement.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to hear the resolution read again.

The Chief Clerk read the original resolution.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think it would be better to refer that to the Committee on Commerce and let it be examined into.

Mr. COLE. It has been before the committee and reported back. I suppose there can be no objection to it, and I ask for its consideration now.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Was the amendment before the committee?

Mr. COLE. No, sir.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then I think it had better go there, because it will involve very considerable expense.

Mr. COLE. The only objection I have to that reference is the loss of time it would occasion. The joint resolution merely directs the Secretary of the Treasury to cause an investigation or examination of these harbors on that coast. The growing commerce of these harbors, owing to the increased agricultural productions there, renders it quite necessary that they should be examined with this view. However, if there is any objection to its consideration now, I shall not insist upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine move a reference of the resolution?

Mr. FESSENDEN. No, sir; I withdraw the motion.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Before the resolution is passed I desire to inquire if it comes from a committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does. It is reported from the Committee on Commerce, but an amendment has been made to it in the Senate.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If the amendment has the assent of the committee, I have no objection.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The amendment has not the assent of any committee at all.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I know nothing about it; but such resolutions as this inadvertently passed often lead to very large expenditures of money. This may not be one of that kind. I know nothing about it; but it seems to me it ought to have the sanction of some committee; it ought to have been investigated or else explained to the Senate.

Mr. CONNESS. Mr. President, this resolution proposes certain surveys which have been asked for by the Legislature of California in joint resolutions presented here, and some of which are recommended also by the admiral stationed on the Pacific coast. The resolution, embracing a part of what it now contains, has already had reference to the Committee on Commerce. It has been amended so as to extend the examination, at the instance of my colleague. The work proposed to be done will not be done, as a matter of course, unless the appropriation already made and provided for the coast survey on the coast of California admits of its being done. If so, there can be no possible objection. I would have suggested that the War Department be given the charge of these surveys; but, as I supposed that that point was considered in the committee, and has been considered by my colleague also, I did not make the suggestion or propose any amendment of that kind.

Senators may content themselves, I think, so far as the matter of appropriation is concerned. The importance of the surveys and the importance of some of these improvements can scarcely be estimated, and certainly can not be overestimated; as, for instance, the harbor of Wilmington, south of San Diego, where there is no port into which one of our national vessels can go in case of bad weather. The subject has been very thoroughly considered and explained by the admiral stationed on that coast, Admiral Thatcher, a very intelligent and able man. I have in my possession reports from him recommending and urging that some steps be taken with a view to the preparation of the port of San Pedro or Wilmington for the reception of our national vessels and the establishment of a coaling depot there, so as to render it unnecessary to make an expensive trip for many hundred miles to San Francisco to coal our national vessels. I hope, sir, that no step will be taken to prevent these investigations being made.

Mr. THAYER. I understand that this resolution does not make any appropriation.

Mr. CONNESS. There is no appropriation made by this resolution.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is not directory to the Secretary of the Treasury; but it only authorizes him to have this work done, as I understand. Let the first part of the resolution be read.

Mr. CONNESS. If it did not direct him I should hope it would be amended; for otherwise I should have no hope that that officer would do anything.

The CHIEF CLERK. The resolution reads:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to cause investigations to be made, &c.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Mr. President, I dislike to be put in the position of opposing this matter; but still I think the Senate ought to consider, before passing resolutions of this kind, what is the history of these surveys and what is the mode adopted to obtain appropriations for improvements of this kind.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, it is the duty of the Chair to call attention to the unfinished business of the last sitting, which is the resolution of the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. DAVIS,] proposing the appointment of a select committee.

Mr. COLE. I move the postponement of the unfinished business until this resolution can be disposed of. I think it will take only a few minutes longer.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope the Senator from Kentucky will consent to his resolution going over for the moment until this matter is disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business will be passed over by common consent, if there be no objection. No objection being made, Senate joint resolution No. 46 is before the Senate, and the Senator from Illinois will proceed.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I shall detain the Senate but a moment. I simply rose to call attention to the mode of proceeding which is used to obtain appropriations out of the Treasury of the United States to improve all sorts of harbors and all sorts of rivers. There are a few harbors and rivers in the country that, perhaps, the Federal Government is justified in improving; but they ought to be of a national character and of very great importance. I do not myself believe in the appropriation of money by the Federal Government to improve every stream in every State in the nation that the locality may ask for. The usual mode of proceeding is this: in the first place a resolution is introduced authorizing the survey of a harbor or creek with a view to its improvement. That seems to be a small matter; no one objects to it. Oftentimes this survey is to be paid for out of appropriations which have already been made. The money, however, comes out of the Treasury. Then an officer, perhaps some lieutenant of engineers, is detailed, in pursuance of this resolution, to go and examine the harbor or river with a view to its improvement. The Government does not pass upon the propriety of its improvement; but this officer goes out charged with ascertaining how that harbor can be improved. He makes his examination and reports it to the War Department. Then the War Department is called on for the report of this engineer in regard to such a harbor, and it is sent in, in which he asks so much money to improve the particular harbor. It comes in from the War Department. That is regarded as an indorsement by the War Department, and then it is put into an appropriation bill so much money, so many hundred thousand or million dollars to improve such a harbor. The question is asked, "Is this recommended by the War Department?" "Oh, yes; it is communicated by the Secretary of War," and some lieutenant of engineers has made the examination, reported that this can be done, and the money is appropriated. Now, I do not say that these harbors are of that character; I do not know—

Mr. CONNESS. Do not say they are "creeks."

Mr. TRUMBULL. No; I do not say that they are creeks or small rivers; but if the Senator from California will look over some of the appropriation bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors, unless his knowledge of geography is very much better than mine, he will find appropriations made for the improvement of rivers that he never heard of. There are some not a thousand miles from where I live that would not reach to California, that I never heard of until I saw the bill making appropriations for their improvement. I think Congress should be careful in the initiation of these measures, because if you once initiate them it is very difficult to stop afterward; and I think that all bills of this character, proposing to survey a particular harbor with a view to its improvement, should first be examined by some committee.

Mr. COLE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Illinois had designated some other way of getting information touching these matters, he would have relieved the Senate, I have no doubt, considerably. I know of no other way to get at the facts than through the regular constituted officers of the Government. This resolution provides that officers of the United States Coast Survey in California shall make this examination. These officers, I presume, are now engaged there, and the examination can be made without additional expense, as was stated by my colleague, as I believe. The question as to whether Congress will hereafter make large or small appropriations for improving these harbors is a question that will come up when the appropriations are asked for; it is not a question before the Senate now. Congress is not bound by this examination in any sense. It is simply a method of getting at information which has been asked for by the concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of the State of California touching these several localities. I ask that the vote be taken upon it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Mr. President, I understood this to be a mere direction to the Coast Survey, and I do not anticipate the difficulties from it that my friend from Illinois seems to anticipate. My objection to it was that it directed specifically that this thing should be done, as I found when it was read. I was disposed to let it go in the first place, and I do not feel disposed to make any particular opposition to it now; but it has not been usual to pass resolutions of Congress directing the part of the country the Coast Survey should pay their attention to. They are going on regularly making surveys. They are on the Pacific coast I take it now.

Mr. CONNESS. This does not relate to the Coast Survey—

Mr. FESSENDEN. Yes. I know that the Coast Survey have surveyed harbors up and down the Atlantic coast.

Mr. CONNESS. If the Senator will permit me, I will say that this does not direct the officers of the Coast Survey to continue the coast survey, but to make certain specific examinations with reference to particular places and with reference to their usefulness for the purpose of harbors.

Mr. FESSENDEN. This will come, I take it, within the survey of the Pacific coast, will it not?

Mr. CONNESS. It is more specific than the general coast survey and with regard to particular usefulness.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That may be; but can it be that I do not understand where these harbors are? Are they not on the Pacific coast?

Mr. COLE. Yes, sir, on the coast of California; all of them.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If they are there, the Coast Survey in the progress of their inquiries will survey these harbors.

Mr. COLE. But they are harbors that have not been brought particularly to the attention of the Coast Survey, which has been general in reference to the navigation up and down the coast. It is for the convenience of the local commerce that these examinations are asked; the commerce of the particular localities which are localities that are now producing grains, &c., to a great extent.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Either the honorable Senators or I are mistaken in the scope of the design of the Coast Survey. The design of that establishment is to survey the whole coast of the United States accurately, closely, specifically, and to leave no part of it unsurveyed either on the Atlantic or the Pacific. It is only a question of time, because it takes time, whether particular harbors are surveyed this year or the next, or the year after. That is the real truth about the matter. They have completed the survey of the Atlantic coast, and I suppose in the process of time they will complete the survey of the Pacific coast, and these very harbors will be surveyed.

All the objection I have to the resolution is that the Legislature of California or ourselves, at their request, should undertake specifically to point out what the Coast Survey should do first. They are going upon a system, and it may be a very inconvenient thing for them, and may interfere with their regular system of surveys, to knock off and examine particular places at this time. I do not know how the fact is; but that is my objection to the proposition. I think the Secretary of the Treasury ought not to be required to do it; but it would be as well to authorize him, calling the matter to his attention. Then he can call the attention of the Coast Survey to it, and they will do what they can do, undoubtedly, as rapidly as possible.

Mr. CONNESS. The coast of California is sufficiently extensive to occupy the force of the Coast Survey, now located there and engaged in surveys, for the next fifty years to come. In the meantime, commerce and trade have their immediate demands and necessities; and what we ask in this resolution is that these demands pointed by these immediate necessities shall be first attended to. The Senator from Maine says that the Secretary of the Treasury should not be directed to do this. Well, sir, it is not a very fast Department, particularly in reference to California affairs. In 1864, now four years ago, Congress appropriated $300,000 to build a mint at San Francisco, where the largest extent of coinage in the United States is being done, and where it is all being done by gaslight, for want of daylight being able to shine through the miserable cavern in which the work is done. And yet, sir, the first stone has not been laid over another. It took a long time for the honorable gentleman at the head of the Treasury Department now to determine that we wanted a building at all. Indeed, his declaration on one occasion was that all we wanted there was a big blacksmith shop for a mint, and it has been procrastinated and procrastinated until we do not know when we shall get a mint. And yet there is objection to directing that officer to do things that the admiral on the coast has recommended as essential for our national uses and that involves no expense.

But the honorable Senator from Illinois is opposed to collecting facts or getting information, and he reduces, in his presentation of this subject to the Senate, its importance; he dwarfs it by comparing it to the surveys of creeks and other small streams, the survey of which has been heretofore directed, and says that some of these are located near his own home. Well, sir, he should have attended to that. The honorable Senator—I wish he would note what I say—has not been always up to the period in which he lives. When we proposed to aid the establishment of a great line of steamships between San Francisco and Japan and China, the result of the establishment of which now is challenging not only the admiration of our own people but that of the entire world, that Senator rose in his place here and denounced it as an extravagant appropriation of public funds. And now he puts his stakes down against the examination of a harbor on that coast. Sir, I hope the Senate will order this to be done.

Mr. CORBETT. Mr. President, it seems to me that this resolution only requires the Secretary of the Treasury "to cause an examination to be made as soon as practicable." It does not say this year or next, but "as soon as practicable," and in the course of their investigations and surveys the Coast Survey will examine these harbors at the most convenient time. It seems to me a reference to the language of the resolution obviates the objection of the Senator from Maine, for it does not require that the action shall be done immediately, but that it shall be done as soon as practicable. It seems to me that that is very clear. I am in favor of the resolution.

The joint resolution was passed.

Mr. COLE. I move to change the title of the resolution to conform to the amendment made, so as to read, "a joint resolution in relation to certain harbors on the coast of California."

The amendment was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I move that all prior orders be postponed, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Army appropriation bill, being House bill No. 658.

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the unfinished business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is the resolution of the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. DAVIS,] to provide for the appointment of a select committee.

The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 658) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1869, and for other purposes.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The bill was once passed by the Senate, and afterward reconsidered. There are only a few amendments.

The amendments of the Committee on Appropriations were read. The first amendment was after the word "source," in line twenty-three, to insert "except appropriations made by act of March 2, 1867," and after the word "Treasury," in line twenty-five, to insert "at the close of the current fiscal year;" so as to make the clause read:

For medical and hospital department, $200,000: Provided, That all sums that have accrued to the credit of the medical and hospital department from the sale of medical and hospital stores, or from any other source, except appropriations made by act of March 2, 1867, are hereby covered into the Treasury at the close of the current fiscal year.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not understand that amendment, and I should like to have the chairman explain it. Does it apply to the naval appropriation bill also?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. No, sir.

Mr. ANTHONY. Only to this appropriation bill?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Only to this bill. It is not general.

Mr. ANTHONY. Then I have no objection to it.

Mr. DRAKE. I would suggest to the honorable chairman of the committee a little change in the phraseology of the amendment, so as to read "hereby directed to be covered into the Treasury." I do not know that it is exactly proper to say that money shall be covered into the Treasury under this act, and by force of this act. It has to be done by a warrant of the Secretary of the Treasury, I believe.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I hardly know what the phrase ought to be, but I am told this is the usual language.

Mr. DRAKE. My suggestion is to insert the phrase "hereby directed to be;" so as to read "are hereby directed to be covered into the Treasury."

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. My understanding of it is—those who are better informed will know if I am not correct—that by operation of the law, not by the act of the Secretary of the Treasury, these sums will be regarded as in the Treasury if this provision be passed.

Mr. DRAKE. I will state to the Senator from Maine that I have been informed—his colleague can tell whether I am correct—that money is covered into the Treasury by a warrant issued by the Secretary of the Treasury upon the Treasurer of the United States for that purpose.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is the fact. The fifth section, I think, of the original act establishing the Treasury Department specifically requires a warrant to be drawn in order to put money into the Treasury. It has to go through certain forms.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I accept the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri, so as to make the amendment read, "hereby directed to be covered into the Treasury."

Mr. DRAKE. I move that amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to; and the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines thirty-two and thirty-three, in the following words:

For expenses of the signal service of the Army, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out all of the second section after the enacting clause, as follows:

That the sums appropriated for each of the several items contained in this act shall be made up only by computing the unexpended balance for such item which may remain in the Treasury on the 30th day of June, 1868, and adding thereto so much more from the Treasury as will give the sum for each of such items appropriated by this act: Provided, however, That this shall not be construed to prevent the payment from the proper appropriation of expenditures made during the current fiscal year after said year shall have closed.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That from the sums appropriated for each of the several items contained in this act, there be deducted the unexpended balance for such item which may remain in the Treasury on the 30th of June, 1868.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as an additional section:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That of the appropriation of $60,000 for publishing the medical and surgical history of the rebellion and the medical statistics of the Provost Marshal General's office, made in an act approved July 28, 1866, $30,000 shall be devoted to the preparation and publication of five thousand copies of the medical statistics of the Provost Marshal General's Bureau, and that the work shall be compiled and completed by Assistant Medical Purveyor J. H. Baxter, under the immediate direction of the Secretary of War, and without the interference of any other officer.

Mr. ANTHONY. There was a proposition made to change that appropriation and to make it applicable to the preparation of the whole work. I believe, as the resolution was passed by Congress originally, this money was made applicable to the publication of the work; at any rate it was so construed by the Congressional Printer; and I have been trying for months to get a resolution passed through Congress to make the appropriation applicable to the preparation of the work, so that the ordinary appropriation for printing may be applicable to the publication of it. If those who have charge of this matter—I have not—have taken it into consideration, I do not wish to interpose any objection.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator from Rhode Island will allow me, I desire to suggest to him that this proposition has no effect one way or the other upon the idea which he now submits. This does not touch at all the question whether money shall be appropriated to the preparation and not to the printing of the work, or whether it shall be applicable alike to the preparation and the printing. That question is left entirely untouched and open for the resolution of the Senator or any other treatment which the Senate may see fit to bestow upon it. This is simply a proposition that the appropriation shall be divided. It is directory in its nature and divides the appropriation precisely as I have the evidence in my hand to show both Houses intended that it should be divided originally as between the two works, namely, the statistics of the Provost Marshal General's Bureau, and the medical and surgical history of the war being separate things, and the purpose being to devote half of the appropriation to one and the other half to the other; but the language of the bill left it, as it was supposed, obscure, and this is simply to draw the dividing line.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

REPRESENTATION OF ARKANSAS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the bill for the admission of the State of Arkansas be taken up.

Several SENATORS. No, no.

Mr. SHERMAN. I was not here on Thursday, but the Senator from Maine [Mr. FESSENDEN] now informs me that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCKALEW] desired that this bill should not come up in his absence.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The matter was mentioned this morning, and the Senator from Indiana stated that the Senator from Pennsylvania requested him, if this bill came up, to have it postponed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I thought it was the bill in reference to Mr. Butler.

Mr. FESSENDEN. This one, also. I will ask the Senator from Indiana if he did not understand that the Senator from Pennsylvania desired to be present when the Arkansas bill should be taken up?

Mr. MORTON. The Senator from Pennsylvania spoke to me on the evening of our last adjournment, which I think was on Thursday, and said he wanted to finish his speech on the admission of Arkansas, as I understood him. From what was said to me this morning, however, I suppose that I was mistaken, and that he had reference to the Tennessee matter; but I understood him to refer at the time to the Arkansas bill, and to say that he wanted to be present when that matter should be discussed, as he wanted to finish or to make a speech.

Mr. DRAKE. Before the bill is laid aside for the present, I desire to offer the amendment which I submitted on the 16th instant, and which was then ordered to be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read, if there be no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will not press a vote on this bill in the absence of the Senator from Pennsylvania, but perhaps other Senators would like to speak on the bill, and, if there is no other business pressing, I think we may as well go on with the debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has not yet been taken up.

Mr. DRAKE. I suppose my amendment cannot be offered regularly until the bill is up.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that it be taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be taken up, if there be no objection.

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Missouri whether it is in accordance with his convenience to go on today and discuss his amendment?

Mr. DRAKE. It would be in accordance with my convenience, Mr. President; but I think that this is a bill which should be discussed when the Senate is as full as we can expect to get it. There are questions of great gravity involved in it, and I very much desire that there should be a free and full expression of the opinions of Senators in regard to it, especially in regard to the principles which I conceive to be involved in the amendment which I have sent to the Clerk's table just now. I would, therefore, myself prefer that the bill should go over to another day, for that reason and that alone.

Mr. CONKLING. Let me suggest, as there is to be no vote to-day—nobody seems to anticipate that—if the Senators who intend taking part in the discussion are not ready to go on now not much will be gained by taking up the bill.

Mr. CONNESS. If this bill is not to be proceeded with—

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the amendment be read that we may hear what it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment of Mr. DRAKE, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That the State of Arkansas, under and with the constitution thereof adopted in convention on the 11th day of February, 1868, and subsequently ratified by the people of said State, shall be entitled to be admitted to representation in Congress as one of the States of the Union, whenever the Legislature of said State shall pass an act agreeing, on behalf of said State, to the following fundamental condition of such admission, to wit: That the said constitution shall never be so amended or changed as to deprive any one of the right to vote at all elections held in said State by the people for Representatives in Congress, or for State, county, or municipal officers, or for any other purpose, who now is or may hereafter become, according to the present terms of said constitution, entitled to vote; unless such deprivation be imposed as a punishment for such crimes as are now felonies at the common law, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted under laws equally applicable to all the inhabitants of said State; that the third section of the first article of said constitution, in the words following, to wit: "The equality of all persons before the law is recognized, and shall ever remain inviolate; nor shall any citizen ever be deprived of any right, privilege, or immunity, nor exempted from any burden or duty on account of race, color, or previous condition," shall never be repealed or changed; that any violation by said State of the terms of this condition shall authorize the exclusion of said State from representation in either House of Congress so long as such violation continues; and that all laws or ordinances enacted or ordained in said State in contravention of this fundamental condition shall be wholly inoperative therein.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That upon the passage of such an act by the Legislature of said State, legally authenticated copies thereof shall be transmitted to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and by them laid before the Congress, and if declared by a concurrent vote of both Houses to be in accordance with this act, the said State shall be admitted to representation in Congress as one of the States of the Union.

Amend the preamble by striking out of lines five and six the words "which is republican in form," and inserting in line five after the word "constitution," the words "and republican form."

LINCOLN MONUMENT ASSOCIATION.

Mr. CONNESS. The amendment having now been read, and no further action being about to be had on the measure to-day, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 216.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 216) to authorize the Secretary of War to place at the disposal of the Lincoln Monument Association damaged and captured ordnance, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. CONNESS to insert the word "bronze" after the word "captured."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. It seems to me that the last clause of that resolution is rather unlimited. There may be some very valuable pieces of ordnance that are captured, which are not damaged, and yet which would go to this association under the resolution as it reads.

Mr. CONNESS. I desire to offer an amendment. Let the Secretary read the last clause again.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask that the whole of the resolution be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read through.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to place at the disposal of the Lincoln Monument Association, incorporated by an act of Congress entitled "An act to incorporate the Lincoln Monument Association," approved March 30, 1867, damaged and captured bronze guns and ordnance, out of which to cast the statues of the principal figures surmounting and to be incorporated in said structure: Provided, That no metal as aforesaid shall be thus appropriated until the voluntary contributions for said purpose actually in the hands of the treasurer shall amount to $100,000.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. There may be some pieces that are captured that would be held to be valuable by the Government and which they would desire to retain as trophies, or which some of the States might desire to retain. To make over the entire amount of all such captured property to this association it seems to me is going rather too far. There ought to be some limitation about it. There ought to be some opportunity for the Secretary of War to exercise some discretion about it. There may be pieces that ought not to be given up to be melted over for any such purpose.

Mr. CONNESS. I move to amend the resolution by inserting after the word "authorized" the words "at his discretion," and after "1867" inserting the word "such," and after the word "captured" inserting "bronze and brass;" so as to make the resolution read:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized at his discretion to place at the disposal of the Lincoln Monument Association, incorporated by an act of Congress, entitled "An act to incorporate the Lincoln Monument Association," approved March 30, 1867, such damaged and captured bronze and brass guns and ordnance, out of which to cast the statues of the principal figures surmounting and to be incorporated in said structure, &c.

I wish to put the whole matter in the discretion of the Secretary of War. Of course no valuable ordnance will be granted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have some explanation in regard to this association. The object is a very good one.

Mr. CONNESS. The Senator ought to be informed that Congress passed an act to incorporate an association for the erection of a national monument, in this city in memory of Mr. Lincoln, and at the head of that association, I believe, stands the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARLAN] as its president. It has a board of directors. Its proceedings are all made public. It is now collecting moneys, and has recently received respectable subscriptions of money from my own State, California. The provision is that this grant of damaged and captured ordnance shall be made only when a certain amount of money is subscribed sufficient to guaranty the construction and erection of the monument.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What weight of metal will be required?

Mr. CONNESS. I cannot answer that question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Ought we not to know?

Mr. CONNESS. I do not think that is necessary.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ought to recollect, but I have forgotten, when the association was incorporated; and I rise for the purpose of asking the honorable member from California to give me the information. I should like to know who they are, and when they were incorporated. I understand no capital is provided for. They are not obliged to raise any capital. They may or may not raise it. Is the monument to be erected here?

Mr. CONNESS. I will refer the honorable Senator to the president of the association, the Senator from Iowa, who will give him the information.

Mr. JOHNSON. I did not doubt that they were all respectable gentlemen, but this resolution would give all the ordnance that has been captured.

Mr. CONNESS. No.

Mr. HARLAN. The act of incorporation was passed last March, I think, and the names of the parties incorporated are mentioned in the act itself. They do not occur to me at this time. They are gentlemen who have been selected in various parts of the country. I remember one from the Senator's own State, Mr. Thomas.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have no doubt the association is composed of respectable gentlemen, but I did not know who they were. The honorable member from Iowa is, I understand, himself one of them, and the Postmaster General for the time being is another.

Mr. HARLAN. Yes; I think my name is mentioned in the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. But this provision gives all ordnance that may be found necessary.

Mr. HARLAN. It was intended only to give a sufficient amount out of which to cast the principal figures.

Mr. JOHNSON. I should like to know how much of the ordnance will be necessary for that purpose. How many figures are to be provided for?

Mr. HARLAN. Twelve or fifteen figures, I think.

Mr. JOHNSON. It may take all we have got.

Mr. CONKLING. I see the name of the honorable Senator from Iowa is the second on this list of highly respectable gentlemen; and as he seems to be very good-natured in giving information, I should like to know two or three things about this matter. Has any part of this work been commenced, may I inquire?

Mr. HARLAN. None whatever. Money is being collected, as I understand. The treasurer of the association is the Treasurer of the United States, Mr. Spinner, and I understand from him that money is coming in to him almost daily from various parts of the country.

Mr. CONKLING. And this damaged ordnance is to be devoted to the manufacture of fixtures, being melted and cast again?

Mr. HARLAN. For nothing else, as I understand; no other object.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator says ten or fifteen figures, are to be made?

Mr. HARLAN. I think about that number.

Mr. CONKLING. That is all the information the Senator has as to the quantity of metal that will be needed, or as to the time when it will be needed?

Mr. HARLAN. I do not know that it ever will be needed. The resolution itself provides that no part of it shall be used until $100,000 shall have been contributed voluntarily for this purpose. If that amount of money should never be received by the treasurer, I suppose no demand will ever be made for the metal, unless the law should be modified hereafter. I do not know when that will occur; it is impossible for any one to know; but I hope it will be at no very distant day.

Mr. CONKLING. And is the whole scope of the work to cast these figures?

Mr. HARLAN. No, sir; the plan of the monument that is now being contemplated requires the erection of a granite column some sixty feet high, large enough to receive various figures. The main monument will be erected of granite, if the plan that is now under consideration should be adopted, and this metal will be needed merely for the figures of the persons to be represented.

Mr. CONKLING. And the collections made are to be devoted mainly to raising this shaft and casting these figures?

Mr. HARLAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. I hope the Senator will excuse me for being a little inquisitive. I have been looking at some of the recent works of art about here, and I wanted to find out that this has no relation to some of them. I did not know anything about it except that I saw the act of last year, and the Senator's name among the incorporators. I am much obliged to the Senator for the information he has given me.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I offer this amendment to come in at the end of the resolution:

And no more metal shall be thus appropriated than what shall be actually used for the purpose of casting the figures as herein mentioned.

Mr. CONNESS. What would the association want with more?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. They might sell it.

Mr. HARLAN. There can be no objection to the amendment.

Mr. CONNESS. None at all.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the resolution to be read a third time. The resolution was read the third time, and passed.

POWELL'S COLORADO EXPEDITION.

Mr. WILSON. I move to take up House joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish supplies to an exploring expedition.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 251) authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish supplies to an exploring expedition.

It proposes to empower the Secretary of War to issue such commissary and quartermaster stores to the expedition engaged in the exploration of the river Colorado, under direction of Professor Powell, as may be necessary to enable the expedition to prosecute its work, if such issue is not detrimental to the interests of the military service.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I want to inquire a little into this business. Who is Professor Powell, and under whose authority is he prosecuting a survey of the Colorado river? Is he a Government officer? Is this a military expedition?

Mr. WILSON. I will tell the Senator who Professor Powell is. I do not personally know him; but I understand that he is a gentleman of capacity and character, a learned man, and that he is making a survey of the Colorado river. He received last year, while making this survey, the aid of the Government to a certain extent, but he cannot go any further now without some vote of Congress. The application made by him has been investigated, and is recommended strongly by the head of the engineer corps, General Humphreys, and has the approval of the Secretary of War. It is to furnish this small party engaged in this important business, deemed important to the country, some rations. The War Department are entirely satisfied with it, and want the work to go on. It will cost the Government but a small sum.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, it is not my business, it belongs to my friend from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] to guard the Treasury; but it seems to me that this is entering on rather a novel legislative expedition. Here is a private party. We have had Government explorations of this river already. Here is a private party, for some purpose, undoubtedly a good one—I have nothing to say about that, for I do not know anything about it—who are engaged in surveying this river, as it is said, or exploring it, and it is now proposed, without our knowing anything more about it except that my friend from Massachusetts believes that the chief of the corps of Engineers and the Secretary of War think it would be a good thing, to furnish them with quartermaster's and commissary stores, which I believe—he will correct me if I am wrong—include pretty much all that a man may want except gunpowder and ordnance, and we have given all that away just now to another expedition. Now, it does seem to me that, while to be sure it is a small matter, it is legislating rather loosely.

I appeal to my friend from Massachusetts if he does not think that the taxpayers of the country will be a little averse to having private parties sent out for exploring expeditions of any of the rivers of Massachusetts, and then call on the War Department, by act of Congress, to furnish quartermaster's stores, which include all transportation and commissary stores, which include all food, to carry on the expedition. I think we ought to hesitate a little before we go into such a movement. To be sure it is a picayune matter, but the people who pay taxes have to pay them in small sums and in large ones, and every drop that is taken out of the Treasury somebody has got to pay for. But, as I said, I turn it over to my friend from Ohio who knows whether we can afford it.

Mr. SHERMAN. This is a foray on the commissary department, and therefore does not fall within my province. I have no doubt the supplies furnished to this party will cost about six times as much as they would in Massachusetts. I have heard within the last year of two of corn costing ten dollars a bushel at the head of Colorado river above the rapids. I have no doubt it will cost eight or ten times as much as corn in Ohio. I do not know anything about this matter; but there is one fact of which I wish to remind Senators. The Government of the United States explored the whole western country for a Pacific railroad route. The publication of the Pacific railroad reports, if I am correctly informed, cost between one and two million dollars; perhaps more. They were of no practical service whatever in the building of the railroad. It so happens that the railroads are now being built on lines not explored by that survey. The road that is being built along the valley of the Platte and then through the Cheyenne Pass goes over a line that was not surveyed at all. All these surveys are got up either for the purpose of furnishing jobs or of scientific display, and their reports are generally of very little practical value. I shall not vote for any bill of this kind. The eastern division of the Pacific railroad, as it is called, is now engaged in exploring its route under a very competent man, General Palmer, from Santa Fé or Albuquerque, westward. These surveys cannot be of any service to it because it is now engaged in the actual work of exploring and surveying its route which crosses the Colorado river.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Mr. President, I have some information in regard to this matter, not very extensive it is true, but I will give to the Senate such as I have.

Professor Powell spent the last year in explorations in the country beyond Colorado. He is a scientific man of eminence, and is making surveys in a part of the country where the Government itself has been intending to make explorations. I have understood that the War Department designed organizing last year a company to explore the very region of country where Professor Powell was. He proposes this year to survey the Colorado river. The Colorado river, as laid down upon our maps, for some six or seven hundred miles has never been seen by a civilized man.

Mr. SHERMAN. It was run recently, during the last fall, I believe, by three men to escape the Indians, and one of them got through alive.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The whole distance?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; to the Great Cañon.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I was not aware of it. Is that authenticated?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; the man lives. He went in at one end and came through at the other.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It has been laid down on all our maps for several hundred miles hypothetically, without any actual knowledge of where the river was. This gentleman with a private party, at considerable expense, spent the last year in surveying where none of the Government parties have been.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In what Territory?

Mr. TRUMBULL. West of Colorado.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What territory?

Mr. TRUMBULL. It would be perhaps embraced in New Mexico. Last year he received some assistance from the commissary or quartermaster's department, or perhaps both, receiving from them some supplies, but paying for them what they cost. I understood General Sherman, who favored this expedition and indorsed it, as also does the War Department, was anxious to assist, so far as he could, this year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Have you any official report from the War Department?

Mr. TRUMBULL. Yes, sir; this comes from the War Department, with the sanction of the War Department.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not know whether it is on the files or not. I presume the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs has a communication from the War Department in reference to it. I know the fact that the Secretary of War has desired and intended to organize a party at the Government expense to make this very exploration which is now being made by scientific men without any expense to the Government except such assistance as they having supplies in that country may be able to furnish. The difficulty, as Senators will see at once, of a private party in that country taking along the necessary provisions would be very great. Professor Powell does not ask any guard or any protection from the Government. His knowledge of the Indians and his acquaintance with that country is such, and the strength of his party such that he is willing to take care of himself; but he wants the opportunity to apply to some of our posts there which may be nearest to him to obtain supplies.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How small is his party?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am not sure, but I think about twenty. It is a saving to the Government. It is a matter that the Government probably would itself undertake, as I understand the Secretary of War has had it in contemplation for some time. This is a gentleman who was there last year and had the benefit, as I was informed, of obtaining supplies from our military posts on paying what they cost. I should be satisfied with that this year; but it would be a great convenience, and perhaps an absolute necessity, that he should be permitted to draw supplies from these posts in order to make the exploration.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Under whose auspices does he do this?

Mr. TRUMBULL. He is a professor connected with the Normal University of the State of Illinois, and the State has appropriated several thousand dollars in aid of this exploration as a scientific matter; I do not remember the precise sum.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He is a geologist, is he not?

Mr. TRUMBULL. Yes, sir; he is in connection with that institution, and it is under the auspices of the State that he has been out there. All that he wants is to have the assistance of the Government to this extent; he does not ask any guard or protection of that kind; and it will be obtaining information, scientific information, which the Government ought to have in regard to its territory, in regard to this great river, and it will be obtaining it cheaper than in any other way we can get it. He has the indorsement of the scientific men of the country. That is the extent, I believe, of his application.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then, as I understand, this gentleman is not paying his expenses out of his own pocket, but he is employed by the university of the State of Illinois.

Mr. TRUMBULL. He has some position there.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He is a salaried professor in that institution.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I cannot say whether he is or is not a salaried professor in that institution.

Mr. CONNESS. He is.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think the appropriation made by the State is only some three or five thousand dollars. I am not sure as to the amount, but it would not anything like pay the expenses incident to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Well, Mr. President, of course, as everybody says, this is a very small matter, and, as to-day seems to be a dull day, it is the best time to pass through all the small matters we have on hand. It seems, from the exposition of my friend from Illinois, that this expedition, now supposed to be in some terra incognita out there, trying to find the course of the Colorado river, is a geological one, acting under the auspices of a university in the State of Illinois, the State having also aided it, with a view to the interests of science. All that is very well; it is commendable; it is praiseworthy. I for one am glad to know that the State of Illinois is not only able but willing to send expeditions of that kind. They are useful to the country. But the question after all is, whether what you might almost call this back-door way of organizing expeditions for this Government and its people to pay the taxes for, if they are small, is quite right?

My friend says that last year the only application that was made, and that was granted, was to obtain supplies from the Army posts, paying the cost for them. Now, it is proposed this year that the Secretary of War shall place at the disposal of the expedition quartermaster's stores and commissary stores to the extent that may be necessary to enable the expedition to prosecute its work, and that work is the exploration of the river Colorado; and my friend tells us, and truly, I dare say, that there are five or six hundred miles of that river that are as dubious as the sources of the Nile used to be; that they are laid down by imagination on the map. Here are five or six hundred miles of survey to be done by this party, it is now proposed, practically at the expense of the United States. That is the long and the short of it. If the United States wish to explore that river—and my friend says they do, but that, I take it, would be for Congress to determine—we have plenty of Army officers to do it, so that it would cost us no more than this will cost. All that we should have to supply them with, as we pay them, would be commissary and quartermaster's stores. I confess I do not like the principle of it. It is altogether probable that these rations and things that are supplied will not cost us over $25,000; but that, to a State as small and as poor as the one I come from, is of some consequence; and if we do not stop somewhere in making these small appropriations the aggregate of our civil list, if we can call it such, will be a great deal swollen in the end.

This is all I have to say. Of course I sympathize with the object of the expedition; but I do not think the United States ought to pay for it.

Mr. CONNESS. Mr. President, the importance of this expedition and of the results of it is very great.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is it expected that the river will be proved to be navigable beyond the cañon?

Mr. CONNESS. No, sir; I do not think that will be demonstrated at all. I think there is a sufficient knowledge of it now to know that it is not a navigable river to its source, and that there are many hundred miles of it not navigable; but it is nevertheless important to ascertain and determine the course of the river, and not only that but to determine the country adjacent to it. The State of Illinois, in encouraging the prosecution of this work, is entitled to very great credit. It is under the direction of one of the best men in the nation.

It was stated by the honorable Senator from Ohio, when up, that General Palmer had made a reconnaissance in connection with what is called the eastern division of the Pacific railway route. So he has, sir; but not of this country. He crossed the country from Albuquerque to the Colorado river. He was not in this region at all. But it is very essential to their further operations that they ascertain as much as they can of this region that is now being explored under the direction and by the personal superintendence of Professor Powell. I had some conversation recently with General Palmer on the subject, and he furnished me with an article contributed to a magazine, giving an account of what is known of the Colorado river, of the upper part of it, and also an account of the progress of the three men spoken of through a portion of the cañon of the river. Now, what is asked for is not extensive at all. Such quartermaster's and commissary's stores as this party will require will be some flour and pork and probably a few mules; nothing beyond that. The whole expenditure under the direction of this expedition would probably not exceed a few thousand dollars, and it would be a contribution to knowledge which the whole country is interested in obtaining.

I know it is difficult for gentlemen who live in the East to understand or sufficiently estimate the extent of the West, and the extent of that West belonging to their own country which is not yet understood. It is only twenty-five years since Colonel, now General Fremont was authorized to explore what is at this day as well understood as the city of Washington, but was then unknown to this country. Now portions of it may be said to be teeming with population, industry, and civilization, and it is the result in part of the explorations that he made, and that were made at that period of time. Certainly, sir, we should not be too economical, too close, when work of this kind is to be done, and will be done so well. If the Government should organize an expedition to make the exploration in which Professor Powell is engaged it would probably cost $100,000 before it were done, while in all human probability the expenditures to be made under this resolution, if it shall pass, will not reach more than a few thousand dollars.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, if this resolution passes, it seems to me there should be some amendment made in it limiting the amount of these supplies to be furnished.

Mr. CONNESS. You would give them as much as they wanted if they had any at all, would you not?

Mr. HOWE. The commissary department and the quartermaster's department make their estimates every year for what they want for the supply of those branches of the service.

Mr. CONNESS. Will the Senator allow me to read the proviso which covers that:

Provided, That such issue is not detrimental to the interests of the military service.

Mr. HOWE. The military service cannot be damaged by the amount of supplies furnished. The military service would be taken care of all the same. The only effect would be that there would be a deficiency bill when we get together in December next, and what the amount of that deficiency bill would be would depend upon the character of this exploration. If the exploration is really conducted in the interests of science, pure science, probably the supplies would not be very heavy, and the deficiency therefore would not be very great. But this river, I understand, runs through a territory supposed to be rich in mines and not very much explored, and if enterprising mining companies should take it into their heads that this was a good opportunity to employ Professor Powell to make surveys in their interest, undoubtedly Professor Powell, having instructions to the quartermasters and commissaries to furnish him all the transportation he wanted, and all the subsistence he wanted, could conduct such examinations to great advantage, so far as the companies were concerned. I think he could do it more cheaply than anybody else, probably.

You see that this little resolution, no bigger than a grain of mustard seed apparently to look at, is, after all, an unlimited appropriation of commissary and quartermaster's stores. It is that in effect. That it would be so used of course I cannot know. That it would not be so used nobody can know who does not know thoroughly the character of Professor Powell. There can be no sort of objection to limiting the amount of this appropriation, I take it; and those who know what the character of the survey is, what the particular purpose to which it is directed is, can best suggest the amount that is wanted. I do not know, and therefore I cannot offer an amendment; but I certainly should not be willing to vote for the resolution as it stands.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I have before me now communications which will explain very fully this whole transaction if Senators will pay attention. First is a communication from Professor Powell himself stating what this expedition is, and addressed to General Grant:

ILLINOIS NATIONAL HISTORY SOCIETY.
NORMAL, ILLINOIS, April 2, 1868.

GENERAL: A party of naturalists, under the auspices of the State Normal University of Illinois, wish to make a scientific survey of the Colorado river of the West. This work is to be a continuation of work done last year in north, middle, and south parks. It is hoped that a survey of that river can be made from its source to the point where the survey made by Lieutenant Ives was stopped.

In addition to the general scientific survey a topographical survey of the region visited will be made. The services of two civil engineers have been secured for this purpose.

I most respectfully request that the proper officers be instructed to issue rations to this party while thus engaged, the party to consist of not more than twenty-five persons.

I need not urge upon your attention the importance of the general scientific survey to the increase of knowledge. It is believed that the grand cañon of the Colorado will give the best geological section on the continent.

Nor is it necessary to plead the value to the War Department of a topographical survey of that wonderful region, inhabited as it is by powerful tribes of Indians, that will doubtless become hostile as the prospector and the pioneer encroach upon their hunting grounds.

You will also observe that the aid asked of the Government is trivial in comparison with what such expeditions have usually cost it. The usual appropriation for such an exploration has been many thousands of dollars.

I transmit herewith a copy of my "preliminary report" to the Board of Education of the State of Illinois on last year's work.

Invoking your favorable consideration of this request, I am, with great respect, your obedient servant,

J. W. POWELL,
Secretary Illinois National History Society.

General U. S. GRANT, Commanding U. S. Army.

General Grant's indorsement is upon it to this effect:

I respectfully recommend that rations be ordered to be issued to Major Powell and his party of twenty-five men by Army commissaries whereon he may call for them while engaged in the exploration of the Colorado river of the West. The work is one of national interest.
U. S. GRANT,
General.

The action of the Commissary General is this:

OFFICE COMMISSARY GENERAL SUBSISTENCE,

April 6, 1868.

Respectfully returned to the Secretary of War, with the remark that it is believed that "rations" cannot be "issued" to the party as requested without the sanction of law, as its members are not the employees of or in the service of the United States. It is respectfully suggested that the only facilities for their subsistence they, the party, can properly be accorded from the Army subsistence stores is the authority to purchase at the total cost to the United States, at the points of purchase, such subsistence stores as the party may require when they can, in the judgment of the commanding officer, be spared without detriment to the full and proper subsistence of the troops. If this is not deemed satisfactory to the principal of the party it is respectfully suggested that he should obtain the enactment of a law according him such other aid as he may seek.
A. B. EATON,
Commissary General of Subsistence.

Then follows a letter of Professor Henry:

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION, April 21, 1868.

MY DEAR SIR: Permit me to introduce to your acquaintance the bearer of this note, Professor Powell, of the University of Illinois, and to commend his petition to your favorable consideration. He has organized a company of young men to explore the region of the Colorado of the West and desires some assistance from Government in the way of transportation and subsistence.

The expedition is purely one of science and has no relation to personal or pecuniary interests, but is intended to develop the geology, the natural history, topography, and physical geography of one of the most interesting regions of our continent.

Though the object of the exploration is the advance of science, its results will be of much practical value. The professor intends to give special attention to the hydrology of the mountain system in its relation to agriculture.

The vapor from the Pacific ocean, which would otherwise fertilize the interior of the continent, is stopped on its passage east by the mountains, thus depriving the soil of an essential ingredient of productivity; but this vapor, in the form of water, may again be reclaimed for the uses of the husbandman by a judicious system of irrigation, founded on a critical knowledge of the hydrology and topography of the country.

The expedition of Professor Powell has the entire approval of the Smithsonian Institution, and will be furnished by it with instructions and such facilities as its means will afford in the way of outfit.

The cost of the assistance which he asks from Government is nothing in comparison with the importance of the knowledge which we may reasonably expect will be obtained.

I am, with much respect, very truly, your friend and servant,
JOSEPH HENRY.
Hon. J. A. GARFIELD, House of Representatives.

These communications show the object of the expedition and what its character is. I rose merely for the purpose of reading them to the Senate that they might see the character of the expedition. It is indorsed by General Grant, who recommended that the rations be supplied as asked, but it seems the Commissary General thought it could not be done without some resolution of Congress. That is what has led to the introduction of this joint resolution.

Mr. CONNESS. Mr. President, I am very glad that the Senator from Illinois has presented these documents, and I am very glad to find that the Senator is in favor of this appropriation for the West. I take it that hereafter he will be in favor of every such appropriation of public means, when knowledge is to be contributed as the result, particularly if the investigation is placed under the direction of a distinguished citizen of Illinois.

I hope that we shall not discuss it longer, but allow this small amount of public supplies to be given for this great use. It is steps of this kind that bring that great country forward, that bring the populous regions of the West and the capital with the West in connection with the great unknown West and make them one. I but express the hope now, in conclusion, that my friend from Illinois will remember that there are many such expeditions organized and conducted by able, honest, enterprising men who are not residents of his great State, and I hope hereafter to have his aid on such occasions.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Mr. President, I should certainly be disposed to aid persons engaged in the pursuit of scientific knowledge that is of practical benefit to the country where it can reasonably be done; but I hope the Senator from California will not consider me as committed to the improvement of all the rivers and harbors and creeks, because an unexplored region of the West is a matter which may properly engage the attention of the Government in this small way, and it is a very small way. The fact seems to be made by the Senator from Vermont an objection that it is undertaken by private parties, by the assistance of the State of Illinois. He thinks we might organize a Government expedition of engineers and officers for ourselves.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I said if the expedition were necessary to the Government.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We have organized many such expeditions by the Government. As the Senator from Ohio said sometime ago, they have cost us a great deal of money. Now, when other parties have undertaken them, I see no reason why the Government of the United States should say "We will not aid you at all," and insist upon doing the whole work itself at a much larger expense. It seems to me that it is the duty of this Government to foster every expedition of this kind. I do not suppose any application would have been made for any assistance at all but for the peculiar character of this expedition. The Senator from Vermont knows that it would be very difficult if not impossible to carry on this expedition by a private party unless that party could apply to our military posts stationed near them, from time to time, for such assistance as might be necessary. No private citizen can have established depots of provisions all through that country from which he can draw. It is an unexplored region. He wants the privilege of applying at the nearest posts which may be most convenient for such aid in the way of provisions as may be necessary for this small party. That is the extent of the matter. I do not suppose it will cost $5,000. I have not the least idea it will cost that much.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, the great question with me is where the process of economy that we have been preaching about so long is going to begin. If a large grant is proposed of money or land, or whatever it may be, if you undertake to oppose it you are overawed by the majesty of the undertaking, and you find yourself at once in a hopeless minority in attempting to suspend any large expenditure. If a small application is made for a draft on the Treasury, then you are almost laughed at for descending to so low a business as undertaking to stop expenditures. And so it really becomes a matter of some curiosity with me to know when and on what bills and under what circumstances it is that we are really, as a matter of fact, to say, "We will not expend the money proposed." We have failed to begin yet. All parties for the last year have been crying through the country economy, retrenchment, diminution of expenses, in order to reach a diminution of taxes which are the burdens that bear heavily on the labor and industry of the country. But when we come to put the thing in practice it so happens that there is never a bill to which we find that it ought to be applied in that particular case. It is always some other bill, some abstraction that may come up hereafter that we are to be economical about.

My motive in raising the question about this proposition was, more than anything else, to see if there was a conceivable case in which the Senate would be willing to say, "We feel at liberty to reduce this little drain upon the Treasury." Now what does this turn out to be? As is stated in the communication of Professor Henry and Professor Powell, whom I respect and admire as much as my friend from Illinois does—that is not what I am combating by any means—the Colorado river was explored at Government expense about 1851, I think, by Lieutenant Ives, who began at its mouth and prosecuted his explorations as far as a small boat could be got to go, until he came to the cañons; and he gives us in his book, which was printed and distributed at the expense of Congress—I remember as if it were yesterday almost, now that it comes back to recollection—a picture of what might be called the tip-end, the jumping-off place, where his explorations of the Colorado river stopped; a gorge in the mountains that was scarcely wide enough to drive a wagon into, if there had been a floor at the bottom instead of a roaring torrent, where his explorations ended perforce. He had gone as far up the Colorado as it seemed to be useful to the interests of man or of Government that anybody should go.

Now, it is proposed to begin at its mountain springs and follow it down to that point, which, in a geological sense, which in the interests of natural history and geology, is a very good thing to do. There is no mistake about that; and I should be very glad, if it were not for the Indians and the poorness of the rations, to be one of the party myself. But the question is, whether this is not one of those instances in which we can justly and fairly at this present moment save this $5,000, if it be $5,000, or $10,000, if it be $10,000, or whatever the sum may be, without doing injustice to anybody.

It is not claimed that we are under any obligation to do this. The Colorado will be there five years hence, when taxation is reduced and when the quantity of money in our Treasury, I hope, will be largely increased. The cañons will be there, the geology will be there, and it can be done then, if need be.

But, sir, I do not know that it is of any use to object to this measure. There is one thing very noticeable about it, however. Professor Powell, with that accuracy and modesty which almost always characterize learned men and true men, merely applies to the War Department for rations for twenty-five men, which is a trifling thing. Of course you can see that and know what it is. That is the whole of his application, rations for twenty-five men while engaged in making this survey. General Grant thinks that is a trifling matter, which can be furnished, and he recommended it. It turns out, however, in point of law, that it cannot be furnished unless he pays cost price. Then, what kind of a bill do we get here? We get a bill which says that the War Department is authorized and directed to, furnish to the expedition, without limit as to the number of men, all the quartermaster's stores and commissary stores, which include a great deal more than the rations, that may be necessary for the expedition to prosecute its work. Out of a very small, modest, and, I should be almost inclined myself to say, a proper application for that which they cannot very well get anywhere else—twenty-five rations—there grows up a bill from the House of Representatives to put the whole commissary and quartermaster's department, without limit of any kind as to the number of persons who are to receive its benefits, or as to the benefits to be conferred, at the disposal of this expedition, and there is no explanation of that given.

My friend from California says it is not "directed." My friend is too old a legislator as well as lawyer not to know that an authority of this kind conferred upon a Department is equivalent to a command. It is useless to refine upon the distinction here between authority and direction when you are telling a Department how it may or shall do a particular thing.

I have occupied more time, Mr. President, than I desired. I do not know but that the Senate has cost the United States more in talking about this bill than it would to have given the rations, but I thought it fit to say, once for all, that I want to see the time come when on some bill or other the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Finance and all the rest of us who represent tax-paying constituents will be willing to say, "Here is something that can be dispensed with for the time being," however appropriate or necessary it may be in and of itself.

Mr. CONNESS. Why, Mr. President, that is said every day, and said very often in a most damaging condition to the public service.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Give an instance.

Mr. CONNESS. I will give the honorable Senator an instance: the appropriations for the Indian service in the Territory of Arizona. There has been a war with the Indians for many years at an expense of millions of dollars annually. There are, I think, four regiments there now, and have been, but they are so reduced that unless they are more sufficiently provided, the war now suppressed will break out again with redoubled force. The superintendent of Indian affairs in that Territory is here now in this city. He is a gentleman of character and integrity; he is a relative of General Grant. I know him personally, and know him to be what I state, and he comes here to state facts that he knows. At an annual salary of $2,000 in greenbacks he gets the agreeable service of traveling through the entirety of that extensive Territory managing Indian affairs.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The law does not compel that.

Mr. CONNESS. His duty compels him, and that is the highest form of compulsion to an honest man. He has organized Indian laborers to the extent of seventeen hundred, and planted corn to the extent of four thousand acres, and Congress, just as his work is beginning, in the frame of economy without intelligently investigating and ascertaining the facts, cuts off the appropriation. Now, while it is a virtue to be economical, and we all know it or ought to know it, it is not a virtue in Government, nor is it wise to strike at every public appropriation. There ought to be a limit to that as well as to expenditure.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It is a little difficult for me to see on what principle this measure can be justified. This is not an expedition authorized by the Government, or over which the Government has any control, or to which it can give the slightest direction. I submit that it is a very novel proceeding that the Government shall be called upon to support an expedition over which it has no control, and in whose researches it cannot by any possibility have the slightest interest except in that general way which would result from any enterprise tending to develop the country. We have methods by which what is here contemplated may properly be done under the sanction of the Government; and under such circumstances that the Government would have some voice in it, and give some direction to it.

I submit for that reason that we ought to hesitate before passing this measure; but that is not the point to which I rose to say a word. It is in regard to the unlimited character of this resolution. The Secretary of War is authorized and empowered to issue indefinitely commissary stores for this expedition, and in addition quartermaster's stores to an unlimited amount. Who can tell what it is to be? The expedition is for the survey of the Colorado river. How extensive? The whole river as far as I know, a thousand miles, more or less; and there is not the slightest limitation; all the resources of the Government put at the command of this expedition. It is not even limited to the discretion of the quartermaster's or commissary department or the War Department. "As may be necessary to enable the expedition to prosecute its work." Under whose direction? Under Professor Powell's direction, not under the quartermaster's department or commissary department or the War Department, but as much of the commissary stores and quartermaster's stores of this Government as, in the judgment of Professor Powell, over which the Government has not the slightest control, as may be deemed to be necessary. How much that may be nobody here sees, and nobody can know, of course. How well defined the expedition is I do not know, and I have not heard it stated. Any one can see that if the expedition is to expand to the extent of exploring that entire river on a grand scale with a view of giving information of that river, then I concede that your quartermaster's stores and commissary stores will be called upon to a very great amount. What will it cost? I have heard no estimate, but the supplies in that region of country must be very expensive. It costs, I believe, some ten dollars a bushel to furnish corn on the frontiers where we fight the Indians. Nobody can tell to what extent this goes. I should say, if this resolution passes, instead of a deficiency bill for $12,000,000, as we had at the commencement of this session, you will have at the commencement of the next session a very much larger deficiency bill for commissary and quartermaster's supplies.

Mr. WILSON. I move to amend the resolution by striking out the words "such commissary and quartermaster's stores to" and inserting "rations for twenty-five men of;" and in lines six and seven by striking out the words "as may be necessary to enable the expedition to prosecute its work" and inserting "while engaged in that work;" so that it will read:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to issue rations for twenty-five men of the expedition engaged in the exploration of the river Colorado, under direction of Professor Powell, while engaged in that work: Provided, That such issue is not detrimental to the interests of the military service.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time. It was read the third time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 25, nays 7; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Cole, Conkling, Conness, Corbett, Cragin, Davis, Dixon, Doollittle, Drake, Fowler, Harlan, Morrill of Vermont, Patterson of Tennessee, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Stewart, Thayer, Trumbull, Wade, Willey, Wilson, and Yates—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Ferry, Fessenden, McCreery, Morgan, Morrill of Maine, Sherman, and Sprague—7.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Buckalew, Cameron, Cattell, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Howe, Johnson, Morton, Norton, Nye, Patterson of New Hampshire, Saulsbury, Sumner, Tipton, Van Winkle, Vickers, and Williams—22.

So the joint resolution was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLINTON LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 1117) to supply partial deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending on the 30th of June, 1868, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

MONUMENT TO GENERAL SEDGWICK.

Mr. WILSON. I move to take up Senate joint resolution No. 129, donating certain captured ordnance for the completion of a monument to the memory of the late Major General John Sedgwick.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It requires the Secretary of War to place in charge of Major General H. G. Wright, Major General Frank Wheaton, Major General George W. Getty, and Major General Truman Seymour, three bronze cannon, captured by the sixth Army corps in battle, for the construction of a statue of the late Major General John Sedgwick, to be placed on a monument erected to his memory by the sixth corps of the Army of the Potomac.

Mr. WILSON. I hope nobody will oppose this resolution. It proposes simply to donate three cannon for this purpose.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN M. PALMER.

On motion of Mr. WILLEY, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 218) for the relief of John M. Palmer, the pending question being on the amendment reported by the Committee on Claims, to add as an additional section:

SEC. 2. And be it further resolved, That the chief quartermaster of the military department of the Cumberland, in addition to the contract price of ninety cents for each coffin manufactured by the said John M. Palmer, under his contract aforesaid, of the date of the 27th of August, 1866, cause to be paid out of any money under his control unto the said John M. Palmer the further sum of $12,716 30 for manufacturing and delivering said coffins: Provided, That the said John M. Palmer shall, in conformity with the provisions of his contract aforesaid, well and truly manufacture and deliver all the coffins which he is thereby still required to manufacture and deliver.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, when this joint resolution was under consideration before I intended to call attention to two or three things in regard to it which are not, of course, as fresh in my mind at this moment as they were then. I have been looking for a memorandum which I made at the time the report was read; but I do not lay my hand on it. I content myself, therefore, with making a general remark or two. I have no doubt of the merits personally of the claimant, for they have been avouched by Senators who are acquainted with him. The objection which occurs to me is entirely separate from any question relating to this particular man; but I venture to say that the principle upon which the three items—for I believe there are three entering into this claim—are to be allowed is a principle which would beggar this or any other nation. I undertake to say that claims for damages and compensation which would dizzy all arithmetic can be found and will come out of this war which will fall strictly within any principle upon which this bill can be defended. Let me see if I am right in one thing, and I beg the honorable Senator from West Virginia to set me right if I fall into an error. Here is a proposition to give to this man extra compensation for digging post-holes across a ridge or a hill upon the ground that it turned out to be more slanting than he thought it was; the ground was harder, but especially it was more slanting and very difficult to stand on when these holes were being dug. I ask the Senator if I am not right in that.

Mr. WILLEY. The Senator is certainly not right in regard to the merits of that part of the claim.

Mr. CONKLING. I beg pardon; I did not intend to cover anything by my remark but that one thing. I pick that out now and specify it as one of the ingredients, one of the elements entering into this claim; and I should like to ask the lawyers who pay any attention to this matter for the principle upon which such a benefaction, such a compensation, such a rendition as that (whatever it may be called), can be justified for one moment. Here is a man who makes a contract with an individual or with the Government to build a fence along a certain line, to dig post-holes, or set posts over a hill, and he goes on and does precisely what he bargained to do; and he then comes to the other party to the contract and says: "In the first place this ground was harder than I thought it was; a crow-bar was not as easily put into it as I thought it would be; the spade did not go in as easily as I thought it would. But in the next place, when I came to dig these holes I was much more inconvenienced by the slant of the ground than I expected to be, and therefore I ask you to pay me extra for doing this service." Is there any court of law; is there any court of equity; is there any tribunal under heaven where justice is administered in which such a claim as that would stand for one moment? Just look at it in its relations to other things which may be said, which will be said, and should be said, if this principle is to be established. It may be that here is a man of unusual energy; a man of unusual merit. The honorable Senator in front of me [Mr. SHERMAN] indorsed him as such the other day; but that does not affect the principle. Instances make order. It is an old maxim. Precedents are very weighty, especially in proceedings of this sort; and unless this man has a case which in and of itself can stand, and stand in such a forum as this, we have no right, sitting here as trustees, as directors in a corporation, if I may so say, to vote to pay trust money for any such thing.

Now, Mr. President, if it were worth while—and I think I meant the other day to do it—I could relate some cases falling within my own observation which I think would put in a very striking light the inconsistency in which we involve ourselves. I know a man whose case occurs to me at this moment who received a contract from the Government during the war which he did not seek, I believe, to make and deliver certain wares specified in the contract, a sample being furnished to him. He took his sample. He made his wares. He delivered them. In the meantime a commission was convened here; by precisely what authority I do not know; which commission, without giving any notice to him, reduced, I believe, about fifty per cent. the price to be paid on this contract for these articles. In the meantime he had altered his machinery and made considerable outlay for the purpose of fulfilling this contract. He went on and fulfilled it and delivered the commodity, and tells me (and I have no doubt of the truth of the statement, because he is a man I have known all my life, an honest man) that he has actually lost about twenty thousand dollars; that the actual cost of production and of laying down the commodity where he was directed to put it amounts to $20,000 more than he received according to this reduced price. There is no remedy so far for that man nor for the class of men to whom he belonged. He was a contractor, and because he was a contractor, in company with almost all other contractors, a sort of stigma is fixed upon him, going with the name of contractor; and up to this time, as far as he knows and as far as I know, there is no remedy for him, nor for a great many other men who were substantially treated in the same way.

But here is the case of a man who received every farthing—I speak still of the particular part of the resolution which I am talking about—which it was bargained he should receive. Nothing in the world has occurred known to any principle of law or equity to absolve him from his contract; and the proposition is now to add arbitrarily a certain gross sum to what it was agreed he should have, and what he did in truth have, for doing precisely that and nothing else, which he bargained to do.

Well, sir, there are other parts of this resolution. Another part relates to compensation to be paid him in spite of his default upon a contract to make coffins, I think. That brings to every lawyer's mind the hardship of the law; the law in both countries; the law under which a sailor ships for a voyage and he sickens and dies before the voyage is performed, but there is no quantum meruit for him; there is nothing in the world for his representatives except to be turned out of court with the statement that the contract was an entirety; he has failed to perform it, and there is no remedy for him; and in England to this day there never has been an exception to this rule. Even the case of servants in London was never an exception to it, because they recovered a quantum meruit, if they did not serve the entire period for which they bargained, only by the custom of London; local there. So that in the whole British realm this was the law always, and is the law now. It is the law in this country, in every State, except so far as the courts have been able to make war upon it in excepted cases growing out of special facts.

Now, here is a man who makes a contract which is to be executed by running a saw-mill. His saw-mill takes fire and burns up. Agreed, it is a great misfortune. It belongs to that catalogue the length of which no man can measure, of misfortunes in consequence of which men fall short in the performance of their contracts. But thereupon the default is to be disregarded, and this claimant is to be paid the amount which it was bargained to pay him for all that he did deliver in fact, and then in addition, as I understand it, to be relieved from all forfeitures besides; and then, in the third place, looking to the future, a price is to be added to the contract price, and he is to go on and fulfill the contract under this added price. That was excused the other day as a matter of fact upon some computation that the coffins were needed and that it would be cheaper to bargain with him than to make a contract de novo with a new man. If that be so it is to be treated as an independent proposition standing in that way. That is the amendment on which we have just voted. It is a bare matter of fact, a mere matter of calculation as to that. If this man cannot execute his contract, and cannot be made or should not be made to execute the residue of his contract, and if as to that residue it is cheaper to contract with him at the figure stated in the resolution than with another person it is perfectly defensible as an original proposition for that reason.

But how are these other two elements of this resolution to be defended? I do not see. It may be that in my statement of it I have fallen into some error of detail, as I commenced by saying it is rather out of my mind, as I relied upon a memorandum, and did not intend to carry it in my memory, and that memorandum has passed out of my drawer in the mean time, but in general terms the proposition is as I state it; and I repeat, I believe it to be in defiance of the precedents and the principles upon which we have legislated heretofore in these cases; and I believe it to be so broad and loose a foundation that if adopted now, upon the heels of this war, it will lead to claims which, I repeat, would beggar any nation. I have talked myself with a man who told me he happened to hear Mr. Monroe say that the damages arising from the war of 1812 were greater than the cost of the war itself. A bill was passed, it will be remembered, after the war, which continued in force, I believe, but a single year, and which let in such a flood of claims of all sorts, restricted and carefully guarded as Senators will see that bill was, as terrified the whole nation, and it was repealed and abandoned.

Now, here is a proposition, not, to be sure, for a general act, but to take up a case certainly conspicuous for the length to which it goes, and establish a precedent which it seems to me would bring in almost anything, unless it be such a bill as was postponed the other day after being considered, in which it was proposed to pay some man for trampling down his grass, and for scarring his fruit trees, and for drilling on his land, which made it so hard that it was very difficult to plow it up, and the computation was that he was to receive the price of the land as if upon purchase for that. Perhaps it would not go so far as to embrace a case of that sort, but it goes an immense distance, so far that I feel the Senate will forgive me for calling attention briefly, and perhaps not in a very instructive manner, to the nature of the bill.

Mr. WILLEY. Mr. President, I do not attempt to deny that there is much force in the general remarks of the Senator from New York, and the suggestions he makes ought to inspire us with a reasonable degree of discretion, and ought to require us to examine these claims, when they are made, with care. But, sir, this claim, like every honest claim, must stand upon its own individual merits. The scope of the remarks and the reasoning of the Senator from New York would exclude all claims whatsoever. If they are to apply, we shall be troubled with none of them. If no claims are to be entertained by Congress but such as are strictly legal claims, and such as, if the Government could be sued as a party, might be enforced in a court of law or a court of equity, we shall have very few claims presented to us. As I remarked the other day, it is not pretended that this claimant has any legal claim against the Government or a claim in the nature of a legal claim; it is not contended that he has such a claim as, if the Government could be sued, he could enforce it in a court of law; but he comes and addresses the Senate upon his claim on the broad principles of equity and justice.

Now, sir, inasmuch as the Senator from New York propounded a question to me which I answered, I hope he will pardon me for propounding a question to him which I trust he will answer. It is this: suppose I, as a contractor with the Senator from New York, had undertaken, upon certain specified terms reduced to writing, to erect him a mansion in which to live, and in the prosecution of my contract I had been so unfortunate as that the enemies of the country and my enemies had by fire destroyed the means upon which I relied to construct it, and that in making the contract I had been honestly mistaken upon his representations as to the expense it would require to build that house, and when it was done, and he had moved into it, and found that it answered his purpose, upon counting the cost and settling for the cost of the construction, he found from the figures and the facts, utterly undeniable, that he was secure in his home, with his family protected from the weather and the storm, at his ease and enjoying his comfort, with a mansion around him that had beggared me, and turned my wife and children out upon the charities of the world, perhaps for support, enjoying a mansion that had cost me three times, nay, by comparison with the evidence in this record four times as much as I contracted to build it for, would he, as an honest man, sit down quietly and sleep in that mansion until he had made some compensation to me for erecting it? Upon the broad principles of justice between man and man, upon those principles upon which we shall like to stand when we have to give an account of our actions finally to the great Judge of us all, would he feel himself authorized to dwell in that mansion erected for his benefit at one third of the price which it actually cost? I am sure he would not. I will not ask an answer. His own sense of equity would give the answer. He would not allow himself to abide by the letter of the law. He would not repeat the old test and demand of me the pound of flesh because it was so nominated in the bond. He would not feel easy, he would not feel honest until he had at least made some fair compensation for the consideration which he received at my hands.

Now, sir, as a great and magnanimous and just and generous Government, how should we demean ourselves? We have received here, according to the evidence, honest consideration. The contract which we made with this man has been honestly fulfilled. It is in evidence that he is a high-minded and honorable man; that he has striven with all his ability and with all his means to fulfill the contract made on his part; that he has been economical, according to the testimony; that he has not been wasteful; that he has acted with all possible discretion and with all possible fidelity to the Government; and yet it turns out according to the incontrovertible evidence in this record, according to the assertion of every officer with whom he had to do from General Thomas down to the quartermasters and officers immediately in charge of the work, he has incurred expenses three times greater than the amount which he received from the Government in the performance of his contract. Sir, it is not like a contract entered into in the ordinary way. Here were the contractors on both sides, the officers upon the part of the Government and the contractor himself, away from the places where the work was to be done, making certain representations to him of the character of the work and of the character of the country, for instance, where these cemeteries were to be erected. Acting upon a general knowledge of affairs, without any particular description before him, he undertook to build the fences around these cemeteries according to certain specifications at a certain price.

Now, sir, the House of Representatives have settled, so far as this resolution is concerned, that whole question. They have sent to us a joint resolution allowing him extra pay to the amount of some seven thousand dollars for the erection of these works around the cemeteries; but they declined to make any additional compensation for the coffins. Now, let us look at the facts. The evidence, I think, in this record will justify any man in saying that the House, in making the additional allowance, which they do make, fall very far short of compensating him entirely for the cost of the erection of these works; but they allow a certain sum in addition to that which he contracted to build them for.

The second question in this resolution to which the honorable Senator refers is as to what are called stoppages. By the contract Mr. Palmer was to make fifty-two thousand coffins at the specified price of ninety cents per coffin. It turns out that a great many more than fifty-two thousand will be required. By the terms of the contract, unless these coffins are delivered at a certain time and at a certain place, the quartermaster, or the officer in charge of the work, has a right to deduct from even this limited price of ninety cents per coffin a certain percentum called stoppages. Mr. Palmer went on and made about forty thousand coffins. Many of them were not delivered in time, and for failure to deliver and fulfill the stipulations of the contract within the time specified stoppages were held back out of his limited pay to the amount of about fifteen thousand dollars. The second provision of this resolution is to allow these stoppages to be paid; that is to say, that he shall be allowed the full sum of ninety cents per coffin for all that he has made. It would be an unconscionable hardship upon him if the Government of the United States should not only hold him to his contract to make these coffins at ninety cents, but for failure to deliver some of them in time should withhold payment, even to the amount of nearly one half, to the amount of $15,000. The resolution provides that these stoppages shall be paid, that that part of the contract shall be annulled; and that the officers of the Government shall be authorized and directed to pay him to the full extent of ninety cents per coffin.

But the amendment reported by the Committee on Claims of the Senate proposes to pay him an additional amount of $12,716 30. It seems that he has still, in completion of his contract, to make from seventeen to twenty thousand coffins in addition to those which he has already made. Now, what are the facts shown? That upon his failure to deliver coffins at Vicksburg and Memphis the Government went on to construct coffins itself by its own officers, and the evidence is, from the officers themselves who had these coffins made, that at Memphis it cost the Government two dollars each coffin, and that at Vicksburg it cost $2 50 when the Government constructed these coffins itself. Part of these coffins were constructed also of old lumber already owned by the Government, and yet it cost at Memphis two dollars per coffin to make them.

What will be the result unless this additional allowance is made? To say nothing of the equity of the case; to say nothing of the obligation resting upon a just Government to make due compensation to its citizens for services actually rendered; to say nothing of the inadequacy of the price of ninety cents per coffin for those already constructed, what will be the result? Why, sir, it is made known to the committee, and it is a fact which will not be controverted, that unless this additional compensation is made to Mr. Palmer, he will have to throw up his contract; he will be obliged to go down under its weight and to be a ruined man; and the consequence will be that the Government will have to make the additional coffins by its own officers and out of its own means. The committee considered that it would be an advantage even in dollars and cents on the part of the Government if they should make this additional allowance, because unless they do Mr. Palmer will have to throw up his contract and the Government will have to make the coffins itself and they will cost it from two dollars to two dollars and fifty cents per coffin, and this additional cost on the seventeen or twenty thousand coffins yet to be made and delivered will be more, or at least as much as the additional compensation which this resolution proposes to give Mr. Palmer, provided he shall fulfill his contract.

Upon the question, therefore, of economy, looking nothing to the equity of the case, nothing to the obligation of the Government to do justice to its citizens, looking to the interests of the Government in a pecuniary point of view, it will make money, perhaps, by passing the resolution as it is, and I trust it will be the pleasure of the Senate to make this allowance to this man. I am aware of the dangerous character of things that will be presented to us from the sources indicated by the Senator from New York; but then it will only devolve upon the Senate the necessity of looking strictly into each claim. It will not do, Mr. President, by these general kind of rules to sweep away and drive from our doors all memorialists. We must look at the claims and examine them when they come. The remarks of the Senator from New York are relevant to enforce scrutiny and rigid examination into every claim that comes, but certainly ought not to be extended so far as to operate to the rejection of all claims upon general principles.

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to answer the question, the answer to which the honorable Senator waived. He put to me the case of building a house for me upon a contract which turned out to be losing and hard to him, and then by way of inquiry he said, "Would the Senator, as an honest man, live in that house and leave the contractor to his loss?" As I understand, Mr. President, the party to such a contract would not be called upon, in the character of an honest man, to decide any such question as the Senator proposes. He could not, in the character of an honest man, be called upon to decide that, because the question would address itself, not at all to his integrity, but to his generosity, his liberality, his humanity. And there, Mr. President, is the gulf which can never be properly passed dividing us in the character in which we sit here from an individual disposing of his own money.

Now, by way of reversing that illustration, let me inquire of the Senator how he proposes to treat all the cases of men contracting to cast cannon and to do other large services to the Government whose contracts, owing to the fluctuation and the fall of gold, among other things, turned out to be twice as good as they should have been or as they were intended to be? Does he propose to have those men refund to the Government the extraordinary profits that they made? Not at all. Why? Because the law governing contracts estops him and puts an end to any such proceeding.

But, Mr. President, this I conceive to be the true rule in these cases: not what is generous; not what a man might be moved to do with his own money taken out of his own pocket; but what is it proper for us to do, sitting here as trustees, as directors of a corporation—for that is all the Government of the United States is, for the sake of this illustration—a great corporation, the board of directors of which consists of the two Houses of Congress. It happens, in our organism, that this corporation is too great to be sued. Its supremacy, its sovereignty—to use the favorite word in this connection—exempts it from liability to be sued. What does that render necessary in ethics and in law? That there should be some process of answering to demands which will level this distinction, which will remove out of the pathway of claimants the injustice which they would suffer if the Government were really unapproachable. Very well. How far do we go before we meet the requirement of this exigency? I beg to tell the Senator precisely how far; and it is a rule which can never be mistaken. We go far enough when we subject the Government of the United States to all the liabilities, legal and equitable, which would devolve upon an individual, subject as he is to being called into the courts. What is the province, I should like to know, of Congress passing private bills except to see to it honestly that the claimant loses nothing by the fact that his claim is against a party whom he cannot make defendant in a bill in equity or in an action at law. When we have done that; when we have subjected the trust funds which we administer to every liability which could be imposed upon them were they private trust funds, then I inquire again upon what principle it is, short of an arbitrary and blameable discretion, that we go further?

The Senator says that the remarks which I made before show the propriety of scrutinizing these cases individually. I submit to him with great respect and with great confidence, because I know his candor and the fairness with which he has treated this, as he treats all other matters that he has in charge, that that is not the point and the strength of this argument, that we are to sit here trusting to our industry and our penetration in each particular case to spell out of an arbitrary matter its merits as a mere question of morality or generosity; but that, on the contrary, we are to adopt the more simple, the more uniform, the more approved process of seeing, when a case presents itself to us, whether it falls within or without the general principles upon which we act, whether it is included or shut out by the lines of demarkation dividing those claims which we have a right to allow from those claims which, however much they may excite our compassion or our sympathy, we have no right to allow. That, I submit, is the true rule; and if we are to sit auditing each particular account or claim, ungoverned by any principle except the great principles of good-heartedness, whatever they may be, we undertake an administration utterly hopeless, utterly endless, utterly impossible; and at the same time we adopt a rule certain, if in nothing else, to work great injustice; because then it must depend upon the mood and temper of the Senate; it must depend on how far, at the time, the Senate is in haste; as somebody has said, it would depend very much upon whether the question were raised before or after dinner; very much upon whether some Senators to whom I might refer were engaged at that time in pointing to the clock and anxious to refresh themselves upon more nourishing provender than that which is found in the Senate; so that that would be very uncertain.

Now, Mr. President, to conclude, I submit to the honorable Senator this other proposition: if a man has a claim upon him, or if he has no claim upon him, he has a right to put his hand in his pocket, in his generosity, and lend or give just what he pleases; but when he is acting as trustee, which I conceive to be our precise character here in its highest estate, voting away money not his own, determining a question which he has no right to have any feeling about, which he has no right to regard as a question arising between a friend of his and some one that is not his friend, but to be determined entirely by the considerations which determine its belonging or its not belonging to the class of claims which in a court of law or a court of equity, as the case may be, would be respected—I submit to him that, sitting here in that character, he has nothing to do in this case except to determine whether in the abstract it and all other such claims could be defended or not. That is the question. If it could not be, if this man had made this contract with a bank, and if any court of law or any court of equity would turn him out of court, saying this is a case of hardship, just such hardships as you can see a thousand of in Walnut street or State street or Wall street every day in the week, where a man is reduced from affluence to beggary, depending on whether he takes one view or the other of the up or down in the market—if, I say, a court of equity would turn him out, saying that, then we have no right to pay this claim. Certainly we have no right to pay it unless I am wrong in supposing that we, as the representatives of the Government of the United States, do our whole duty when we reduce the Government to the precise footing of an individual amenable to all the processes of law; and really I think I cannot be mistaken in that. If I am right in that, then the Senator must admit that this joint resolution is wholly indefensible.

Mr. President, it is a small matter in a certain sense. In these times of large sums we come to regard such things as this as small. It involves, I think, something more than $35,000. We know what it is. If it were to stop with this one case, it might be treated as a matter small enough to be made exceptional if any distinction could be drawn. But I look upon it as one of a class, a sample of contracts of which the country is full, and amounting to a sum which it would be difficult to overstate. I have only to say that if it is to be allowed, if one, at least, of the elements of this resolution be sanctioned, I do not know who is not to be paid, or upon what claim, so long as it is founded in sincerity and anything that looks like hardship, a man cannot recover under the precedent which we shall set.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time. It was read the third time.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the passage of the resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 22, nays 7; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Cole, Corbett, Cragin, Fowler, Harlan, Howe, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Patterson of Tennessee, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Thayer, Tipton, Trumbull, Wade, and Wiley—22.
NAYS—Messrs. Conkling, Dixon, Ferry, Fessenden, McGreevy, Morgan, and Wilson—7.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Buckalew, Cameron, Cattell, Conness, Davis, Doolittle, Drake, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Johnson, Morton, Norton, Nye, Patterson of New Hampshire, Saulsbury, Sumner, Van Winkle, Vickers, Williams, and Yates—25.

So the joint resolution was passed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 1117) to supply partial deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending on the 30th June, 1868, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, transmitting a report from the Secretary of State, with accompanying documents, in relation to recent events in the empire of Japan; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORT ON MINERAL RESOURCES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the report of J. Ross Browne on the mineral resources of the States and Territories west of the Rocky mountains.

Mr. STEWART. We shall probably desire to print some extra numbers of that report.

Mr. COLE. I was going to offer a resolution on that subject. With the permission of the Senator, I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That fifteen thousand copies of the report of J. Ross Browne, on the mineral resources of the States and Territories west of the Rocky mountains, be printed for the use of the Senate.

I suppose the resolution goes to the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It goes to the Committee on Printing under the rule.

Mr. RAMSEY. Then I hope that the resolution I offered the other day may also go to the Committee on Printing for publication along with that report, to be bound in the same volume, of James W. Taylor's report on the gold regions east of the Rocky mountains.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is that resolution on the table?

Mr. RAMSEY. No, sir. I move it anew. It was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining at the instance of the Senator from California [Mr. CONNESS] the other day. It will be lost there. I move that the same number of copies of the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, inclosing the report of James W. Taylor upon gold and silver mines and mining east of the Rocky mountains, be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. COLE. I should like to inquire if the report of Mr. Taylor has been published by the other House?

Mr. RAMSEY. It is there, I think.

Mr. COLE. The report of Mr. Browne, I understand, has been published, and has been stereotyped, and the only expense will be the paper and press work.

Mr. RAMSEY. I understand that Mr. Taylor's report has been published by the House.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Both ought to be published.

Mr. COLE. I have no objection to both going to the committee.

Mr. RAMSEY. Then you accept that as a modification of your resolution?

Mr. COLE. Let it go as a separate resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on referring the resolution of the Senator from Minnesota, also, to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. CONKLING. It must be referred by law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It goes to the Committee on Printing, as a matter of course.

Mr. WILSON. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, May 25, 1868.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOXTON.

The Journal of Saturday last was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. This being Monday, the first business in order is the call of the States and Territories for bills and joint resolutions for reference to their appropriate committees, not to be brought back into the House by a motion to reconsider, commencing with the State of Maine.

COLORADO TROOPS.

Mr. PHELPS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1105) for the reorganization of the United States colored troops, their instruction and colonization; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

BARK CARLOTA.

Mr. KERR introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1106) to authorize the registration of the bark Carlota as an American vessel; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

JACOB ATLEE.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1107) for the relief of Jacob Atlee; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

CONSTRUCTION OF PENSION LAWS.

Mr. PAINE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1108) to construe an act entitled "An act supplementary to several acts relating to pensions," approved June 6, 1866; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

CHARLES MAY, OF WISCONSIN.

Mr. PAINE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1109) for the relief of Charles May, of Milwaukee, in the State of Wisconsin; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

CREEK INDIANS.

Mr. WINDOM introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1110) to carry out certain treaty stipulations with the Creek tribe of Indians; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

MRS. CHRISTINA DICKEY.

Mr. KOONTZ introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1111) granting a pension to Mrs. Christina Dickey; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

WASHINGTON BENEVOLENT LIFE ASSOCIATION.

Mr. KOONTZ also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1112) to incorporate the Washington Benevolent Life Association; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

POST ROUTE IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. HIGBY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1113) to establish a post route in the State of California; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

NEW MEXICO.

Mr. JULIAN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1114) to provide for annexing certain territory to the Territory of New Mexico; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Territories.

SAMUEL HYER, OF MISSOURI.

Mr. PILE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1115) for the relief of Samuel Hyer, of Rolla, Missouri; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

NATIONALIZATION OF STEAMSHIPS.

Mr. PILE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1116) authorizing the nationalization of certain steamships; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

COMMERCIAL COMMISSIONER.

Mr. PILE also introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 274) authorizing the appointment of a commercial commissioner; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

"THIS IS A WHITE MAN'S GOVERNMENT."

Mr. CHANLER. I introduce the following preamble and resolutions declaring that this is a white man's Government, and that the right of suffrage absolutely and exclusively belongs to the white race:

Whereas it is the sacred duty of every people to preserve its posterity free from evil influences, bad government, and demoralization, by a wise foresight and a firm maintenance of established principles of truth, justice, and liberty; and whereas, from motives of self-preservation during the late civil war between the States of this Union, it became the policy of the Administration to array the black race against the white by putting arms in the hands of the slaves and by promising them freedom and the right to vote: Therefore,

Resolved, That now we deem it the duty of Congress to declare: that the original, absolute, and exclusive dominion in and over these United States and the Territories thereof is lodged in and of right belongs to the people in the respective States of this Union, and is derived by descent from their European ancestors, the original discoverers of this continent, by subsequent conquest, by long-established law, and by the customs of a liberal civilization.

Resolved, That all inhabitants of any State or Territory of the United States, other than the people aforesaid, who may now or hereafter exercise the right of suffrage, do so on sufferance under the franchise granted by the white race, who may lawfully hereafter, for good cause shown, at any time revoke the privilege or privileges so granted to the mixed races of African or Asiatic descent.

Resolved, That the Committee of Elections be, and hereby is, authorized to bring in a bill embodying the principle that this is a white man's Government, as established by the Constitution, and limiting the right of representation to the white race.

Mr. UPSON. I object; that is a House resolution.

Mr. CHANLER. I introduce it as a joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. The last resolution is not a joint resolution.

Mr. CHANLER. I withdraw the last resolution.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 275) was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The call of the States and Territories for bills and joint resolutions having been concluded,

The SPEAKER next proceeded to call the States and Territories in their inverse order for resolutions, commencing with the State of Pennsylvania, where the call was arrested at the expiration of the morning hour on the 18th of May.

NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. RANDALL submitted the following resolution, upon which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That the Comptroller of the Currency be requested to furnish to this House a statement of the amount of dividends declared by the national banking associations since their organization under the present national banking act; the amount credited to the real estate account distinct from the capital expended therefor; the amount credited to the surplus account; the amount of their undivided profits and all losses, each respectively per annum. If such information be not in his possession, he is further directed to take prompt measures to procure and transmit the same to this House.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was agreed to.

MILITARY TRIALS, ETC.

Mr. SITGREAVES. I offer the following preamble and resolution, upon which I demand the previous question:

Whereas by an act of Congress, approved March 2, 1867, it was enacted, "That all acts, proclamations, and orders of the President of the United States, or acts done by his authority or approval, after the 4th of March, A. D. 1861, and before the 1st day of July, A. D. 1866, respecting martial law, military trials by courts-martial or military commissions, or the arrest, imprisonment, and trial of persons charged with participation in the late rebellion against the United States, as aiders or abettors thereof, or guilty of any disloyal practices in aid thereof, or of any violation of the laws or usages of war, or of affording aid and comfort to rebels against the authority of the United States, and all proceedings and acts done or had by courts-martial or military commissions, or arrest or imprisonment made in the premises by any person by the authority of the orders and proclamations of the President, made as aforesaid, or in aid thereof, are hereby approved in all respects, legalized and made valid, to the same extent and with the same effect as if said orders and proclamations had been issued and made, and said arrests, imprisonments, proceedings, and acts had been done under the previous express authority and direction of the Congress of the United States, and in pursuance of a law thereof previously enacted and expressly authorizing and directing the same to be done: And no civil court of the United States, or of any State, or of the District of Columbia, or of any district or Territory of the United States, shall have or take jurisdiction of, or in any manner reverse any of the proceedings had or acts done as aforesaid; nor shall any person be held to answer in any of said courts for any act done or omitted to be done in pursuance of or in aid of any of said proclamations or orders, or by authority or with the approval of the President, within the period aforesaid, and respecting any of the matters aforesaid; and all officers and other persons in the service of the United States, or who acted in aid thereof, acting in the premises, shall be held prima facie to have been authorized by the President, and all acts and parts of acts heretofore passed inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed; and whereas it is alleged that citizens of the United States were arrested and imprisoned between the 4th day of March, A. D. 1861, and the 1st day of July, A. D. 1866, under the alleged authority of the aforesaid acts and proclamations and orders, and afterwards discharged without trial either in the civil or military courts; and whereas it is alleged that many citizens so arrested and imprisoned then were, and ever have been, loyal to the Constitution and the Union, and were unjustly arrested and imprisoned, but by reason of said discharge without trial and the aforesaid recited act they cannot establish their innocence, and their characters are tainted with the suspicion of treason; and whereas it is reasonable and just that for every wrong there should be a remedy provided by law: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reporting a joint resolution authorizing the appointment of commissioners or courts of inquiry duly authorized to inquire into and report the causes of said arrest and imprisonment of a citizen in every case where such citizen shall demand such inquiry by petition, verified by the oath or affirmation of the petitioner.

The question was put upon seconding the previous question, and there were only eighteen in the affirmative.

So the previous question was not seconded. Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I rise to debate the resolution.

Debate arising, the resolution went over.

DUELING IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. JENCKES. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs be instructed to inquire into the truth of the report that a duel has been fought in or near the District of Columbia in pursuance of a challenge or arrangement made within this District between a person in the diplomatic service of the United States and a secretary of one of the foreign legations, and, if they find such an offense has been committed, to report to this House whether a due respect for the laws of the United States does not require the House to take measures for the removal from office of the diplomatic officer and for the recall by his own Government of the secretary of the legation; and that for the purpose of this inquiry, the said committee are empowered to send for persons and papers.

Mr. BANKS. I have only to say that the Government has taken action on this subject, and has done all that can be done already. Therefore no inquiry is necessary.

Mr. JENCKES. Then let the committee so report.

The resolution was agreed to.

JAMES H. BIRCH.

The SPEAKER. The next business in order during the morning hour of to-day is the consideration of resolutions lying over, under the rule, in consequence of debate arising thereon, the first of which is a resolution offered on the 9th of March by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. McCORMICK.] The Clerk will report the resolution.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolved, That there be paid to James H. Birch, of the State of Missouri, out of the contingent fund of the House, $2,500, in full for time spent and expenses incurred in prosecuting his claim to a seat in this House.

The question was upon adopting the resolution.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Has that resolution the recommendation of the Committee of Elections?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it was offered individually by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. McCORMICK. I have no objection to the reference of the resolution to the Committee of Elections; and I make that motion.

The resolution was accordingly referred to the Committee of Elections.

COMPENSATION OF COMMITTEE CLERKS.

The next resolution lying over, under the rule, was as follows:

Resolved, That the resolution of the House passed March the 3d instant, in the following words:

Resolved, That the clerks to the committees in the House of Representatives shall receive the same additional compensation as the other employes of the House.

Shall be so construed as to increase the compensation of those committee clerks now receiving four dollars per day twenty per cent.; and the Clerk of the House of Representatives is hereby authorized to pay them at the rate of $4.80 per day during the sessions of the Fortieth Congress.

The question was upon agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. It will be recollected that I opposed this addition of twenty per cent. to the compensation of other employes, but the House passed it. I think it would be manifest injustice to make any discrimination between the different employes of the House. I think the resolution should be passed, and upon it I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The States will be again called for resolutions, as on the last call many of them were not reached.

TRIBUTE TO ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

Mr. VAN TRUMP submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be, and the same are hereby, instructed to report to this House at as early a day as may be convenient: First. The number of copies heretofore printed of what is known as "Tributes of the Nations to Abraham Lincoln," in relation to his assassination and the attempted assassination of William H. Seward, Secretary of State, and Frederick W. Seward, Assistant Secretary, under and by virtue of the authority of a joint resolution of the Senate and House of Representatives, passed March 2, 1867. Second. The number of copies of said work bound in full morocco and full gilt; the number bound in morocco, marbled edge, and the number of copies in any other style of binding or unbound. Third. The cost per copy of those bound in full morocco and in full gilt; the cost per copy of those bound in half morocco, marbled edge; and the cost per copy of those in any other style of binding or unbound. Fourth. The cost of engraving and of steel or copper-plate printing of the entire edition of said work. Fifth. The number of copies distributed in the United States and the number sent abroad. Sixth. The entire aggregate cost of the whole edition of said work, including transportation and all other costs and charges.

The question was upon agreeing to the resolution; and being taken, upon a division there were—ayes 31, noes 47; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. VAN TRUMP and Mr. PERHAM were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes thirty, noes not counted.

Mr. VAN TRUMP. I call for the yeas and nays upon adopting the resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. VAN TRUMP. Upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and upon a division there were—ayes 21, noes 69.

So (one fifth voting in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 71, nays 33, not voting 85; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Beaman, Benton, Blaine, Blair, Boyer, Bromwell, Cate, Churchill, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Eliot, Ferriss, Ferry, Fields, Garfield, Gravely, Higby, Hopkins, Chester D. Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jenekes, Julian, Ladin, William Lawrence, Loan, Loughridge, Mallory, Marvin, Maynard, McCarthy, McClurg, Mercer, Myers, Newcomb, Nunn, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Pike, Plants, Polsey, Raum, Robertson, Sawyer, Seefeld, Smith, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Stokes, Taffe, Taylor, John Trimble, Trowbridge, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, William B. Washburn, and Windom—71.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Allison, Ames, Baker, Brooks, Burr, Cary, Eldridge, Getz, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Grover, Harding, Johnson, Jones, Kelsey, Kerr, Knott, Kootz, George V. Lawrence, Lynch, McCormick, Morgan, Pike, Pruyn, Randall, Ross, Sitgreaves, Taber, Lawrence S. Trimble, Van Trump, Ward, and Elihu B. Washburne—33.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Archer, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Bailey, Barnes, Barnum, Beatty, Beck, Ben- jamin, Bingham, Boutwell, Broomall, Buckland, Butler, Chanler, Cook, Cornell, Cowdy, Culum, Dawes, Eckley, Eggleston, Elia, Farnsworth, Finney, Fox, Griswold, Haight, Halsey, Hawkins, Hill, Holman, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richmond D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Judd, Kelley, Ketchum, Kitchen, Lincoln, Logan, Marshall, McCullough, Miller, Moore, Moorhead, Morrell, Morrissey, Mullins, Mungen, Niblack, Nicholson, Peters, Phelps, Pile, Pomeroy, Price, Robinson, Schenck, Selye, Shanks, Shellabarger, Spalding, Twichell, Van Aernam, Van Auker, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Henry D. Washburn, Welker, Thomas Williams, William Williams, James F. Wilson, John T. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Wood, Woodbridge, and Woodward—35.

So the resolution was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. HAMLIN, one of its Clerks, notifying the House that that body had passed a joint resolution (S. R. No. 134) authorizing the change of mail service between Fort Abercrombie and Helena, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

PAYMENT OF FIVE-TWENTY BONDS.

Mr. CARY submitted the following preamble and resolution, on which he demanded the previous question:

Whereas the national honor requires the payment of the public indebtedness in the utmost good faith to all creditors at home and abroad not only according to the letter, but the spirit of the law under which it was contracted:

Resolved, That neither the letter nor the spirit of the laws under which the five-twenty bonds were issued require the payment of the principal in coin, and it will be in the utmost good faith to the holders thereof, both at home and abroad, to pay them in the same money with which the Government paid the soldiers who fought the battles of the war, and with which it settles the claims of widows and orphans of our fallen heroes, the same that laborers are required to receive as wages and that which is legal tender for the payment of all debts, public and private, except customs duties and interest on the public debt.

The previous question was not seconded.

Mr. VAN HORN, of New York, moved that the preamble and resolution be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. CARY demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ROSS moved that the preamble and resolution be laid on the table, and demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 7, nays 92, not voting 90; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Baldwin, Beaman, Blair, Dixon, Jenekes, Mallory, and William B. Washburn—7.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Ames, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baker, Banks, Benton, Blaine, Boyer, Bromwell, Brooks, Burr, Cate, Cary, Churchill, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Dodge, Driggs, Elia, Eldridge, Eliot, Ferriss, Ferry, Fields, Garfield, Getz, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Grover, Harding, Higby, Hopkins, Chester D. Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jones, Julian, Kerr, Knott, Kootz, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Loughridge, Lynch, Marshall, Marvin, McCarthy, McClurg, McCormick, Mercer, Morgan, Myers, Newcomb, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Pike, Pile, Plants, Polsey, Pruyn, Randall, Raum, Ross, Sawyer, Seefeld, Sitgreaves, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Stokes, Taber, Taffe, John Trimble, Lawrence S. Trimble, Trowbridge, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Van Trump, Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, William Williams, and Windom—92.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Allison, Archer, Arnell, Axtell, Bailey, Barnes, Barnum, Beatty, Beck, Benjamin, Bingham, Boutwell, Broomall, Buckland, Butler, Chanler, Cook, Cornell, Covode, Cullom, Dawes, Donnelly, Eckley, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Finney, Fox, Griswold, Haight, Halsey, Hawkins, Hill, Holman, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahe W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Judd, Kelley, Kelsey, Ketcham, Kitchen, Lincoln, Logan, Maynard, McCullough, Miller, Moore, Moorhead, Morrell, Morrissey, Mullins, Mungen, Niblack, Nicholson, Nunn, Peters, Phelps, Poland, Pomeroy, Price, Robertson, Robinson, Schenck, Selye, Shanks, Shellabarger, Smith, Spalding, Thaddeus Stevens, Stewart, Stone, Taylor, Thomas, Twichell, Van Aernam, Van Auker, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Henry D. Washburn, Welker, Thomas Williams, James F. Wilson, John T. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Wood, Woodward, and Woodward—90.

So the preamble and resolution were not laid on the table.

The question next recurred on referring the preamble and resolution to the Committee of Ways and Means; and being taken, it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 74, nays 27, not voting 88; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ames, Arnell, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Beaman, Benton, Blaine, Blair, Boutwell, Brownell, Cake, Churchill, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Dixon, Ela, Eliot, Ferriss, Ferry, Fields, Garfield, Harding, Hooper, Hopkins, Chester D. Hubbard, Jenckes, Julian, Kelsey, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, Loan, Loughridge, Lynch, Mallory, Marvin, Maynard, McCarthy, McClurg, McCormick, Mercier, Myers, Newcomb, Nunn, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Pike, Pile, Plants, Poland, Poirley, Pruyn, Raum, Robertson, Sawyer, Scofield, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Stokes, Taffe, Taylor, John Trimble, Twombledge, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, William Williams, Windom, and Woodbridge—74.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Baker, Boyer, Brooks, Cary, Chanler, Cobb, Eldridge, Getz, Glossbrenner, Goldaday, Gravely, Grover, Hunter, Ingersoll, Johnson, Jones, Knott, William Lawrence, Marshall, Morgan, Randall, Ross, Sitgreaves, Taber, Lawrence S. Trimble, and Van Trump—27.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Allison, Anderson, Archer, Delos R. Ashley, Axtell, Bailey, Barnes, Barnum, Beatty, Beck, Benjamin, Bingham, Broomall, Buckland, Burr, Butler, Coburn, Cook, Cornell, Covode, Cullom, Dawes, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Eckley, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Finney, Fox, Griswold, Haight, Halsey, Hawkins, Higby, Hill, Holman, Hotchkiss, Asahe W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Judd, Kelley, Kerr, Ketcham, Kitchen, Koontz, Lincoln, Logan, McCullough, Miller, Moore, Moorhead, Morrell, Morrissey, Mullins, Mungen, Niblack, Nicholson, Peters, Phelps, Pomeroy, Price, Robinson, Schenck, Selye, Shanks, Shellabarger, Smith, Spalding, Thaddeus Stevens, Stewart, Stone, Thomas, Twichell, Van Aernam, Van Auker, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Henry D. Washburn, Welker, Thomas Williams, James F. Wilson, John T. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Wood, and Woodward—88.

So the preamble and resolution were referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CIVIL SERVICE.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Rhode Island, [Mr. JENCKES,] some days since, made a report in regard to the civil service which the Chair supposed was ordered to be printed, but no memorandum has been made of such an order. If there is no objection the report will be ordered to be printed.

No objection being made it was ordered accordingly.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Indefinite leave of absence was granted to Mr. FARNSWORTH on account of sickness.

REMOVAL OF DISABILITIES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a resolution of the constitutional convention of Mississippi, asking that political disabilities may be removed from certain persons therein named; which was referred to the Committee on Reconstruction.

INDIAN PEACE COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following communication from the Secretary of the Interior:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
WASHINGTON, D. C., May 21, 1868.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 20th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to inform the House what, if any, extra compensation, allowances, or emoluments, either as mileage, commutation, or expenses, or in any other form, have been allowed to civil and military officers who were authorized by the act of Congress approved July 20, 1867, to act as a commission to establish peace with certain hostile Indian tribes, or to clerks in their employ who were at the same time receiving a fixed salary as clerks in any executive department.

In response to the foregoing resolution I have respectfully to state that the appropriation referred to was by act of Congress placed under the control of the commission, and I am informed has been disbursed and accounted for by their bonded agent, General J. B. Sanborn, to the proper Auditor of the Treasury without supervision of the Department.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

O. H. BROWNING,
Secretary.

Hon. SCHUYLER COLFAX,

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

On motion of Mr. WARD, the communication was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ELECTION CONTEST—DELANO VS. MORGAN.

Mr. SCOFIELD, from the Committee of Elections, submitted a report in the case of Columbus Delano, contesting the seat of G. W. Morgan from the thirteenth congressional district of Ohio; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

The report concludes with the following resolutions:

Resolved, That GEORGE W. MORGAN is not entitled to a seat in the Fortieth Congress from the thirteenth congressional district of Ohio.

Resolved, That COLUMBUS DELANO is entitled to a seat in the Fortieth Congress from the thirteenth congressional district of Ohio.

Mr. KERR. I present a minority report in the same case, and ask that it be printed with the report of the majority.

The report of the minority was also laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I propose to call up the report soon after it is printed.

SALE OF THE STONEWALL.

Mr. BANKS. I ask unanimous consent to present for immediate action a joint resolution (H. R. No. 276) relative to the sale of the war vessel Stonewall.

The joint resolution was read a first and second time. It authorizes the President to hold possession and control of the steam war vessel Stonewall, according to the laws and regulations of the naval service, until a time when in the President's opinion she can be restored to the Japanese Government without danger to the interests of the United States; provided that the expense incurred pursuant to this resolution shall be paid out of the Japanese treaty fund, to be reimbursed on or after the redelivery of the vessel to the Government of Japan.

Mr. BANKS. If the House will allow me, I will explain in one moment the facts in connection with this case. The Government of the United States, under the authority of the Navy Department, sold the steamer Stonewall to the Japanese Government. It was to be delivered here. It has been delivered to that Government, but is under the command, at the request of that Government, of an American officer with a Japanese crew. After it was delivered the rebellion occurred in Japan, both parties claiming possession of this steamer. The Americans in Japan believe that if either party has it in its possession, it being of great power, it will be used against the American citizens and American interests in Japan. The officer having command of it retains possession of the steamer. Both of the Japanese parties in the rebellion agree that the American Government shall retain possession of it. Both parties in Japan are satisfied that for the present, or until their difficulties are settled, the American Government shall retain possession of it. The State Department has given orders to that effect, but inasmuch as there is no authority for it under the law they ask that a resolution may be passed authorizing the Government to retain for the present possession of this steamer, the expense of retaining it being paid out of the Japanese indemnity fund by the agreement of all the parties.

Mr. BROOKS. Is it not rather hard on the Japanese to make them pay for the retention of the ship?

Mr. BANKS. They agree to it.

Mr. BROOKS. Both parties?

Mr. BANKS. Yes, sir.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I would like to know what the Japanese fund is?

Mr. BANKS. It is an indemnity fund agreed by the Japanese Government to be paid to the American Government for depredations upon our commerce. The expense of retaining possession of this vessel until July will be $4,000.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Is there a specific proviso that there shall be no expense to the United States in this matter?

Mr. BANKS. There is. Will the Clerk read the last proviso?

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That expenses incurred pursuant to this resolution shall be paid out of the Japanese treaty fund, to be reimbursed one year after the redelivery of the vessel to the Government of Japan.

Mr. PRUYN. I would like to make a suggestion to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. BANKS. I will hear it in a moment. The steamer was sold for $400,000. Three hundred thousand dollars have already been paid to the Government, and $100,000 lay over according to the terms of the treaty.

Mr. PRUYN. I would suggest to the gentleman that under the circumstances he ought to embody a brief statement in the resolution that this action is taken with the assent of the authorities of Japan; otherwise it might look like a high-handed assumption of power on our part.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I think this resolution ought to be considered a little further. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will give way, I will move to refer it to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, with leave to report it back at any time. I think a further provision is needed to provide against any possible expense being incurred to the United States.

Mr. BANKS. That is perfectly satisfactory to me.

The joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, with leave to report at any time.

Mr. BANKS moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BANKS. There is some correspondence on this subject which I desire to present, and I move that it be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

GOVERNMENT DEPOSITS ABROAD

Mr. HUNTER, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to inform this House what amount of money in gold is deposited by the Treasury or State Department with bankers or brokers, giving the names of each, in London or elsewhere outside the boundaries of the United States, stating also the amount of such deposits on the first day of each month since the year 1860, the rate of interest paid thereon, if any, and what rate of commission is charged for keeping the accounts and paying the drafts of the United States drawn against such deposits, and what disposition has been made of such interest.

Mr. BLAINE. I suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that in calling for that statement for every month from 1860 it will involve immense labor at the Treasury Department. If he will only call for it annually or semi-annually it will answer all the purpose.

Mr. HUNTER. I will modify the resolution by inserting semi-annually instead of on the first of each month.

The resolution, as modified, was agreed to.

NEW YORK POST OFFICE.

Mr. FERRY, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, reported back the memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of New York on the subject of the New York post office, and moved that it be recommitted to the committee, and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. GARFIELD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, presented a report upon the Union Pacific railroad, eastern division; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad; also, sundry papers, which were referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad without being printed.

PARTIAL DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I now ask unanimous consent of the House to take up and consider a bill to supply partial deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending on the 30th of June, 1868. I have the bill before me, and in it there are some items which are included in the general deficiency bill now before the Committee on Appropriations. There is, however, such an urgent necessity for the passage of these items that I have been directed by the committee to report them to the House in a separate bill. I ask unanimous consent of the House that the bill may be considered in the House at this time. If that consent is given, I will then make a full explanation of all the items. And then, if any good reason can be shown by any one why the bill should be postponed any longer, I will not object to a short postponement.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I will say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Brooks] that there is nothing about reconstruction in this bill.

Mr. BROOKS. Is there anything about impeachment in it?

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. There is nothing about impeachment in it. I ask that the bill be read.

Mr. BROOKS. Is the bill printed?

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. It is not. But there are only four or five items in the bill, and they can easily be understood from their reading.

The bill was read at length. It appropriates $12,960 to supply deficiencies for the compensation of the officers, clerks, messengers, and others receiving an annual salary in the service of the House of Representatives; $25,000 for folding documents, including mails; $10,000 for miscellaneous items; $1,800,000 to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for the expense of collecting the revenue from customs for the half year ending June 30, 1868; $60,000 to facilitate the payment of soldiers' bounties in accordance with the provisions of acts of July 28, 1866, and March 19, 1868, for salaries of fifty clerks of class one; and $5,000 to supply a deficiency in the office of the Paymaster General for blank books, stationery, binding, and other contingent expenses; total amount appropriated by the bill, $1,912,960.

Mr. BROOKS. I think a bill like this ought to be printed, so that the House may have an opportunity to consider it.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. If objection is made I shall have to move to suspend the rules.

Mr. BROOKS. This bill proposes to appropriate nearly two million dollars.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I understand that; but I have the papers here before me which will explain all those items.

Mr. BROOKS. That may be; but there are a hundred or a hundred and twenty members here who have not those papers.

Mr. MAYNARD. I would suggest to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Brooks] to first hear the explanation of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURNE.]

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. If the gentleman shall not be satisfied with the explanation I may make, but shall desire to have the bill postponed, printed, and made a special order for some day near at hand, I will not object to a short postponement.

Mr. BROOKS. Very well; I will hear the explanation, and reserve my right to object.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. If members have listened to the reading of the bill, they will have perceived that there are but few items in it. The first item to which I will call attention is one of $12,000 to pay the messengers and employes of the House, who were ordered to be retained in service by resolution of the House, of July, 1867. That is a debt which is due to the employes of the House. I ask the Clerk to read a letter from the Clerk of the House upon the subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

CLERK'S OFFICE,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
WASHINGTON, D. C., December 12, 1867.

SIR: There will be required to be appropriated to supply deficiencies in the appropriations "for compensation of the officers, clerks, messengers, and others, receiving an annual salary in the employ of the House of Representatives," for the present fiscal year, the following sums, namely, $12,960, this amount having been paid to the messengers and employes ordered to be retained in the recess by resolutions of the House of March 20 and July 9, 1867.

Under the joint resolution of March 30, 1867, the sum of $900 was paid, on or about the 10th of April, 1867, to Rev. C. B. Boynton, Chaplain of the House, which has exhausted the usual annual appropriation for this purpose; and it will be necessary to appropriate an additional $900, if an additional payment is to be made to the Chaplain, before the 30th of June next.

Very respectfully,

EDWARD McPHERSON,
Clerk of the House of Representatives, United States.
Hon. THADDEUS STEVENS, Chairman, &c.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Another item of the bill is for folding documents, $25,000. I ask the Clerk to read a letter from the Clerk of the House upon the subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

CLERK'S OFFICE,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
WASHINGTON, D. C., April 8, 1868.

SIR: I have the honor to report that the appropriation made for "folding documents" for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, has been exhausted, and that there will be required for this purpose, to meet accrued obligations and to continue the work from this date to the 30th of June next, the sum of $25,000. I may add that the folding done and to be done is much in excess of the ordinary amount.

I respectfully ask the attention of the committee to my letter of 12th of December last, a copy of which is enclosed, and request that the deficiency on the messenger account therein stated be supplied at the earliest convenient period.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

EDWARD McPHERSON,
Clerk of the House of Representatives, United States.
Hon. THADDEUS STEVENS, Chairman, &c.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. That amount is necessary to defray the expenses of sending out documents. I believe both political parties have their rooms in the Capitol, and are sending out a vast number of documents. The employes in the folding-room have been kept out of their money for some two months, as there is nothing to pay them.

Mr. BROOKS. Will the gentleman inform the House what has been the expense of the folding-room for this fiscal year?

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I cannot inform the gentleman of the exact expense. The last appropriation we made was for $50,000. The expense is very heavy, much more than I like to see it, and I should be glad to keep it down.

Mr. BROOKS. It is over seventy-five thousand dollars.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. The gentleman from New York may be more accurate than I am; but the facts are as I have stated.

Mr. BROOKS. We are entitled to information from the chairman or acting chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. This is for a deficiency for work already done, and the question is whether, when these people have done this work for us in sending off our speeches and documents, they shall be paid.

Mr. BROOKS. The theory of the gentleman has been, and it is a true one and I hope it will be maintained, that when an appropriation is exhausted the work ought to be stopped; and if speeches and documents ceased to be folded when the appropriation was exhausted then no money would be due.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I should be glad to adhere to that theory even though it should necessitate the not sending out the speeches of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BROOKS. I will pay for my own when other gentlemen are willing to pay for theirs.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. There is another item of $10,000 for miscellaneous items. It was not expected that such item was demanded, and we called the deputy clerk of the House for some explanation. We made an appropriation of ten or fifteen thousand dollars not a great while ago for these miscellaneous items. He said that at one fell swoop $10,000 were taken to pay contestants of seats upon this floor; that the fund is nearly exhausted, and that this appropriation will be required for the present fiscal year.

The next item, and I will call the attention of the gentleman from New York and other gentlemen to it, is to pay the salaries of clerks employed under the resolution of the House to facilitate the payment of soldiers' bounties under the act of 1866. It will be recollected that some months ago we passed a joint resolution to facilitate the payment of soldiers' bounties and authorizing the appointment of fifty clerks. Those clerks have been employed in conformity to the terms of the resolution, persons who had been in the military or naval service, and they have not had one dollar of pay. Some of them have been to see me, and they say that they have been obliged to sell their pay for a month at fifteen per cent. discount. I do not think when these men have been employed under existing law that they should compel them to raise money.

Mr. PILE. During the time the bill was pending in the House and in the Senate forty-seven temporary clerks were appointed, and they were intended to take the place of the fifty clerks authorized by the bill. They were selected mostly from civilian applicants, and when the bill passed requiring these fifty clerks to be appointed from applicants who had been in the military or naval service the Secretary of the Treasury appointed fifty additional clerks from soldier and sailor applicants, retaining the forty-seven temporary clerks. So instead of fifty there are now ninety-seven clerks nominally employed under the authority of the bill. I have the authority of the Second Auditor himself for this statement; and these clerks not only do not facilitate, but they embarrass the adjustment of these claims. I hope the committee will provide for the discharge of these temporary clerks.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. This appropriation is for the payment of clerks appointed under and by virtue of this law. What the gentleman states I have no knowledge of. If they have been appointed it has been under another authority, and they are paid out of another fund. It may be true, as the gentleman states, but it has no connection with this appropriation. This appropriation applies only to the clerks employed under the law I have alluded to. I ask the Clerk to read the letters I send up. It will be seen that we do not report in favor of $11,000 asked for, but only sufficient amount to pay these clerks' salaries.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 26, 1868.

SIR: I am informed by Hon. R. W. Taylor, First Comptroller of the Treasury, that the act entitled "An act to facilitate the payment of soldiers' bounties under act of 1866," passed by Congress and approved by the President, fails to make an appropriation for the expenses to be incurred by the employment of additional clerks and the procuring of proper rooms for the same, as directed in sections one and two of the said act.

It will be necessary that some action be taken in the matter as soon as possible, and for that reason I respectfully call the attention of the House to the subject.

I am, very respectfully, H. McCULLOCH,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. SCHUYLER COLFAX,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, May 16, 1868.

SIR: In answer to a communication received from Robert J. Stevens, secretary to your committee, dated 15th instant, asking for information of the amount needed to carry out the requirements of an act to facilitate the payment of soldiers' bounties under act of 1866, approved March 19, 1868, I reply, as the act referred to can only exist one year without further legislation, the expenses to be incurred under it will be for salaries of fifty clerks of class one at $1,200 per annum. $60,000; and for other necessary expenses of carrying said act into effect, as explained below, $11,600, making a total of $71,600:

Fifty desks at forty-five dollars.....	$2,250
Fuel and gas.....	700
Carpeting.....	2,000
Fitting up house, cases, &c.....	500
Rent.....	1,200
Fifty chairs.....	350
One messenger.....	1,000
Three laborers.....	2,160
Two watchmen, (night,).....	1,440
	$11,600

Very respectfully,

H. McCULLOCH,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. THADDEUS STEVENS, Chairman Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. It will be perceived that the committee have not reported any of those items, many of which they deemed extravagant, but only a sufficient amount to cover the salaries of those clerks who have been employed under existing law.

Now, sir, the last item on the list is a small amount of $5,000 for the contingent expenses of the paymaster's department. The work has been so great there that the appropriation has given out. I will read a letter from General Brice on this subject:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
PAYMASTER GENERAL'S OFFICE,
WASHINGTON, December 16, 1867.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a deficiency estimate of $5,000, indispensably necessary to meet the contingent expenses of this office during the remainder of the current fiscal year ending July 1, 1868.

In my estimate for contingencies for the current fiscal year, dated and transmitted September 6, 1866, I stated as necessary the sum of $15,000. That estimate was regarded a close one in view of the large additional expenses for stationery growing out of the adjustment and payment of claims for the additional bounty. Congress reduced the amount to $10,000, and now the fund is exhausted.

You will please ask that an appropriation of $5,000 be made at as early a date as practicable.

I am, General, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

B. W. BRICE,

Paymaster General,

General U. S. GRANT, Secretary of War ad interim.

I have a further note from General Brice, in which he says:

"I desired to ask them at the same time to put through the deficiency appropriation for contingent expenses of the Paymaster General's office ($5,000) for the current year. I am absolutely embarrassed for want of it. Will you please call attention to it."

Now, sir, the large amount of $1,800,000 is an item that I do not desire to press very hard upon the House. I desire that the House shall hear read from the Clerk's desk letters from the Secretary of the Treasury explaining in relation to that deficiency, which is a very large one. That deficiency exists, and he says he cannot carry on the Department unless the appropriation is made.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 6, 1868.

SIR: The appropriation for collecting the revenue from customs is, I am sorry to say, very nearly exhausted. On account of increased expenditures necessarily incurred both at the North and the South from causes too well known to require enumeration at this time, the standing appropriation for this object has proved inadequate. This condition of affairs was, during the last Congress, urged by myself as a motive for creating a distinct appropriation for the revenue-cutter service, at present provided for from the general appropriation now in question. The suggestion was favorably received, but the close of the session prevented final action upon it. A similar proposition applicable to the coming fiscal year has been lately submitted by me to the House, and if it meets a favorable response I hope to be able to administer the customs service, so relieved, within the limits of the existing appropriation, though it may be necessary to ask a permanent increase notwithstanding.

For the current year, however, ending June 30, 1868, I am reluctantly compelled to ask an additional appropriation of $1,800,000.

The balance now to the credit of the customs fund being hardly sufficient to meet the demands of the current month, permit me to invite early attention to the matter.

Very respectfully,

H. McCULLOCH,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. SCHUYLER COLFAX,
Speaker House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, April 20, 1868.

SIR: The appropriation for collecting the revenue from customs is so far reduced that the Department will be unable, in default of an additional appropriation, to meet the expenses of the current month. I beg therefore to call your attention to my request, sometime since communicated to the House, for an additional appropriation of $1,800,000 to meet deficiencies arising in the current fiscal year under that head.

Hoping that an early opportunity may offer to append it to some appropriate bill, I am, sir, very respectfully,

H. McCULLOCH,

Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. THADDEUS STEVENS, Chairman Committee Appropriations, House of Representatives.

Expenses of collecting revenue from customs for year ending June 30, 1868.

Standing appropriation, per joint resolution 3d May, 1866.....	$4,200,000
Fines, &c., storage, &c., fees—usually about $500,000—this year reaching about.....	600,000
By transfer from other appropriations in excess.....	1,200,000
	6,000,000

The expenses of the current month will more than exhaust the balance now on the books, and it is estimated that there will be required for the remainder of this year until the 30th June next.....

1,800,000

Total.....$7,800,000

This is the amount for the current year. It is somewhat greater than usual because there were a considerable number of debts outstanding at the beginning of the year which were paid from the amounts above specified.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. That embraces the whole explanation as it comes from the Secretary of the Treasury. I trust it is satisfactory to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BROOKS. This is an enormous expense for collecting revenue, $7,800,000, and the deficiency is enormous—$1,800,000. Now, I suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that the Committee of Ways and Means have the subject of the revision and change of the tariff before them, and, it seems to me, the question of the expense of collecting customs is more properly connected with that subject than with the subject of appropriations. I suggest, therefore, that this item be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, to be considered by them in connection with the revision of the tariff.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. This is a deficiency of an appropriation, and, if the gentleman has listened to the reading of the letters of the Secretary of the Treasury, he will see what the condition there is at the present time.

Mr. BROOKS. I think they can exist without this.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. If the gentleman insists, I do not wish to urge the bill through the House without a full consideration and understanding. If the gentleman from New York or any other gentleman says he is not prepared to act upon it, I will move to postpone the bill and make it the special order for to-morrow after the morning hour.

Mr. BLAINE. I desire to make a single suggestion. The gentleman from New York speaks of changing the law in reference to the mode of collecting the customs. Well, if that is to be done, it is a matter for the Committee of Ways and Means, of course. But this is an appropriation that is asked for an expense that has been incurred under existing law. And no matter what change you may make in the law for the future, it cannot alter the expenditure called for now by the Secretary of the Treasury. I hope the Committee of Ways and Means will change the law so as to insure greater economy, and certainly the Committee on Appropriations will second most heartily any such measure. But this is a provision that is necessary whether the law be changed or not.

Mr. BROOKS. I am satisfied, as a Representative of a commercial city with one of the largest custom-houses in the country, that the expenses of collecting the revenue are far beyond what they ought to be.

Mr. BLAINE. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. BROOKS. I am very loth to vote a deficiency of $1,800,000 upon the bare information we have before us here.

Mr. MAYNARD. Will the gentleman inform us whether the percentage on collections is as great or greater now than it was previous to the war, when we collected annually some sixty or seventy millions?

Mr. BROOKS. I have not looked into that.

Mr. BLAINE. I can answer the gentleman from Tennessee. The percentage is very much less; but I agree with the gentleman from New York, that the sum total is more than it ought to be. I presume the percentage is not more than one half or, perhaps, one third what it was.

Mr. BROOKS. I do not know how that is; but the expenses ought not to be so enormous.

Mr. BLAINE. I quite agree to that.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. As the gentleman from New York objects to the consideration of the bill at present, I move that it be made the special order for to-morrow after the morning hour, and that it be printed.

Mr. BROOKS. No man in twenty-four hours can possibly look into the subject.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Then I will say Wednesday.

Mr. SCHENCK. Before any special order is made for Wednesday I desire to notify the House that I propose upon that day to report back the tax bill, and to ask immediate or very early action upon it with a view to pressing it continually until the end.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman propose to ask action on the bill or consideration of it on the same day he reports it?

Mr. SCHENCK. Yes, if the House will consent to it.

The SPEAKER. If the bill is changed at all from the bill as originally reported it will have to be reprinted.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. The gentleman from New York is satisfied, I believe, that this bill shall go through.

Mr. BROOKS. No, I am not satisfied, but I will interpose no objection to its passage.

The bill (H. R. No. 1117) to supply partial deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending on the 30th June, 1868, then received its several readings, and was engrossed and passed.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated by WILLIAM G. MOORE, his Private Secretary, who also announced that the President had approved and signed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 91) concerning certain lands granted to railroad companies in the States of Michigan and Wisconsin; also a bill (H. R. No. 1062) to grant the right of way to the Whitehall and Plattsburgh Railroad Company.

TAX BILL—ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SCHENCK. I give notice that on Wednesday, being possibly the first legislative day, I will report the internal tax bill back from the Committee of Ways and Means. I do not know that it will be necessary to ask time before proceeding to its consideration, as is usually done, because there will not be many amendments proposed by the committee that are material; they are principally verbal, and these we have thought we would offer for the consideration of the House, as the bill is read section by section, as amendments coming from the committee. I will say this: I will report the bill back on Wednesday and ask the House to take it up for consideration on Thursday and proceed with it, unless the House shall on Wednesday otherwise order. I apprehend that most members will have returned to their seats again before the session of Thursday.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman from Ohio will allow me to make a single suggestion. The Indian appropriation bill lies before the House as a special order, and I should desire that it might be passed before his bill is taken up.

Mr. SCHENCK. Well, I will report the bill back on Wednesday, and ask the House to take it up on the next day or at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. BLAINE. I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that although his bill is printed and has been for some days on the desks of members, yet when the House goes into Committee of the Whole upon it any single member may demand that it be read through at the Clerk's desk unless by unanimous consent its first reading be dispensed with. The first reading can be dispensed with by a suspension of the rules, and therefore I suggest that the matter had better be settled to-day.

Mr. SCHENCK. I am very much obliged to the gentleman for his suggestion, because I should think it would be almost a mischief for any one to insist upon the first reading of the bill in full. I have already advised the House that it is the purpose of the Committee of Ways and Means to afford the fullest opportunity for amendments and for the discussion of amendments to the bill; and as that is the course we propose to pursue in our treatment of the bill, I will ask that the House shall be equally courteous to us, and for the purpose of expediting the consideration of the bill the House shall now agree that when this bill shall be taken up in the Committee of the Whole the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with, and that we shall proceed to read it section by section. If there is any objection to that course I will move to suspend the rules in order that such an order be made.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I do not know that there will be any objection to the course suggested by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] when the bill comes up, but I should certainly think it was not best to make such an arrangement at this time. For one, I cannot consent to such an agreement now.

Mr. MAYNARD. I will make the further suggestion that when the bill is taken up in the Committee of the Whole debate shall be confined to the bill; otherwise, under the general rule, debate can be extended to almost any subject.

Mr. BLAINE. The House can limit the debate to that extent at any time.

Mr. SCHENCK. I do not think it is necessary to make such an order now; but, as chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, I shall insist that the debate all the way through shall be confined to the bill. As the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDRIDGE] objects to making this order now, and as I deem it so important, I will take the opportunity of this being Monday to move a suspension of the rules, so that it may be ordered that the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. Before making that motion I desire to state my reasons for it. This bill consists of two hundred and eighty-nine sections and some three hundred and sixty bill pages. If any gentleman should insist, as he has the right to do under rules of the House, upon the bill being read through for general information, before it shall be taken up and read section by section and clause by clause, something like a week will be consumed in the preliminary reading of the bill. Now, I do not think that is necessary in case of a bill which is in print and has been upon our tables for two weeks past.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Does the gentleman from Ohio say it will take a week to read this bill through?

Mr. SCHENCK. Pretty nearly.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I should think it could very easily be read through in a day.

Mr. SCHENCK. No, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. I could read it through in two hours.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I do not wish to be understood as saying now that I shall object to the course suggested by the gentleman from Ohio when the bill comes up. I simply object to the order being made now.

Mr. SCHENCK. The difficulty is this: the gentleman reserves his objection to be made at a future time. When that time comes, if the objection is made, I will not be able to move to suspend the rules. But to-day being Monday I can move to suspend the rules, and I prefer to do it now, so as to make a sure thing of it.

Mr. CHANLER. I rise to a point of order. Can the House bind its action on a future day in this way?

The SPEAKER. If this was a resolution offered by the gentleman from Ohio when the State of Ohio had been called, it could not be adopted except by unanimous consent. But the gentleman moves to suspend the rules so that a certain order shall now be made by the House.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move that the rules be suspended, and that it be now ordered that when the internal tax bill shall be reported back from the Committee of Ways and Means the preliminary or first reading of the bill in Committee of the Whole shall be dispensed with.

Mr. CHANLER. On that motion I will call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ELIOT. I desire to ask a question of the gentleman from Ohio before the vote is taken.

The SPEAKER. The motion to suspend the rules is not debatable.

Mr. ELIOT. I ask unanimous consent to ask the question.

No objection was made.

Mr. ELIOT. Before the House commences the examination of this bill, which the chairman of the committee states will occupy perhaps a week in its first reading, if that reading should be insisted on, I wish to put two inquiries to the chairman. The first one, for information from him, is as to the probable length of time which would be required for the House to consider reasonably, act upon, and finally pass the bill in the shape in which it has been reported from the committee? Of course, Mr. Speaker, I know very well the chairman of the committee can give no definite, exact answer to such an inquiry; but I also know the familiarity he has with the general subject of the bill will enable him to form a judgment on that question, which will be of importance, as I think, to the members of the House.

One other inquiry is this, whether it be not reasonably practicable for the Committee of Ways and Means to report to the House such amendments as in their judgment the interests of the country require respecting the tax upon whisky and upon tobacco as would answer the purposes of the Treasury, without its being necessary for us at this period of the session to commence the work of examining and passing this bill in full; and whether it may not be that such report could not be made by the committee as would enable the House to act on that, leaving the general subjects of the bill for our consideration at the next session?

These are the two questions I wish to bring before the chairman of the committee. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the time which we would occupy would be so long that the interests of the country would be better promoted if the course I have suggested could be taken than that the whole bill should be at this time discussed.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Speaker, I answer with pleasure the inquiries of the gentleman from Massachusetts, and first, as to the time to be occupied. I spoke of this bill taking, perhaps, weeks to read; of course I meant that with reference to the two or three hours of each day we give to the consideration of any particular subject. If the bill be taken up without preliminary reading, and we apply ourselves in good faith and in a business way to its consideration, I have no doubt myself that in less than three weeks we can perfect the bill with full opportunity to all parties in the House to take a share in that action on the bill. And, perhaps, we might even abridge that time if night sessions shall be held; and if I find at any time it would expedite the progress of the bill through the House to ask for night sessions I shall certainly ask for them.

Now, as to the second question. The committee, I beg the House to believe, have taken a great deal of pains—with what success the House and the country must hereafter judge—to get a bill as perfect as they could make it for the general interests of the country, and to make that bill a unity, an entirety. It is not practicable, I think, with advantage, to separate from the bill particular provisions in relation to the collection of tax on distilled spirits and tobacco. Provisions of a general nature for the enforcement of the law, for the reduction of the number of officers, for increasing the responsibility of officers, run through the body of the bill. They are as essentially necessary to enforce the collection of these taxes upon which we must rely as the peculiar provisions which relate to this subject of taxation itself; and unless we can adopt some general, wholesome, administrative changes, and some general, wholesome provision of penalty and of forms of proceeding, to secure the responsibility of officers and compel them to the discharge of their duty under the various subjects which are in the body of the bill passed along with particular provisions in relation to these subjects of taxation, I do not feel disposed to assure the House that our work will have accomplished that which we intended by it. I do not believe we can go through the whole bill in all its parts in a little more time than we could get through with the discussion of these particular subjects. I prefer to report back the bill as an entirety and to have it considered as a whole by the House, and I think I can assure no unreasonable protraction of the session will ensue if they set to work with a will, which the committee hope they will bring to the work on their part. They will have at least the earnest cooperation of the committee.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Will the gentleman give us any information in regard to the length of time a former tax bill of about one third the size of this took in the Committee of the Whole? My recollection is that it took three weeks of very diligent consideration.

Mr. SCHENCK. It might be invidious for me to undertake to assign reasons why there might be greater delay on one bill or less delay on another, but I will say this much: I think there are some three or four special points which will occasion a great deal of discussion, but when these have been disposed of we shall be able to run along with this bill without anything like the delay which the gentleman refers to in other cases; and especially for this reason, that the committee will present, I think, upon pretty much every question an undivided front in this House. Questions of difficulty and dispute among themselves have been for the most part, if not entirely, settled in the committee-room in advance.

Mr. GARFIELD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask this question? Is it not true that a very large portion of this very large bill is merely a codification and simplification of the law without changing its substantive provisions, so that it would really not need to take very much discussion except upon the few points the gentleman refers to?

Mr. SCHENCK. I can readily answer the question. A great deal of the bill is of that character. We have codified, simplified, and brought together provisions scattered through different portions of the law, but in some instances we have inserted new, and, as we think, important matter; as a whole, we trust, cohering together.

Mr. GARFIELD. It seems to me that should very much facilitate action on the bill. It will relieve the minds of members to a great degree and save an immense amount of time.

Mr. SCHENCK. I yield to my colleague on the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. I only desire to say a word in reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois. The tax bill of 1866 that he refers to took three weeks in this House; but the gentleman will remember that then we exempted special articles from taxation. The committee reported, I think, one hundred and twenty articles to be excepted, but every member had special articles which he wanted to except, and nearly all the debate that arose on the bill arose from the fact that everybody wanted to get rid of taxation. Now, fortunately, in this bill we have exempted nearly everything except luxuries. Therefore I think the discussion would take a much smaller range than in the bill of 1866.

Mr. PRUYN. I desire the attention of the chairman of the committee for a moment. I have heard it suggested, in view of the great magnitude of this bill and the immense amount of labor involved in going through with the whole of it in the Committee of the Whole—not on this side of the House, but on the other—that it was not likely that such a bill could pass this Congress at the present session. Now, there are points of interest and importance in regard to the revenue of the country which ought to be provided for by special legislation at this time; and I wish to ask the chairman of the committee whether the committee could not frame a brief bill which would meet these important points and enable us to pass upon them and dispose of that much of the matter at this time, even if we cannot get through with the whole? I suggest whether it is not desirable to have a draft of another bill before us for that purpose.

Mr. SCHENCK. If the gentleman had heard my reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts, he would have found that his inquiry has been answered.

Mr. PRUYN. I was not here.

Mr. ELIOT. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. SCHENCK. I prefer to finish my reply to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ELIOT. Go on.

Mr. SCHENCK. I have explained to the House, and will repeat for the benefit of the gentleman from New York and others who have not heard me, that our bill hangs together, as we think, in all its different parts, so that its various general provisions—those which relate to the administration of the Department, those which relate to the penalties to be imposed, and those which relate to the responsibility of officers—are necessary to be passed in connection with what refers to special subjects of tax. Hence we would not willingly separate them, but prefer the House should consider them all together. I do not myself believe there is anything reasonably to be apprehended in the suggestion that we cannot pass this bill as an entire bill through the House within a reasonable time for adjournment at the present session.

Mr. ELIOT. I was desirous of asking the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON,] with the information that he has as a member of the Committee of Ways and Means, whether, in his judgment, he believes that this House can do justice to that bill, and consider and pass it as it comes from the committee without remaining in our seats here until some time in the month of September?

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. Speaker, that is a question that depends upon so many contingencies that I could hardly undertake to prophesy with regard to it. It depends, in the first place, on the length of time occupied by this House, which will depend upon the fact whether we hold night sessions; and then it depends on the length of time occupied by the Senate on the bill. My own impression is that it will take considerable time for this bill to pass both Houses—say till the middle of July or the 1st of August, or perhaps longer.

Mr. ELIOT. Before it gets through the House?

Mr. ALLISON. No; through both Houses. It depends, of course, on the action of the Senate.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Considering the late period at which this bill is reported, I was desirous that the Committee of Ways and Means should group together a few of the most important items in it, and pass them in a separate bill, because I state it as my deliberate judgment, from my knowledge of the way in which the House and the Senate do business, that we cannot get through the tax bill till the middle of August. Gentlemen talk about the bill going through in two or three weeks. Why, sir, with a very small tax bill it took three weeks of diligent labor to pass it through this House. If the gentleman from Ohio thinks that his bill has not got to run a gauntlet here, which he little dreams of, he is very much mistaken. I know the way in which these bills are met here. I know something of the way in which appropriation bills that have been reported unanimously by the Committee on Appropriations, and which we did not expect would be attacked at all, have been attacked and have dragged on for weeks and weeks before we could reach a determination in regard to them. Sir, when we have passed this bill and it goes to the Senate, where they have no previous question, does anybody suppose that a bill of this vast importance—a bill of three hundred and sixty pages—will get through the Senate in less than six weeks, if at all?

Sir, I believe we cannot pass this bill at this session of Congress, and we had better make up our minds to that in the first instance and let the Committee of Ways and Means report another bill, embracing the most important objects, and pass it, and then let us go home. I will say further in regard to the other business—that with which the Committee on Appropriations is particularly charged—that we have only two bills behind—the Indian appropriation and the deficiency bills. Those two bills can be passed at any time in three or four days. Of the other appropriation bills some have already passed the Senate and have become laws; and if the gentleman from Ohio and the Committee of Ways and Means would agree to the course I have suggested we could very easily get through all our business and adjourn by the 1st of July.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BUTLER. I must claim the floor.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Is there any question before the House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] obtained the floor for the purpose, as the Chair supposed, of reporting some matter from the managers, but he yielded to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK,] to enable him to test the sense of the House on dispensing with the first reading of the tax bill.

Mr. BUTLER. I cannot yield for further discussion. I am willing that a vote shall be taken.

The SPEAKER. If any gentleman raises the question of order debate is not in order.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. It seems to me, as gentlemen say that we cannot get through before September, that it is best to stop this sort of filibustering. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCHENCK. I will ask, then, that a vote be taken on the motion that I make to suspend the rules so as to dispense with the preliminary reading of the tax bill in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and I will add to it that the bill be made the special order in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from day to day after the morning hour until disposed of.

The SPEAKER. On that motion the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHANLER] demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was taken; and two thirds voting in the affirmative the rules were suspended, and the order was made.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence for ten days was granted to Mr. LINCOLN on account of sickness, and to Mr. KITCHEN for four days.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by WILLIAM J. McDONALD, its Chief Clerk, informed the House that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the following bill and joint resolutions of the House:

A bill (H. R. No. 658) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1869, and for other purposes;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 216) to authorize the Secretary of War to place at the disposal of the Lincoln Monument Association damaged and captured ordnance; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 251) authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish supplies to an exploring expedition.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed the following joint resolutions, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 46) in relation to certain harbors on the coast of California; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 129) donating certain captured ordnance for the completion of a monument to the memory of the late Major General John Sedgwick.

The message further announced that the Senate had excused Mr. GRIMES from serving on the committee of conference on the bill of the House No. 678, making appropriations for invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1869, and had appointed to serve in his place Mr. MORRILL, of Maine.

RECUSANT WITNESS.

Mr. BUTLER. I am instructed by the managers to lay before the House a report and an accompanying resolution for the purpose of invoking action of the House as against a witness who has put himself in contempt of the House. I ask that the report be read, and the resolution agreed to.

The report was read as follows:

The committee of managers, acting under the authority of the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 16th of May instant—

"That for the further and more efficient prosecution of the impeachment of the President, the managers be directed and instructed to summon and examine witnesses under oath, to send for persons and papers, to employ a stenographer, and to appoint sub-committees to take testimony; the expenses thereof to be paid from the contingent fund of the House."

have attended to their duty so far as they have been able, because of the matters hereinafter stated, and ask leave to report in part as follows:

In pursuance of the resolution, having appointed a sub-committee, of which Mr. BUTLER was the first named, to take testimony, Charles W. Woolley, of Cincinnati, Ohio, appeared before the committee on Tuesday, the 19th of May, in answer to its subpoena, after various objections on his part and an admitted attempt to avoid. Woolley was examined by the sub-committee with very considerable delay, because of his refusal to answer some questions, his evasion of others, and interposition of claimed rights and privileges, which he attempted to sustain by argument, until the time of the session of the committee was exhausted for the day. During that day Woolley did not finally refuse to answer any question put to him.

He was ordered to appear before the committee again at half past ten o'clock on the morning of the next day (20th) for further examination. He did not appear, however, until about one o'clock, and after the House had adjourned until Saturday, (23d.) and thence, without further business, till Monday. After the adjournment he could not be brought before the House for contempt in refusing to answer until now.

At the second appearance of Woolley before the committee, a majority of the managers being present, Mr. BOUTWELL was chosen chairman pro tempore, during the absence from illness of Mr. BINGHAM. The examination being then about to be continued before the whole committee, an oath was again administered to him by the chairman, and the inquiry attempted to be proceeded with. Upon being asked whether upon reflection he desired to change or alter anything in his testimony given yesterday, Woolley declared that he did not consider he was under oath the day before; or that he had given any testimony whatever. He was then asked if what he had stated to the committee the day before was true, to which he declined to answer, alleging, in substance, that the oath administered by the chairman of the sub-committee was not binding. He was thereupon asked what disposition he had made of the sum of $20,000 or $25,000, or thereabouts, which had been referred to in his testimony of the day before, and which the committee had reason to believe had been raised for the purpose of corruptly influencing the trial of the President. To this he refused to answer, and to every question which would tend to show where the money was obtained, the purposes for which it was obtained, by whom it was furnished, and in what manner it was used, and to whom it was paid, he declined answering, alleging only that it was not deposited with him or used for any purposes connected with the impeachment of the President, and that he would answer no such question whatever in any way but by declaring it had nothing to do with the impeachment.

of the President, when in his (the witness's) own judgment it was not material to the investigation.

It was obvious to the committee that if this course was a proper one there was an end to all investigation, because every witness, not seeing the materiality of his testimony, could make the same answer, and no case dependent upon circumstances or detached facts to be made out by different witnesses could under such an admitted claim of rights be ever successfully prosecuted. The committee were, therefore, obliged to stop the examination at that point upon most of the matters material to be inquired of the witness; but as the House was not present, and the witness, by not appearing and objecting until after the House had adjourned—which the committee believe was a contrivance on his part that he might not be held for contempt—and as other portions of the investigation might be much embarrassed if his examination went no further, the committee, unwilling to lose any time, proceeded to examine the witness further as to the genuineness of certain writings and telegraphic dispatches made by him in his own name or under assumed names. Here again your committee were met by the refusal of the witness to answer as to the genuineness of his own signature, in some cases admitting it only where it was to telegrams in which the impeachment or trial of the President was distinctly mentioned, and to others, where it was alluded to in cipher or accompanied by such expressions as convinced the committee the telegrams had reference to some corrupt combinations in regard to the trial of the President, he declined to answer. The witness was thereupon, after consultation, dismissed and ordered to appear before the committee for examination on Thursday, the 21st instant, at half past ten o'clock a.m. On Thursday, at the hour appointed, the witness did not appear, but about one o'clock in the day the committee received a certificate of his physician, which is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 21, 1868.

I hereby certify that Colonel C. W. Woolley is under my professional care, and unable to leave his apartments, and confined to his bed by reason of irritative fever, sequellar of gastric derangement.

D. W. BLISS, M. D.

This was accompanied by a statement of the witness that he was ill, together with a long argument upon his rights, privileges, and constitutional exemptions.

The committee, accepting the truth of this claimed illness, did not send for the witness, but went on their investigation in another direction. Your committee have since learned, however, that Woolley was well enough on that day to take, and did take, the evening train for a night ride to New York, and he has not appeared before your committee since, but has sent a telegraphic certificate of some physician in New York that he is there sick. It will be thus seen that Woolley, the witness, has thus far baffled and hindered the investigation ordered by the House by contumacy in refusing to answer questions, by evasion and by avoidance.

The ground taken by the witness in refusing to answer questions put to him assumes that he was to judge of the materiality of the testimony and of each question put; that all inquiry upon every topic was to be shut off by his own ipse dixit that it was not material to the subject of inquiry, of which materiality he was the sole judge, and about which the committee and the House could have nothing to say. He claimed that if a witness avers that a given question is not material, whether that averment is true or false, from such decision there can be no appeal. For example, if the committee could show abundantly that a certain person had received $20,000 or $25,000 stolen notes of a given bank, Mr. Woolley claims the right to decline to answer the question whether he drew the notes from the bank on his own check which were delivered to the receiver, and thus destroy the connecting link in the chain of testimony showing the theft. Of course this claim cannot be permitted for a moment; for, to state the claim in other words, it is that the witness and not the tribunal is to judge of the materiality of the facts to be elicited.

Not for the purpose of showing the materiality of the questions put to Woolley, but to show the contumacy of the witness, his corruption and untruthfulness, and to justify the committee in asking that severe and exemplary punishment be imposed on him for his contempt of the authority of this House and the justice of the nation, the committee beg leave to report the facts and circumstances so far as they have been developed connecting Charles W. Woolley with the subject-matter of the inquiry with which the committee is charged, showing how necessary it is to public justice that the House should have from Woolley the frankest and fullest statement of every fact known or believed by him to be true.

It appears from the evidence that Charles W. Woolley is a lawyer not in general practice, but attending to cases before the Bureau of Internal Revenue generally arising out of alleged frauds in whisky, or, in the language of Judge Danleavy, a witness before the committee, and Woolley's associate counsel in these cases, "He is a lawyer by profession, a speculator, trader, does a good deal in stock speculations, in fine horses, &c. He is a Kentuckian, conceals himself a Kentucky gentleman, and has Kentucky habits. His wife has a large property, and he has a good deal of money."

The language of Judge Danleavy aptly describes a person fitted to be, and from the evidence it appears to the committee that he, Woolley, is, the manager, or one of the managers, of the concerns of that body of men who are deriding the Government, popularly known as the "whisky ring." His first appearance as connected with the impeachment case, so far as the evidence fixes the date, is on the 4th of May, by a telegram sent to New York from one of the President's secretaries, W. W. Warden, ("Data," of the Baltimore Sun.)

EXECUTIVE MANSION, May 4.

WILLIAM W. WARDEN:

Dispatch me your opinion of the situation. Will see you Wednesday morning.

(Copy.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 4, 1868.

C. W. WOOLLEY, Fifth Avenue Hotel, New York City:

More assured to-day than ever that the President will be acquitted. Such is the opinion of many well-posted men of both parties. Several Radicals, close observers, who have heretofore felt sure of conviction, inform me that they now have doubt of the result, and that this change of opinion has taken place since Friday. The only persons who assert unqualifiedly that Johnson will be removed are those who know least of the inner working, &c. The best informed either admit that there will be acquittal or are in doubt. (Answer.) W. W. WARDEN.

Woolley next appears about the same time at a meeting in the room of Thurlow Weed, at the Astor House, New York, at which were present Mr. Weed, Mr. E. D. Webster, Mr. Sheridan Shook, and Mr. Woolley. To appreciate the importance of this meeting it is convenient to describe the persons present and their connection with the exterior and "inner workings" of the Government, as it will be observed Warden's dispatch says "the only persons who assert unqualifiedly that Johnson will be removed are those who know least of the inner working," &c. Mr. Thurlow Weed's relation to the high officers of the Government, and connection with (all manner of) operations not official are too well known to need description to the House.

Mr. E. D. Webster was for a long time connected with the State Department, is a confidential friend of the Secretary and of Mr. Weed of many years, was afterward sent commissioner or commercial agent to England, and is now deputy surveyor of the custom-house, New York.

Mr. Sheridan Shook is collector of internal revenue of the thirty-second district, New York city; a man of large reputed wealth, and whose appearance and answers before the committee were such as not to enhance our opinion of his integrity or truthfulness.

The object and purposes of the meeting are best given in the words of the witness who described it, Mr. Thurlow Weed, omitting the names of the Senators of whom he speaks.

To the nineteenth question and the following Mr. Weed answers as follows, namely:

Question. I hold in my hand a telegram from Charles W. Woolley—May 7, 1868. "To Hon. Thurlow Weed, New York. When will the Albany party be on hand for business?" C. W. Woolley, Willard's Hotel."

Answer. That is the telegram in reference to Hastings.

Question. Did you understand this telegram when you received it?

Answer. I understood no more than anybody else would have understood from it. I understood that it asked when Hastings would be in Washington.

Question. Nobody else would have understood that it meant (Albany party) Hugh Hastings?

Answer. I did because I had received a previous telegram.

Question. What business did it relate to?

Answer. I understood the trial for impeachment.

Question. Did you send Hugh Hastings?

Answer. Yes.

Question. Why should Woolley telegraph you to send an "Albany party," which you understood to be Hastings?

Answer. A previous telegram named Hastings.

Question. From Woolley?

Answer. I think so. I may be mistaken. At any rate, I received a telegram requesting me to send Hastings to Washington.

Question. That was from Webster, was it not?

Answer. Perhaps it was.

Question. Here is one. "May 6, 1868. To Thurlow Weed, Astor House, New York. He will do it. Telegraph Hugh Hastings to come right away. E. D. Webster, Willard's. Who is 'he'?"

Answer. I have no knowledge respecting such a telegram, but I do not say that I did not receive it.

Question. Who is "he," and what was "he" to do?

Answer. I do not know who "he" was and what "he" was to do.

Question. Do not you understand that you have already told us that Hastings was to do something about the impeachment business?

Answer. Yes.

Question. It would seem that "he" could not refer to Hastings because he is mentioned in the next sentence. Did you make any inquiry what "he" was and what "he" was to do?

Answer. No, sir.

Question. Did not you understand what "he" meant?

Answer. No, sir; but I can tell you, if you will allow me to do so.

Question. I want to understand who "he" was.

Answer. I have no knowledge of who "he" was, nor did I then understand what "he" meant, if I understood anything about it.

Question. "He will do it." What did you understand by that, whoever "he" was?

Answer. I did not understand who "he" was or what "he" was to do, although I have no doubt that I understood that whoever the telegram related to it was the subject of impeachment.

Question. Then you did receive this telegram on the 6th of May?

Answer. Yes.

Question. And on the 7th of May this one: "To Hon. Thurlow Weed, New York. When will the Albany party be on hand for business?"

Answer. Yes, sir.

Question. That you understood to refer to Hastings, and the business to be relating to impeachment?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Question. Then on the 8th of May I find this telegram from Woolley to Sheridan Shook: "Go to the Astor House and get from our friend"—who says that meant you—"an answer to my dispatch to him yesterday." Did Sheridan Shook call on you, in obedience to this telegram?

Answer. He either called or sent the telegram. I saw the telegram.

Question. "And get from our friend"—that means you?

Answer. That means me. "And get an answer to my dispatch of yesterday." That was, "When will the Albany party be on hand for business?"

Question. What answer did you send?

Answer. I do not think I sent any, because I had not received any from Hastings at that time. Subsequently Hastings came to New York, and came also to Washington.

Question. Then on the 13th I find Mr. Webster telegraphs to you that "the acquittal of the President is a fixed fact." Did he not write to you the grounds upon which he put his opinion?

Answer. I think not.

Question. Did you know in any way?

Answer. I did not.

Question. Now, then, on the same 13th of May Mr. Cox telegraphed to you, "If you cannot come over send Sheridan Shook. Important." Mr. Cox has testified that that was written at Woolley's request. What was the important business that you understood you were either to come or to send Sheridan Shook upon on the 13th of May?

Answer. Something in connection with impeachment.

Question. Something important that you was to do?

Answer. I do not know what.

Question. You understood the telegram you sent Shook, did not you?

Answer. I think he came. It was for me to come or send Shook. I told him I was not coming.

Question. What was that important thing that you were to do when you got here?

Answer. I do not know.

Question. What did you understand it to be?

Answer. I understood it related to the impeachment. I could explain what my understanding of it was, if you think proper.

Question. You can give the explanation in direct answer to the question. What was the important matter which you or Shook were to do when you got here in relation to impeachment?

Answer. I do not know. I know nothing more than what the telegram states.

Question. Let us put this together and see. On the 6th of May Webster telegraphed to you, "He will do it." Telegraph "Hugh Hastings to come here right away." You have forgotten who "he" is, or do not know?

Answer. I do not know.

Question. On the 7th Woolley telegraphed to you, "When will the Albany party be on hand for business?" and you understood that to mean Hastings. On the 8th Woolley again telegraphs to Shook, under the cipher "Hooker." "Go to the Astor House and get from our friend"—which you say means you—"an answer to my dispatch of yesterday." When Shook called on you to get an answer you do not remember what answer you sent?

Answer. I did not send any answer.

Question. Then on the 13th Mr. Cox says—the 13th being the day after the adjournment of the Senate—"If you cannot come over send Sheridan Shook. Important. S. S. Cox." Now, it would seem, when the telegram was shown you, you understood who "Hooker" was, and you know that Woolley wanted you or Shook should come and do something that was important about impeachment.

Witness. Excuse me, if you assume that language is mine. I said it related to impeachment; not that there was something to be done; but what I did not know. I knew that the whole subject related to impeachment.

Question. But doing "business" shows that something was to be done?

Answer. Yes.

Question. "He will do it" shows that something was to be done; "Come yourself or send Shook" shows that something was to be done which you or Shook could do. Now, pray what was to be done?

Answer. I have answered that I do not know.

Question. What did you understand was to be done?

Answer. I do not know that I understood anything, and perhaps you will find out that I do not. If you will allow me, I will say that from all I heard on the subject of impeachment I had no confidence in the schemes that were talked about, and I declined to have anything to do with them.

Question. What were the schemes?

Answer. They were to get the votes of Senators against conviction.

Question. How?

Answer. As I understood, by purchase by money.

Question. Who were engaged in those schemes?

Answer. I have heard the subject mentioned by a number of parties.

Question. Tell me who?

Answer. I think the first person I heard talk on the subject was a General Adams.

Question. Formerly in the confederate army?

Answer. For anything I know, formerly in the confederate army, though I supposed not.

Question. What is his other name?

Answer. I am not sure about that.

Question. Were you intimate with him?

Answer. No.

Question. How did he come to you, a stranger, to talk to you about purchasing Senators' votes?

Answer. Because, I think, he had talked on the subject with another gentleman who, in the course of the conversation, said he would consult me.

Question. Who was that other gentleman?

Answer. The collector, Smythe; I think in that conversation my name was mentioned, and in passing out of the custom-house, by the way, I advised the collector—and I think the advice concurred with his own view—not to have anything to do with the subject; I met with this person passing out of the custom-house, and he introduced him to me.

Question. When?

Answer. I think three weeks ago.

Question. Had the collector talked with you before?

Answer. No.

Question. Did you advise the collector not to have anything to do with the subject before or after you saw Adams?

Answer. Both before and after.

Question. Did you introduce the subject to him—a subject that you never had heard of?

Answer. I have just stated that the collector told me of this conversation with General Adams.

Question. Then the collector told you?

Answer. Yes.

Question. What did he tell you?

Answer. That Adams proposed for a certain sum of money to get the votes of certain Senators against conviction.

Question. What Senators?

Answer. Of course I am under your direction, I do not voluntarily introduce anybody's name. The names mentioned to me were Senator —, Senator —, and I cannot with certainty indicate the other names.

Question. —?

Answer. I am not sure.

Question. —?

Answer. Here I want to answer you very unequivocally. Inasmuch as — voted against impeachment, my mind has been a good deal turned to that, and I can say that I never heard his name mentioned by anybody as one of the persons to be influenced.

Question. Anybody else?

Answer. Yes. I understood arrangement was to be made for four votes, but I cannot state positively who except — and —.

By Mr. WILSON:

Question. Did you remember any reason being stated why but four votes were to be provided for in that way?

Answer. No. I do not remember that there was any reason. I had no faith in it; I advised against it.

By Mr. BUTLER:

Question. Was it made apparently in good faith to you?

Answer. I made the conversation with Mr. Adams rather a brief one.

Question. I speak of the conversation with Smythe?

Answer. Smythe told me what Adams had said.

Question. Was Smythe apparently in earnest about it?

Answer. Smythe was asking my advice in regard to the degree of confidence to be placed in this man Adams. I said I did not know him. I did not like the looks of it in any way, and thought not best to have anything to do with it.

By Mr. WILSON:

Question. Do you know who this man is?

Answer. If General BUTLER had not made me hesitate about it I should have said he was a man in our Army, originally from the county of Onondaga. I got that impression. I know that I believed that he was a man in the Union Army, and formerly from the county of Onondaga.

By Mr. BUTLER:

Question. That was about three weeks ago?

Answer. Yes.

Question. Who was the next man that talked with you about purchasing votes?

Answer. The subject was often talked about in New York.

Question. By whom to you?

Answer. I suppose, to answer your question in the spirit it was put, the next conversation I had was with Webster, Woolley, and Shook. They came to my room at the Astor House.

Question. When?

Answer. I think a week after Adams was there.

Question. Shook, Woolley, and Webster?

Answer. Yes, sir; and my impression is, though I am not very confident, that that was the first time I ever saw Woolley.

Question. What was there said about it?

Answer. Substantially what Adams said. It was said that there was a proposition made for votes and for money.

Question. What sum was mentioned?

Answer. Thirty thousand dollars, I think.

Question. For one vote or more?

Answer. For three votes. But three names were mentioned that I remember.

Question. Who were they?

Answer. —, —, and —.

Question. That was about a week after the first; about two weeks ago?

Answer. Yes, I think so.

Question. Cannot you fix the date any nearer?

Answer. I cannot.

Question. Was Hastings in the matter then?

Answer. No, sir; Hastings had not been spoken of then.

Question. Who first spoke to you of Hastings?

Answer. The telegram to me.

Question. Did you speak of Hastings then?

Answer. After I got the telegram.

Question. How did you understand a telegram from Webster, "He will do it"—Hastings never having been spoken of? "Tell Hastings to come right away." How did you understand it to relate to impeachment unless Hastings had been previously spoken of?

Answer. Because the subject had been previously spoken of at my room by these three gentlemen.

Question. Now, did not you understand that "he" referred to some party whose vote was to be purchased?

Answer. I had no distinct understanding at all. It was an enigma to me; and I do not know that I tried to understand it. I had forgotten that there was any such telegram. I know that the telegram, whatever it was, referred to the subject of impeachment.

Question. Then, in accordance with the request of this party, Webster, you did send for Hastings "right away?"

Answer. I telegraphed to Hastings, saying he was wanted at Washington.

Question. And you telegraphed knowing he was wanted to aid in purchasing votes?

Answer. Is that quite fair?

Question. I think so.

Answer. Then I answer distinctly that I do not know that he was wanted for any purpose except relating to impeachment, and it did not occur to me what he was wanted for.

Question. Then he came to New York and hesitated about going. I want to repeat it, so that you may understand exactly what I am asking you. You have testified that one Adams called on you, or met you, about purchasing votes; that when Smythe consulted with you about purchasing votes, that—

WITNESS. I am sorry to interrupt you, General BUTLER, but you do not state the question fairly. I did not say that Smythe spoke to me about purchasing votes. I told you he repeated to me what had been said to him, and asked me what I thought of the matter.

Mr. BUTLER. I want to treat you with perfect personal respect, and I want to get exactly all that there is in your mind; and as you have already told us that you had forgotten some of the telegrams, and as you have already said that you did not know the purport of certain matters in those telegrams, I have endeavored, and purpose still to endeavor, to bring the train of circumstances to your mind so as to see if, upon the whole, your own mind does not go back to the conclusion as to what these telegrams mean. Therefore I am putting these questions in this form.

WITNESS. Excuse me for saying to you here, I am glad to receive your explanation. I think there can be no need of misunderstanding where frankness is desired. I have no desire to conceal anything; nor do I desire to be embarrassed by any of the technicalities which may be always resorted to by a long cross-examination, which my health does not permit. Nevertheless, you shall have a frank answer to every question.

Question. Now, then, the question I propose to put to you is this: Some three weeks ago you had some conversation with a man by the name of Adams upon the subject of purchasing votes. Either just before or after it Mr. Smythe also had spoken to you on the subject, and repeated what Mr. Adams had said to him.

Answer. All that occurred within an hour on the same day.

Question. About a week after Shook, E. D. Webster, and Woolley, whom you did not know, called at your room and had a further conversation on the same subject. Up to that time Mr. Hugh Hastings' name had not been mentioned. Then on the 6th of May, which would be about two weeks ago, Mr. Webster telegraphed to you, "He will do it; telegraph Hugh Hastings to come here right away." You further said that you did telegraph Hastings to come to Washington, and he did come; and that you understood that he was to come relating to impeachment. Now, what I want to call your attention to and to ask you to reply is, did you not understand and believe, when you received this telegram from Webster, that Hastings was to go to Washington upon the same subject which Webster had consulted you upon in your room in the Astor House?

Answer. Yes, sir; I supposed it was on the same subject.

Question. Did Hastings make any report when he came back to you?

Answer. Yes; he told me he had been in Washington.

Question. Excuse me. I do not ask what the report was.

Answer. If you ask me literally if he reported to me when he came back, I say no.

Question. Did he see you after he came back?

Answer. Yes.

Question. Did he make any statement upon his visit to Washington?

Answer. Yes.

Question. How soon did he return?

Answer. My impression is, in about two days. I am not quite sure.

Question. Within three days?

Answer. Yes.

Question. Having returned within three days I now find a telegram on the 13th for you to come yourself or to send Shook, who was one of the party who were in your room. You understood that you were wanted to come on this same business?

Answer. I did.

Question. But if you could not come you understood that Shook was wanted on this same business?

Answer. Yes.

Question. And that it was important "that either he or you should come?"

Answer. It was so expressed in the telegram.

Question. And you thought it at least so important that you sent him, did you not?

Answer. No, sir. He did go, but I did not send him.

Question. Did you not go to him and tell him to come?

Answer. No. I think he came to me and asked me about it, and I told him I should not go.

By Mr. WILSON:

Question. Did you inform him about the contents of the telegram?

Answer. I think it was to him.

By Mr. BUTLER:

Question. No, sir. It was "To Thurlow Weed, Twelfth street and Fifth avenue, New York city. If you cannot come over send Sheridan Shook. Important. S. S. Cox."

Answer. My impression was it was to Shook. I showed him the telegram and told him I could not or should not come, and he doubted first whether he would, but finally did.

Question. And remained here how long? Do you know?

Answer. I cannot say, but my impression is not more than a day or two.

It will thus be seen that Woolley was in New York with Webster and Shook proposing to Thurlow Weed a corrupt scheme to buy the votes of certain Senators, a proposition which Mr. Weed declined, giving no reason for so doing except that he did think the enterprise a feasible one. By his testimony he does not show a word of discouragement to the parties in the business, because of its corruption and dishonesty, but only declines to take part in it (so far as appears) because he doubts whether it can be made a success; but, as he testifies, informs the party if it were feasible funds could easily be raised to carry it out.

Woolley then leaves New York and comes to Washington, apparently to see if the enterprise could be made a success, and of that success we have some evidence to which we will hereafter advert. Before doing so, however, it will be instructive to see what facilities he had of reaching the friends of the President, and how far he enjoyed their confidence. He opens parlor No. 6, at Willard's Hotel, at which room Mr. S. S. Cox testifies he met one or more of the counsel of the President, and going from thence to the Senate Chamber he was directed to telegraph the result of the vote to Woolley and company, room No. 6, which direction he obeyed, he himself riding up to the Capitol with Mr. Everts on that occasion. Woolley gives at Welker's very lavish entertainments, "throwing his money right and left," as he testifies, in so much that he attempts to account for an expenditure of more than three thousand dollars from the 10th to the 17th of May in this way. His room is frequented by Major Perry Fuller, contractor of the Indian Bureau; Ralph W. Newton, a New York gold broker; J. B. Craig, attorney-at-law, New York city. Samuel Ward, a gold speculator in Washington, who testifies before your committee that he infers from conversations with the Secretary of the Treasury when he intends to sell gold, and thereupon telegraphs to his associates in New York, as follows:

May 18, 1868.

Potter will be quiet all this week. Advocate my cause. Measure low enough.

PRESCOTT.

CHARLES H. WARD, 54 Wall street, New York.

Which being interpreted, as he testifies, should be read:

May 18, 1868.

McCulloch will not sell gold all this week. Buy me $50,000. Gold is low enough.

SAM WARD.

CHARLES H. WARD, 54 Wall street, New York.

Colonel Edmund Cooper, the President's late Private Secretary, and now First Assistant Secretary of the Treasury ad interim; Mr. Sheridan Shook, a New York collector of internal revenue; Washington McLean, editor of the Cincinnati Enquirer; S. G. Cox, minister nominated to Austria; H. A. Smythe, collector of customs New York; E. D. Webster, the aforementioned friend of Thurlow Weed and of Secretary Seward; H. L. Hastings, editor of the Knickerbocker of Albany, and now engaged on the Commercial Advertiser with Thurlow Weed; J. C. Tweed, a banker of Wall street, New York; General Hancock, of the United States Army; J. S. G. Burt, a leading speculator now or lately of Cincinnati, Ohio; Judge Dunlevy, attorney to the "whisky ring;" and to these must be added W. S. Groesbeck, esq., and William M. Everts, esq., of the counsel for the President.

To show the degree of intimacy existing between Woolley and the parties above named the committee have only to refer to the telegrams that have passed between several of them and Woolley, and the testimony of Woolley himself of the parties who dined together at Welker's on the Friday evening before the vote.

Question. Give the names of the other gentlemen at that dinner.

Answer. General William Preston, S. S. Cox, W. M. Everts, W. S. Groesbeck, Colonel McDonald of Maine, I think Colonel Cooper, the Private Secretary that was, myself, Sam Ward, and Craig.

Woolley further testifies that he had been able to command the appointment of an internal revenue assessor for the district of Cincinnati from the President.

With these relations and associations, coming to Washington with the corrupt purposes which he avowed at Mr. Weed's room at the Astor House, of procuring the President's acquittal, and for the purpose, also, of controlling the settlement of whisky seizures, and also to aid the nomination of Mr. Pendleton, as he (Woolley) swears, both which last-mentioned purposes would be largely promoted if he could compass the first by purchase, bribery, or otherwise.

We find the first evidence of his success in a telegram of the 6th of May to Sheridan Shook, signed Hooker, as follows:

"My business is adjusted. Place ten to my credit to-day with Gilliss, Harney & Co., No. 24 Broadstreet. Answer."

That this telegram was not about an honest business transaction is sure from the cipher and from the fact that Sheridan Shook denies any knowledge of what it means. Although he admits that he received it from Woolley, Shook further denies that he placed any money to Woolley's credit at Gilliss, Harney & Co., as the telegram directed, yet the committee find, from the testimony of Woolley himself, as well as from other facts, that $10,000 were placed to his credit with that banking house in New York, against which he drew and received the $10,000, in ten bills of $1,000 each, from the First National Bank of this city in a day or two after the telegram.

As showing that this was done by Shook according to the telegram, we find that E. D. Webster, his associate, dispatched a telegram the same night from Willard's to Shook, saying, "All right;" i. e., your answer has been received. Contemporaneous with the procurement of this money by Woolley we find the dispatches heretofore recited of the 7th of May, from Woolley to Weed, asking, "When will the Albany party be on hand for business?" It will also be observed that the word "business" is the same word which Thurlow Weed swears means "procuring votes for acquittal by purchase," and is the same word "business" Woolley uses when he telegraphs to Shook. "My business is adjusted, place ten to my credit."

Again, showing impatient haste, "Hooker" (Woolley), Hastings not coming, sends a telegram to Sheridan Shook on the 8th, "Go to the Astor House and get from our friend an answer to my dispatch of yesterday."

On the same day, the 8th, E. D. Webster telegraphs to S. Shook, "See W." (i. e., Weed) "immediately, and ascertain if that letter has been delivered; if not, have it done at once."

Weed does not tell us what was in that letter. He testifies in this connection that he telegraphed to Albany to Hugh S. Hastings, and sent him to Washington on the business that was conversed about by Woolley, Shook, and Webster at the Astor, i. e., purchasing the votes of Senators. The course of the cars brought Hastings to Washington on the 10th of May. The effect of Hastings's appearance here on that day is shown by the telegram of Woolley to his friend J. S. G. Burt, May 11, "President's stock above par;" and again, to D. W. Ives, New York, "Impeachment gone higher than a kite." But on the 12th "Hooker" (Woolley) telegraphs to Sheridan Shook, "The five should be had, may be absolutely necessary." On the same day Woolley drew $5,000 more on Gilliss, Harney & Co., through the First National Bank, Washington, which was duly honored by Gilliss, Harney & Co. in New York. It is not difficult to see who placed the money there for Woolley or divine the purpose for which it was so placed. That this was not for an honest business is shown by his testimony, although it refers to "the five which must be had;" and Shook denies he knows what the telegram means, although he admits he received it.

These sums of $10,000, $5,000, and the $5,000 drawn on Cincinnati and paid there for Woolley the same 12th of May, as evidenced by the following telegram:

"HAMILTON, OHIO, May 12.

"To Woolley from P. S. Clinch:

"I paid your draft. How is Andy? Got home this morning," makes the $20,000 that Woolley wanted for his purpose, and the same he has refused to account for, or rather has accounted for in four different ways, each of which account is false:

1. By saying he had expended it in his own private business.
2. That he had paid it out in his clients' business.
3. That he had sent it to his client in Cincinnati by a check on a bank there, forgetting that sending his own check on a bank in Ohio would not get ten one thousand dollar bills out of his pocket in Washington.
4. That he had given between sixteen and seventeen thousand dollars of this money to Sheridan Shook to keep, which Sheridan Shook denies upon oath, and Woolley now refuses to testify to your committee what he has done with it, and it is one of the objects of this report to have him brought to the bar of this House and forced to disclose.

Meanwhile there seems to have been a little difficulty which Woolley could not arrange or Hastings make smooth, and which required the masterhand of Thurlow Weed or that of his scarcely less able or less skillful lieutenant, Sheridan Shook, to adjust.

It will be remembered that opinions were delivered in the Senate on the 11th by some Senators; that on the 12th it was public rumor that a Senator or Senators would resign or vote for the eleventh article. Something—whether it was that rumor or what—disturbed the associates of Weed's room at the Astor House. It would not be well for the committee at present to disclose what evidence they may have affecting other parties; but that something had happened which interfered with their calculations on that day is most certain, because Mr. J. B. Craig telegraphs from New York on the 12th of May in answer to an inquiry from Samuel Ward, "I leave at seven thirty; will see you early." He arrived here, of course, on the morning of the 13th, and telegraphed on the same day, as he swears (by direction of Woolley) to Sheridan Shook, "Come on by first train. Very important."

What was it that was so important, that the third or fourth member of the Astor House Association for the purchase of votes should be there to attend to it? Let that telegram should not find Shook at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, on the same day and hour Craig tel-ographed to Shook, by order of Woolley, "You must come here and untangle a snarl between friends at once." What "snarl" had happened "between friends" Craig swears he does not know. Shook swears he does not; and although he came in obedience to the telegram, he never inquired or was told after he got here what this important "snarl" was. Sheridan Shook did come, but not until S. S. Cox had telegraphed by direction of Woolley, to Thurlow Weed, but, as Cox swears, without knowledge of its import. "If you cannot come over send Sheridan Shook. Important." This telegram, Thurlow Weed testifies, related to the subject of impeachment as talked over in his room at the Astor House; and as he could not come Shook did come by the morning train of the 15th, so the "snarl," whatever it was, was about purchasing the votes of Senators. Shook's deputy, Shafer, telegraphed to Craig, at 11.42 a. m. of the 14th, that Shook would leave New York to-morrow morning. Hastings, in the meantime, had returned to New York; and the matter for which Weed and Shook were wanted seems not to have been fully arranged until after Shook got to Washington, the "snarl between friends untangled," because Wash. McLean, on the 13th, telegraphed to Woolley this inquiry: "Will Johnson be deposed? When will you be here?" Instead of replying to him with the assurance of certainty he had used to some of his friends on the 14th, Woolley does not seem to have that confidence "that impeachment had gone higher than a kite," and that certainly which he had expressed before the "snarl" took place, but in answer telegraphed as follows, under date of the 14th May, to Wash. McLean, New York: "Johnson stood at par; managers examining witnesses as to corruption of Senators. HENDRICKS, VAN WINKLE, WILLEY, TRUMBULL, JOHNSON met at Chase's house last night to form a new party. We have them demoralized and bitter. Do not leave New York until I see you; say by Sunday certainly."

It would seem, therefore, that at this time the Astor House Association were rather relying upon the political situation in aid of their efforts, as Webster telegraphed to Thurlow Weed on the 13th as follows: "The acquittal of the President is a fixed fact. Already crimination and recrimination is indulged in between the impeachment leaders, and Forney has been compelled to resign. The present plan of the impeachers is to adjourn again on Saturday without taking a vote." Thus it is seen with what care Mr. Weed was privately kept informed upon the subject of impeachment, and how scrupulously he watched every varying phase of the trial. But Sheridan Shook, his associate, who had been sent for by three different telegrams, Important. Come by next train, to untangle the snarl between friends "who was to take the place of Thurlow Weed;" who was to "be sure to come or send Shook, Important," did arrive on the night of the 15th.

Weed, as will be seen by his testimony, expressly swears this telegram to send S. Shook related to the matter talked over at his room at the Astor House, i. e., how Senators' votes might be purchased to secure acquittal.

Sheridan Shook, on the contrary, testifies to your committee that he did not know to what subject all these telegrams referred, although, after an interview with Weed, he obeyed them and came; and that when he arrived here no business was stated to him, that no entanglement was shown him, and he did not even inquire why he should have come, or why he had been sent for, or what was the important business he was expected to do, now he was here, and the only ostensible errand he disclosed to the committee was to bring two hundred Regalia cigars for which Woolley had telegraphed him on the 14th.

If, in the light of the evidence above reported and telegraphed information disclosed, any member of the House believes this statement of Shook, "him have your committee offended" by asking that Woolley be brought to the bar for contempt of its authority and his interference with the course of public justice.

Whatever entanglement or difficulty might have existed before the coming of Shook, or doubts upon the minds of the associates as to the President's acquittal, they all vanished during the night after his arrival, for long before the time when the friends of the Union had any knowledge upon the subject, while the whole country was waiting in breathless anxiety for the verdict of the Senate, where the dread award of guilt or innocence was actually trembling in the balance, the very judgment itself, nay, the very number of votes and the men who would cast them, were known to the members of this corrupt association and their confederates. Of this no other evidence is wanting but a single controlling fact.

H. S. Hastings, "the Albany party who was ready for business," and had come on at the solicitation of Woolley, sent through Weed, was anxiously waiting at the place of business of Shook, the office of the collector of internal revenue, thirty-second district, New York, 83 Cedar street, to learn what had been the effect of the machinations of Sheridan Shook, whose office he was keeping during Shook's absence, at the telegraphic request of Woolley, enforced by the command of Weed. Listen to the magnificent diapason of triumph with which Woolley announces to Hastings the assured success of the association under the able lead of Shook by telegram sent from Washington at nine o'clock and thirty-five minutes on the morning of the 16th May, four hours before the vote could be taken, and announced in the Senate: "H. S. Hastings, care Sheridan Shook, 83 Cedar street, New York. We have beat the Methodist Episcopal Church North, 11ell, George Wilkes and impeachment. It is believed a vote will be had to-day. I doubt it."

Again, so assured was Woolley that his work was well done, and that there was nothing more for him to do in Washington, that at eight a. m. of the same morning (the 16th) he telegraphs his friend, J. S. C.

Burt, New York, "Where's Wash? I will dine with Hancock to-night, or be at Fifth Avenue Sunday morning. Andy all right."

In view of all this evidence the committee have reported the accompanying resolve. They have forbore to state any other evidence which they have taken, confining themselves to that which seemed to affect and cluster around Woolley in this report, because his case is alone the present subject of inquiry before the House. There is other and most important evidence bearing upon the subject of attempted interference with the course of public justice in this greatest of all trials, the nature and extent of which the committee do not deem it proper or just even to indicate until their final report shall be made, lest they might do injustice and the indication of the evidence might cause the avoidance of the witnesses, more than one of whom they have not yet been able to reach by the summons of the House.

The committee are of opinion that not only this but all other investigations by the House in the future depend for their efficiency upon the action of the House in this case. If Woolley can thus defy by evasion and false swearing the solemn investigations of the House of Representatives in matters of the very highest concernment, it is difficult to see how the House can ever hereafter hope with any success to investigate, detect, and provide against any other attempted corruption in governmental affairs.

By the committee:

BENJAMIN F. BUTLER.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That Charles W. Woolley, a witness heretofore duly summoned before the committee of managers of this House, and who, as appears by the report of the managers, has refused to answer proper inquiries put to him in the course of the investigation ordered by the House, and who has not attended upon the sessions of the committee according to its order, but has, in contempt thereof and of the orders of this House, left the city of Washington, and remains absent and has not yet reported himself to the committee, be forthwith arrested by the Sergeant-at-Arms, and be brought before the House at its bar by the orders of the House, duly issued by the Speaker, under his hand and the seal of the House; and that said Woolley be detained by virtue thereof by the Sergeant-at-Arms until he answer for his contempt of the order of the House, and abide such further order as the House may make in the premises.

Mr. BUTLER. I now propose to call the previous question upon this resolution.

Mr. BROOKS. Does the gentleman propose to press this matter through without debate after making these serious charges?

Mr. BUTLER. I will withdraw the call for the previous question for the present if the gentleman desires.

Mr. BROOKS. I wish to correct a statement of fact in the resolution.

Mr. BUTLER. How long a time does the gentleman want?

Mr. BROOKS. I do not know; a reasonable time.

Mr. BUTLER. I will yield for a question simply.

Mr. BROOKS. I wish to correct the gentleman in point of fact. This resolution is based upon an erroneous statement of fact, in regard to which, I suppose, the gentleman desires to be corrected. The gentleman has fallen in the same error to-day that he fell into the other day, when he stated positively that Mr. Woolley had left the city. Mr. Woolley is now in the city, as he was the other day.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to say, first, that Mr. Woolley left town on the night train, and, after he went off, sent us a dispatch that he had gone; so I know he went; that is, if he is to be believed at all.

Mr. BROOKS. Is the gentleman from Massachusetts so little versed, after all his experience in telegraphing, in the skill with which men could fool him with telegraphic dispatches? When it was found that he was hunting up telegraphic dispatches as freely as he was he might receive a dozen telegraphic dispatches from New York stating that Mr. Woolley was there, when he had not left Willard's Hotel.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand this to be the state of facts: Mr. Woolley went away to New York, in defiance of the committee, stayed until last night, and then came back again.

Mr. BROOKS. The resolution states that Mr. Woolley left the city of Washington, and has not yet returned.

Mr. BUTLER. No, it does not; it says he has not reported to the committee.

Mr. BROOKS. Let the resolution be again read.

The resolution was read.

Mr. BROOKS. "Remained absent" is the phrase; and that means he is not here. I wish the gentleman, therefore, before he presses his resolution, to put it in a form so we can all vote for it. For, sir, we do not intend to array ourselves in opposition to any inquiry which the honorable gentleman or his committee wish to make.

I wish to say further that I hope he will strike out the words "proper" and "proper inquiries," for if he has been inquiring into the private affairs of Mr. Woolley I doubt whether it is a "proper inquiry." The majority of this House is invested with power, with certain privileges and prerogatives, beyond all question, but with no privilege or prerogative which will enable them to investigate into the private affairs of anybody. And, sir, when the committee put questions to a witness relating to his personal and private affairs or private business, they are, in my judgment, traveling beyond the parliamentary right of the House in making an investigation, particularly when, as in this case, the witness swears positively he has used none of this twenty or twenty-five thousand dollars for any purpose connected whatsoever with the impeachment of the President.

Before I go further I wish to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] to fill the blanks with the names of the two Senators mentioned by the witness.

A MEMBER. Three.

Mr. BROOKS. Two, as I understand; because the country has the right officially to know, what everybody unofficially knows, that the two Senators are Mr. POMEROY, of Kansas, and Mr. NYE, of Nevada, whom it seems were to be purchased if this money was contemplated for that purpose. And I wish to add, further, that these facts corroborate the testimony of Mr. Cooper, that there were like negotiations for the purpose of reaching Mr. POMEROY and Mr. NYE. I do not charge anything corrupt in regard to them, but I only know that it is stated in the public papers that these blanks are to be filled with the names of Senator POMEROY and Senator NYE, and not with any of the names of the seven Senators.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. On the remarks of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. ELDRIDGE. No, sir. I thought he had got through.

Mr. BROOKS. I wish to say, in answer to the gentleman from Massachusetts, that in justice the managers should have carried their investigations further and investigated a caucus held by a large number of Senators, at one time a list of thirty-five names was indicated and at another thirty-six. I say as a matter of justice, as a matter of equity, it should be inquired into, whether thirty-five Senators, acting as judges or jurors, have not, as members of a caucus, attempted to force the impeachment of the President?

Grateful to the member from Massachusetts, from whom I did not expect so large a courtesy, I wish he would give me an opportunity to present my opinion as a member of the press and a member of the press largely connected with the telegraph. I protest against this whole series of ex parte investigations, so far as my honorable profession is concerned. I claim as a journalist, and I claim it as our right, holding a position as respectable as ours is, that of Senators not higher because they are in the Senate—I claim the right as a journalist, whenever in private or social intercourse, at public dinners or elsewhere, in the line of our profession strictly we obtain information particularly relating to our profession, that it is as privileged, if not in the eye of the common law, in the eye of moral law and equity and justice, as the consultation of lawyers, of which profession the gentleman from Massachusetts is a member, or the office of the priesthood; and in behalf of my profession here I hope at any time, preferring imprisonment and death, they will never report private conversations or information communicated to them, except before the highest courts of law on a subpoena duces tecum, with a specification of the particular fact alleged to be derived. And in behalf of that profession, and in behalf of the whole community, I proclaim this seizure of telegrams, this wholesale seizure without any specification whatever, is an outrage upon private life and liberty, the like of which has never been known in any country whatever in a time of peace, and which would never be submitted to under any despotism in Europe without outcry and rebellion, almost if attempted in the form in which it has been attempted here; and the only wonder to me in this case is, that in the freedom with which the telegraph has been used by all parties, more or less, relating to the most intimate commercial and business affairs as well as to affairs of social life, involving property, honor, character, and the most sacred domestic relations, they have not been able to disclose more facts than they have exhibited here. I have no doubt they have suppressed hundreds of telegrams, while they have used only those that are useful for their purposes here in this debate.

The privileges and prerogatives of this House I know very well, but they are not those of a court of law. They are limited by parliamentary rule and parliamentary precedent. I undertake to say that the whole history of parliamentary law of no country ever showed an invasion like this, and that the surrender of telegrams to this managerial committee is one of the most disgraceful surrenders which has ever been made by a corporation in the whole history of the world, and in my judgment ought to damn them to everlasting infamy.

With these remarks let me be understood. I intend to throw no obstacle whatsoever in the way of any investigation such as the gentleman from Massachusetts, on behalf of the committee, may desire to make. Go on; seek everything in which you may find that anybody has been in any way corrupted in these proceedings. None of our people have as yet been touched. The whole array of names, without exception, so far as I know—Woolley, Shook, Weed, Hastings—are not of the party with which I am associated. Mr. Shook received his office from President Lincoln, not from us. He has been a Republican, and is a Republican at the present time, so far as my information goes. What may be the politics of Mr. Woolley I do not know, nor do I know the politics of Mr. Adams. He is mentioned as an officer of the confederate army. I do know something in regard to that. He never was in the confederate army, if he ever belonged to any army whatsoever, which I very much doubt. If he had any office which entitled him to be called general it was nothing beyond quartermaster general, and if he belongs to any party whatsoever it is that to which the gentleman from Massachusetts belongs and not to that with which I am associated.

I am grateful to the gentleman from Massachusetts for the courtesy extended me in allowing me to make these few remarks.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I propose now, having heard from the other side, to call the previous question.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I rise to a question of order. I call the attention of the Speaker to the Digest, page 192, second paragraph, which provides that—

"Any person summoned as a witness by authority of the House to give testimony or to produce papers upon any matter before the House or any committee thereof who shall willfully make default, or who, appearing, shall refuse to answer any question pertinent to the matter of inquiry in consideration before the House or committee by which he shall be examined, shall, in addition to the pains and penalties now existing, be liable to indictment as for a misdemeanor. And when a witness shall fail to testify as above, and the facts shall be reported to the House, it shall be the duty of the Speaker to certify the fact, under the seal of the House, to the district attorney for the District of Columbia."—Statutes-at-Large, vol. II, pp. 155, 156.

I insist that that is a provision which should govern this case, and not the application of the gentleman from Massachusetts. Certainly the witness should be, in the first instance, arrested.

It is contrary to all law and all precedent that he should be brought before us without an opportunity to show cause why he has not answered a certain question. Many of the questions put to him are of the nature described by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Brooks.] They are such as, in my judgment, the committee had no right to ask, and such as no witness would be compelled in a court of justice to answer.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand this to be a point of order and not an argument.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin was going on to indicate the point. The Chair thinks he has stated it.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. The Chair may think so, but he is quite mistaken. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman may continue till he has made his point of order.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I say it is contrary to the practice of any court of justice.

The SPEAKER. That is not a point of order. The Chair does not know what is the practice of courts of justice; the only point of order upon which he can rule is in relation to the practice of the House of Representatives or of parliamentary bodies.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. The Chair cannot, of course, decide until he has heard my statement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot sustain a point of order based upon the practice of a court of justice.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I insist that the parliamentary practice is that the witness is not to be arrested and brought before the House until he has had an opportunity to show cause why he has not answered the questions propounded by the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order on the ground that the uniform usage of the House from the Twelfth Congress down to the present time has been that where a witness is before a committee of the House that is authorized to send for persons and papers and refuses to testify he is first to have an opportunity to explain to the House of Representatives why he refuses to testify; he cannot be held to answer until the committee shall present the question to the House, and the House shall, at its bar, through the Speaker, present to him the question and ascertain why he has refused to answer it. The very Statute-at-Large quoted by the gentleman from Wisconsin, on page 192 of the Digest, was enacted subsequent to the refusal of a witness before a committee to testify after having been imprisoned by the order of the House for his persistent refusal. The committee who had the subject under consideration reported this law, which is to be found on page 155, volume eleven of the Statutes-at-Large. It reads as follows:

"Shall, in addition to the pains and penalties now existing, be liable to indictment as for a misdemeanor."

Previous to that time there had been no power of punishment except the power of the House of Representatives, and that power ended whenever the House adjourned. If, therefore, a witness, just at the close of a constitutional term of Congress, on the 3d of March, should refuse to testify, the House of Representatives could not imprison him for a longer time than until the 4th of March, when their term expired. The bill reported by that committee was passed with the general assent of all parties in Congress, was signed by the President, and became a law. And it goes on to provide that—

"When a witness shall fail to testify as above, and the facts shall be reported to the House, it shall be the duty of the Speaker to certify the fact, under the seal of the House, to the district attorney for the District of Columbia."

This law was enacted. The Chair does not remember the exact year.

Mr. KELSEY. In 1857.

The SPEAKER. In 1856 or 1857. The Chair was a member of the House at the time, and remembers the enactment of the law, because a witness not only refused to testify before the committee, but when brought to the bar of the House refused still further to testify.

The previous question was then seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to speak further?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed; he is entitled to one hour under the rule.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, there are one or two matters which I desire to have set right before the country, in reply to what has fallen from the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Brooks.] In the first place, in regard to the names of Senators, which he says are unofficially known, I can only say that there are other names in our evidence than those he has mentioned, but I shall not be drawn—for I am not instructed to do it—into any statement upon that subject. There is one statement, however, which I propose to make in justice to everybody and with the assent of the managers, and that is that, so far as names recollected by the witness, Thurlow Weed, were disclosed, they were names of Senators who had voted for conviction. But, sir, is it of any consequence to this House, or to the country, which side has been attempted to be bribed, or whether Mr. Cooper, the President's late Private Secretary—for his name has been brought in here, I have not brought it in—whether Mr. Cooper attempts to bribe Mr. A or Mr. B? Is it of any consequence to the justice of the nation whether he has succeeded or fails in his attempts to bribe Senators? Has it come to this, that if one only fails in bribing one has full liberty to attempt it? The honorable gentleman from New York states himself, as I understand him, that he understood that Mr. Cooper was engaged in such negotiations.

Mr. BROOKS. The honorable gentleman will permit me to correct him, unless he means by "such negotiations" that he declined to receive an offer that was made him for such negotiations and refused to negotiate in the matter?

Mr. BUTLER. I take what is on the record; and I pray that the record may not be changed. I have seen some accounts of testimony which it has been supposed was given before the managers. Now, I want to say here, once for all, that not one word as to the testimony given before the committee to my knowledge has ever gone out from the committee of managers to any public paper. All such stories in the papers are the stories of men who either did not know about what they were telling, or of witnesses themselves who are attempting to prejudice the investigation. This being an ex parte investigation, we thought it due to the rights of all that everything should be kept secret unless it was necessary to have it disclosed for the purpose of public justice. I for one, and in that I know I speak for my associates, have ever refused to give out a single item of any kind of information, although the attempt has been made to cross-examine me by gentlemen of the press in their ardor and enterprise after news.

But I do want to say here that of the testimony given so far before the committee there is not one substantial word of truth in the reported testimony of Colonel Cooper, as published in the National Intelligencer. I do not say what he did testify. But I do say that he did not upon his oath testify what is there reported in substantial fact.

One thing further. Your committee have been attacked because of what has been claimed to be a wholesale seizure of telegrams. Sir, no such wholesale seizure of telegrams has been made. We have done this, which is, in my judgment, exactly according to the law of the land, exactly within the power of this House; exactly within the power of any court of justice; we sent our subpoena duces tecum to the telegraph offices, asked them to bring their dispatches, and asked the managers of the offices, either at our rooms or at home, and select certain telegrams of parties named or unnamed, as well as we could designate them.

The reason why we had to go pretty broadly in our selection was that the corrupt rascals engaged in this nefarious business used all manner of feigned names; "Hooker," "Bismarck, jr.," "Prescott," "Potter," &c. "Hooker" means sometimes Woolley; "Bismarck, jr." sometimes means Woolley; "Prescott" means Sam Ward, and "O" means Sam Ward; "Potter" means McCulloch. And there were a dozen other aliases, ciphers, which we had to investigate.

And allow me to say it was not necessary so to do—but if it had been necessary, in my judgment it was the right, nay, it was the duty of the House of Representatives—to take in every telegram in every office in the country and examine it for the purposes of justice, and of that no honest man would complain. There is a couplet of my namesake, Anthony of H-dibras, I believe, applicable here:

"No rogue e'er felt the halter draw
With good opinion of the law."

Therefore, when we struck these telegrams there was a great fluttering. Among whom? Among the gold gamblers; among the whisky gamblers; among the corrupt confederates who admit that they met and consulted how Senators' votes could be bought. No honest, true man complains or fears the investigation.

Sir, whatever may be the result of this investigation, one thing is quite certain: we have now demonstrated to this country that there has been a corrupt conspiracy to buy Senators. And if it has failed, it has failed not for want of the corrupt purpose and intent of the people I have named, but because there was too much virtue in the Senate. But upon the question of that failure or success it does not become me here and now to express any opinion. The people of the country must and will form their opinions for themselves.

The unfortunate result, a result humiliating to every American, of this investigation has been to show that there were men ready, high Government officials, to meet together, to receive, and to entertain propositions, to consult upon the question, and to reply to the question how Senators could be bought; that state of things is shown by the evidence reported beyond all peradventure, beyond all doubt. How far they have succeeded in their corrupt designs may or may not be shown; that is another portion of this investigation which is not yet concluded. We may be able to show it; if so, we can find what this man Woolley did with his money.

Let me now call the attention of the House to where this money of Woolley's came from. Mr. Woolley and Mr. E. D. Webster and Mr. Sheridan Shook met at the Astor House about the 4th day of May, and they advised with Mr. Thurlow Weed, upon Thurlow Weed's own testimony, as to how Senators' votes could be purchased by money. Mr. Weed said that he did not think much of the scheme. He does not tell us that he advised against it upon any ground except that it was not feasible. Weed, Sheridan Shook, Webster, Woolley are there in consultation on this subject. Woolley is in correspondence with Warden, the President's Private Secretary. Woolley comes here and on the 6th of May telegraphs to Shook. What? "My business is adjusted; put ten to my credit at Gilliss, Harney & Co." Ten what? He swears it was $10,000. He sent for it under the name of "Hooker," a cipher, to Shook. Somebody does put $10,000 to the credit of Woolley at Gilliss, Harney & Co., in New York, and Woolley draws against it. He takes $10,000 in $1,000 bills. On the same day he draws on Cincinnati and gets $5,000 more. Two days afterward he draws on Sheridan Shook by the name of Hooker, saying to him "Five more must be had—may be absolutely necessary." At the same time he telegraphs to Thurlow Weed, "Is the Albany party ready for business," and Thurlow Weed sends down the Albany party for business. They got their money through Gilliss, Harney & Co. by the efforts of Shook, and the Albany party comes to Washington ready for business, whereupon we have the telegram from Woolley that goes, "Impeachment has gone higher than a kite."

Now then, sir, under those circumstances we looked at these telegrams, which were brought us and we found this remarkable state of facts: that every gambler, every gold speculator, every one plundering the public knew what the votes of Senators would be and that no man who was an honest friend of the country did know what the votes would be.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. BUTLER. For what?

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I wish to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Massachusetts. I desire to know whether one of the witnesses sworn before the committee, and to whom reference is made in the report read to the House, did not telegraph that "the impeachment was lost;" that the verdict would be for the President; and whether the witness did not base his opinion solely upon the length of the face of Manager BUTLER? [Laughter.] That that face indicated defeat, and he based his telegram upon that alone? Was not that the character of these telegrams? [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I will answer the question of the gentleman from Wisconsin. There is one Sam Ward, who, it is in evidence, dined with Woolley and Evarts and Groesbeck on Friday night, and at Welker's, who telegraphs to his son in New York on the 18th that "Potter," meaning McCulloch, would be quiet all this week, i. e., would not sell gold all this week; "defend my cause;" that is, buy me $50,000 in gold; "measure low enough;" that is, gold is low enough. Sam Ward, the morning of the vote in the Senate, telegraphs in these words—and perhaps I had better read them from the telegram. [Laughter.] I will read from the telegram of this man which has been brought out. He first telegraphed on the 4th of May, when "these men are consulting how to buy Senators in New York." "S. W. to Edmund Cooper. Will see you to-morrow early. S. W. to W. R."—somebody, I do not quite read the name, who had bet for conviction—"Hedge your bets."

On the 6th of May, the day that Woolley said his business was arranged, Sam Ward telegraphs S. M. Barlow, one of the later party associates of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Brooks:]

"All O. K., I think. Twice eleven sure."

That is, twice eleven makes twenty-two Senators sure. J. D. C. telegraphs to Sam Ward, same date, May 6:

"Are you quite positive the statement contained in your letters relative to particular person is correct?"

And Sam Ward telegraphed back on the same 6th of May:

"J. C. CRAIG: I have it from such various reliable sources that I would go to the bottomless pit for my belief."

And there is where he will go. [Laughter.]

On the morning after Sam Ward telegraphed to his brother gold gamblers in Wall street: "President's acquittal certain." This was at twelve o'clock and five minutes exactly, before the Senate had voted. He also sent this piece of important information:

"I just met BUTLER going along the corridor with a face as long as if Fort Fisher was not taken."

Now, I want to assure the gentleman from Wisconsin and the gentleman from New York that I felt when I learned the result just as I did when Fort Fisher was not taken. I felt that as great a calamity had befallen to this country by the efforts of this corrupt conspiracy, by purchasing of the judges of the highest tribunal of the land or other influences which prevented conviction, as when my army failed to take that stronghold of the rebellion; and my face, I have no doubt, had the same overcast of grief on both occasions. I felt as badly the failure of the one as the other, and I am as willing hereafter to be twitted by anybody for the failure of the one as of the other.

I did my duty to the best of my ability in both cases, and in both cases, in my belief, was overcome by the joint efforts of rebel enemies, corruption, imbecility, and fraud. Fort Fisher would have been taken and the President convicted, both equally necessary for the security of this country, but for the efforts and appliances of those equally the enemies of the country.

I was about saying, when I was interrupted by the gentleman from Wisconsin, that all these men seemed to know the fact of these votes for acquittal. The whole air was redolent with charges of corruption against the Senators. They taint the air. They flow over upon everybody. They flow even upon the Chief Justice. This Woolley expressly declares, in a telegram to his associate, that on the night of the 13th a meeting of Senators who voted for acquittal was held in Chief Justice Chase's house for the purpose of forming a new party. I had supposed that it was equally corrupt to have party bribes as to have money bribes for Senators' votes. I suppose a Senator can be as well bribed by being offered a Secretaryship of the Treasury under Andrew Johnson as by being paid $20,000 by Mr. Woolley under the darkness of night. Each might be a bribe to swerve either from his duty; therefore I desire that there should be an investigation as full, ample, and complete as the gentleman from New York can desire; so that the good name and fame of every true man may be cleared, and the guilt, if guilt there be, fasten itself upon the wicked and corrupt.

One word further in behalf of the committee upon the question of our use of the telegraph. No telegram that does not relate to this impeachment, directly or indirectly, as we believe, has been or will be published to the world.

Mr. BROOKS. Will the gentleman permit me to ask a question?

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

Mr. BROOKS. Has the gentleman brought up here George Wilkes's telegrams or Theodore Tilton's? Has he called for them? Has he got them?

Mr. BUTLER. To that I say, sir, I have never known any such act of disloyalty or dishonesty on the part of Theodore Tilton or George Wilkes as to lead me to investigate their affairs in any way or form. Every man is known by the company he keeps; and I only investigated, so far as I was concerned, the cases of those who from the very suspicious company they kept I thought were disloyal, and were willing to buy Senators or do anything else that God will permit bad men to do. Whenever I heard of such a man I wanted to see his telegrams, and the result is before the House.

Now, sir, I say again there need be no fear of any telegrams being exposed that ought not to be exposed. Let me say further, in justice to the committee, that every Government on earth has always held for itself the right to examine papers for its own protection. The British Government held to that right during the Chartist excitement, even to examine letters in its post office.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask another question?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I wish to know if he ever knew an instance in any parliamentary body where an investigation was had in which all the members of the committee were on one side of the question? In this case here is a question of impeachment. That, perhaps, is the central idea with which the gentlemen are pursuing the investigation. It is so said, at all events. Now, did the gentleman ever know an investigation in any parliamentary body where both sides were not represented? And can it be expected that a full and fair investigation should be had where all the members of the committee are of one way of thinking, where all of them believe, for instance, that Theodore Tilton is an upright and pure man and that Mr. Woolley is a disloyal and corrupt man? Would it not have been fairer if there had been somebody on the committee on the other side who was a friend of Mr. Woolley?

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin a single question. The question here is as to the bribery of Senators. Which side of that question is he on? Is he for bribery or against it? Yes, or no? [Laughter.]

Mr. ELDRIDGE. The gentleman is not quite fair in not answering my question first; but I will answer the gentleman's question as I understand it. I do not understand that this question is simply that which the gentleman states, because, if it were that, then the committee of managers would not be the proper committee to investigate it. The resolution which authorized them to do this work was put upon the ground that they were investigating still with reference to a further impeachment or trial.

Mr. BUTLER. I did not yield for a speech. I want an answer to my question. Which side are you on on the bribery question?

Mr. ELDRIDGE. If the gentleman asks me whether I am in favor of bribery, I do not suppose he is serious in asking the question. No one, I believe, ever made such a charge—

Mr. BUTLER. I do not charge it.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I do not suppose the gentleman means by implication to impute to me any such charge.

Mr. BUTLER. No, sir.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Then I do not think the gentleman desires that his question shall be answered. I certainly think that he would feel himself indignant and insulted if I put the question to him "Are you in favor of bribery?" I have made no imputation against the committee. I simply asked if it was fair to have a committee all upon one side of the question of impeachment.

Mr. BUTLER. Allow me now to answer exactly as I supposed the gentleman would answer. He is not in favor of bribery; I never supposed he was. Therefore all the committee are on the same side of the questions under investigation he is, every one. [Laughter.] And if we took the gentleman on the committee we should only have an enlarged committee all on one side of this question. [Laughter.]

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Well, now, the gentleman has answered his own question; I wish he would answer mine.

Mr. BUTLER. I cannot yield further. I was about saying simply this in regard to this idea of want of power for the seizure of telegrams, that we have done no more than may be done by every justice of the peace in the country; he may issue his subpoena duces tecum to the telegraph operator and call for such telegrams as he designates, whether by name or otherwise.

Mr. BAKER. Will the gentleman allow me one minute?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, I am impelled by a profound sense of duty to say one word, and that is that in my opinion it is a violation of public justice, where the object is to make an inquest of improper conduct or of corruption in regard to a high State trial, to deposit that inquest wholly in the hands of one party. I declare here that in my opinion it is a violation of the instincts of the Anglo-Saxon race and of the traditions of Anglo-Saxon liberty! I want corruptions exposed. I want them ferreted out. I want them brought to the light of day, and the men who are guilty of them scourged as they merit.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. BAKER. One word more and I am done. The investigation, so long as there is any inculpation existing, should be carried on. I am in favor of its going on. But in opposition, if need be, to all my party friends or to as many millions as could uplift their hands under the face of heaven, I protest against an ex parte inquest into great public transactions of this character. [Slight applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. Has the gentleman finished?

Mr. BAKER. Yes, sir; I have done.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman now answer me a question? Does he believe himself capable of conducting an investigation fairly?

Mr. BAKER. I should hope I would be capable of doing so if I were a member of an investigating committee.

Mr. BUTLER. I then have to say to the gentleman that if he thinks he can conduct an investigation fairly, he will accord to his associates here the same purpose and power of fairness. By the very stand he takes on this question he shows that he can do so, and will he not believe that his associates can do the same thing?

If this was a mere party matter, if this investigation affected party only, I would agree to ask party to come into the matter. But this rises above and beyond party. Sir, I have heard enough, and more than enough of charges about party in this matter. Whenever we on our side do anything about impeachment, the cry of "party" is at once raised; whenever they on the other side do anything about impeachment, it is "conscientious judgment." Whenever they vote against impeachment in solid phalanx, as they always do on every question, never failing, although some of their bread-and-butter is dependent upon their votes, that is "conscientious judgment." Whenever we vote for impeachment, to save the country and protect the liberties of the people, whether in this or the other House, that is "party." Whenever we investigate fraud, we are told we cannot do it because of "party." Whenever we propose to look after corruption, they get up and insist that their party will be injured unless they can have a representative of their party on their side of that question.

Mr. BAKER. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

Mr. BUTLER. I will yield no further.

Mr. BAKER. I wish to correct a misrepresentation.

Mr. BUTLER. I have made no misrepresentation.

Mr. BAKER. I only say I wish to lift this proceeding above party.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask that the vote be now taken.

The question was upon the resolution; and being taken, the resolution was adopted.

Mr. BINGHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McDONALD, its Chief Clerk, informed the House that the Senate had passed the joint resolution (H. R. No. 218) for the relief of John M. Palmer, with amendments, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

HOOR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. BINGHAM. I move that the rules be suspended, and that it be ordered that the hour of meeting to-morrow be eleven o'clock a. m. I make this motion in order that if the warrant of the Speaker shall reach the witness Woolley he may be heard at once at the bar of the House without any delay. At twelve o'clock precisely the House will be called upon to attend at the bar of the Senate.

The question was taken; and (two thirds voting in the affirmative) the motion was agreed to.

SEIZURE OF PRIVATE PAPERS.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution for consideration at this time.

Mr. BEAMAN and others objected.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Then I move that the rules be suspended, in order that I may submit for consideration the following resolution:

Resolved, That it was not the purpose or intention of this House to authorize the committee of managers, and it hereby denies the power or authority of said managers, under the Constitution, to require persons called before them as witnesses to produce or give evidence with reference to their personal and private papers; and that, in the opinion of this House, private and personal telegrams are within the provision of article four of the amendments to the Constitution, which provides that—

"The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched and the persons or things to be seized."

And that any violation of the rights intended to be secured by said article is an outrage upon personal liberty which no free people can tolerate or submit to.

The question was upon the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. BLAINE. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE. If the House shall now adjourn, will this motion to suspend the rules come up to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. It will come up on Monday next after the morning hour.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Is it in order to move to adjourn pending a motion to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. Pending a motion to suspend the rules a motion to adjourn is in order.

CONSTITUTION OF GEORGIA.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a message from the President of the United States, concerning the constitution of the State of Georgia; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Reconstruction.

ONEOTA AND CATAWBA.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a message from the President of the United States, in regard to the sale of the Oneota and Catawba; which was referred to the Committee on Retrenchment, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ELDRIDGE demanded the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 81, nays 21, not voting 87; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Beaman, Benton, Blaine, Blair, Boutwell, Bromwell, Cake, Cary, Churchill, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Dixon, Dodge, Driggs, Ela, Eliot, Ferriss, Ferry, Fields, Garfield, Gravely, Hardin, Higby, Hooper, Hopkins, Chester D. Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Julian, Kelsey, Kitchin, Koontz, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Loughridge, Lynch, Mallory, McCarthy, McClurg, Mercer, Myers, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Pike, Polesy, Raum, Robertson, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Smith, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Stokes, Taffe, Taylor, Trowbridge, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, William Williams, James F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—81.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Boyer, Brooks, Burr, Eldridge, Getz, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Grover, Johnson, Jones, Kerr, Knott, Marshall, McCormick, Morgan, Pruyn, Randall, Ross, Taber, and Lawrence S. Trimble—21.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, Archer, Axtell, Bailey, Barnes, Burnum, Beatty, Beck, Benjamin, Bingham, Bromall, Buckland, Butler, Chanler, Cook, Cornell, Covode, Cullom, Dawes, Donnelly, Eckley, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Finney, Fox, Griswold, Haight, Halsey, Hawkins, Hill, Holman, Hotchkiss, Asahel H. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Judd, Kelley, Ketcham, Lincoln, Logan, Marvin, Maynard, McCullough, Miller, Moore, Moorhead, Morrill, Morrissey, Mullins, Mungen, Newcomb, Niblack, Nicholson, Nunn, Peters, Phelps, Pile, Plants, Poland, Pomeroy, Price, Robinson, Selye, Shanks, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Spalding, Thaddeus Stevens, Stewart, Stone, Thomas, John Trimble, Twiehell, Van Aernam, Van Auker, Van Trump, Van Wyck, Ward, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Henry D. Washburn, Welker, Thomas Williams, John T. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Wood, and Woodward—87.

So the motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at four o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow at eleven o'clock a. m.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. ANDERSON: The petition of Sarah E. Herring, asking the passage of an act authorizing the Second Auditor to consider the public property chargeable to her husband, Captain George L. Herring, deceased, late captain company E, third regiment Missouri State militia, as properly accounted for.

By Mr. BANKS: The memorial of the American Geographical and Statistical Society of New York city, praying that the earliest possible action be taken to secure a proper survey of the coast and territory of Alaska by the officers of the Coast Survey and others.

By Mr. CAKE: The petition of 56 miners and citizens of Schuylkill county, Pennsylvania, praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petitions of 348 coal-miners in Schuylkill county, Pennsylvania, setting forth that owing to foreign competition their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 111 workers in Weimer's Machine Works, Lebanon, Pennsylvania, setting forth that owing to foreign competition their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 68 iron-workers in Lebanon county, Pennsylvania, setting forth that owing to foreign competition their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

By Mr. ELIOT: The petition of Niles Tilden and others, cigar manufacturers of New Bedford, Massachusetts, relating to tax on cigars.

By Mr. GARFIELD: The petition of Mrs. Mary A. Lovel, widow of Colonel R. S. G. Lovel, for an increase of pension.

By Mr. GETZ: The petition of John Shaffer and 77 others, iron-workers at Reading, Pennsylvania, setting forth that owing to foreign competition their industry is greatly depressed, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 97 iron-workers in Reading, Pennsylvania, setting forth that owing to foreign competition their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of A. C. Oaks and 64 others, iron-workers in Reading Hardware Works, setting forth that, owing to foreign competition, their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 92 iron-workers at Birdsborough, Pennsylvania, setting forth that, owing to foreign competition, their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 116 iron-workers in Berks county, Pennsylvania, complaining of the depression of industry, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 19 iron-workers of Berks county, Pennsylvania, praying that Congress will resume consideration of the tariff bill which failed in the House March, 1867, and enact it into a law at the earliest practicable moment.

By Mr. GLOSSBRENNER: The petition of 53 workers in iron at Pine Grove furnace and forge, in the State of Pennsylvania, setting forth that, owing to foreign competition, their industry is greatly depressed and many of their trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, a memorial of 23 cigar manufacturers, journeymen cigar-makers, and dealers in cigars, citizens of York county, Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the proposed change of rate of tax upon cigars from five dollars to ten dollars per thousand.

By Mr. INGERSOLL: The protest of R. L. Wilson and 50 others, late officers in the Army, against the passage of a certain bill respecting bounties.

Also, the petition of Z. Jones and several others, late employés in the commissary department of Washington, District of Columbia, praying for the additional pay of twenty per cent.

Also, the petition of Catharine Bauman, of Washington, District of Columbia, praying for the payment of $17,800 for damages to her property for which she claims the United States Government is liable.

By Mr. JOHNSON: A memorial of the Legislature of the State of California, asking an appropriation for the improvement of the harbor of San Diego.

Also, a memorial in relation to the Mendocino Indian reservation.

Also, a joint resolution in regard to the illegal arrest of American citizens.

Also, a memorial asking an appropriation to complete the survey of the public lands in California.

Also, a joint resolution asking the removal of the tax on California grape brandy.

Also, a memorial asking indemnity for property destroyed by Indians.

Also, a memorial asking that railroad lands in California be open to settlement.

Also, a memorial praying the erection of a light-house, &c.

Also, a memorial asking a grant of lands in the construction of a southern railroad to the Pacific.

Also, a memorial asking aid in the construction of a railroad in California.

Also, a memorial asking aid in the construction of certain roads in California.

By Mr. JULIAN: The petition of sundry postmasters in Wayne and Randolph counties, in Indiana, praying a change in mail route 12064, with corresponding mail service.

By Mr. KERR: A memorial of L. H. Willard, F. A. Merrill, and Joseph Holland, for a bill to authorize the registry of the bark Carlotia as an American vessel.

By Mr. KOONTZ: The petition of 95 iron-workers in Hopewell, Pennsylvania, setting forth that, owing to foreign competition, their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 79 coal-workers at Six Mile Run, Pennsylvania, setting forth that, owing to foreign competition their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 85 workers in Caledonia iron works at Graeffenburg, Adams county, Pennsylvania, setting forth that, owing to foreign competition, their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of John Hanna, and 59 others, citizens of Harnetsville and vicinity in Somerset county, Pennsylvania, engaged in farming and other trades, complaining of the depression of industry, and praying for such increase of protective duties as will revive manufactures and restore prosperity to the country.

By Mr. LAWRENCE, of Pennsylvania: The petition and document of Bryan Tyson, for additional allowance for carrying mails.

By Mr. MERCUR: The petition of 105 workers in iron, in Columbia county, Pennsylvania, setting forth that, owing to foreign competition their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 111 iron-workers in Danville, Pennsylvania, setting forth that, owing to foreign competition, their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of Michael Treacy and 106 others, iron workers in Bloomburg, Pennsylvania, setting forth that, owing to foreign competition, their industry is greatly depressed and praying for additional protective duties.

By Mr. PAINE: A memorial of Charles May, relating to certain lands in the city of Milwaukee.

By Mr. PERHAM: The petition of Thomas C. Chick, colonel first Massachusetts cavalry, for pension.

Also, the petition of Frederick Denning, father of William F. Denning, late second lieutenant company F, ninth regiment Maine infantry, for pension.

By Mr. RANDALL: The petition of 101 workers in brass and iron in Philadelphia, setting forth that, owing to foreign competition, their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of William Bagshaw and 18 others, workers in various industries in Philadelphia, praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 44 paper manufacturers of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 42 factory-workers in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of W. W. Steel and others, workers in sheet-iron and tin in Philadelphia, complaining of the depression of manufacturing industry, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of J. W. Loraine and 41 workers in the Vulcan Iron Works at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, complaining of the depression of industry, and praying for additional protective duties.

By Mr. SCOFIELD: The petition of Gustave A. Ebish and 42 others, workers in iron at Erie, Pennsylvania, praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of W. J. Watkins and 34 others, citizens of Erie, Pennsylvania, praying for such increase of protective duties as will revive manufactures and restore prosperity to the country.

By Mr. WILLIAMS, of Pennsylvania: The petition of 228 workers in the manufacture of soda in Alleghany county, Pennsylvania, setting forth that, owing to foreign competition their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 50 workers in Alleghany City Works, in Alleghany county, Pennsylvania, praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of William Hughes and 40 others, iron-workers, in Armstrong county, Pennsylvania, setting forth that, owing to foreign competition their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 93 citizens of Freeport, Pennsylvania, setting forth that the productive interests of the country are suffering and its industry paralyzed for want of efficient protection against the cheaper labor and capital of other countries; that much of the distress now prevalent and daily increasing would be relieved by the tariff bill (as passed by the Senate) which failed in the House, March, 1867, for want of time, and praying that Congress will resume reconsideration of that measure and enact it into a law at the earliest practicable moment.

Also, the petition of 49 operatives in the Anchor cotton mills of Alleghany city, Pennsylvania, setting forth that, owing to foreign competition, their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 55 workers in the Craigsville and Buffalo woolen mills, at Worthington, Armstrong county, Pennsylvania, setting forth that, owing to foreign competition, their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of iron-workers in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, setting forth that, owing to foreign competition, their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of workers in Singer, Nimick & Co.'s steel works, West Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, setting forth that owing to foreign competition their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 54 workers in Lindsay and McClutcheon's rolling mill, Alleghany, Pennsylvania, setting forth that, owing to foreign competition, their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of Milton Maxwell and 52 others, citizens of Butler county, Pennsylvania, praying for such increase of protective duties as will revive manufactures and restore prosperity in the country.

Also, the petition of William R. Hamilton and 43 others, citizens of Mahoning township, Armstrong county, Pennsylvania, praying for such increase of protective duties as will revive manufactures and restore prosperity to the country.

Also, the petition of Robert A. Nesbit and 120 others, employes in the iron works of Lewis Bailey, Dalzell & Co., at Sharpsburg, Alleghany county, Pennsylvania, complaining of the depression of industry, and praying for such increase of protective duties as will relieve their distress, secure a home market for the products of their industry, and aid them in their unequal contest with the unpaid labor of Europe.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, May 26, 1868.

Prayer by Rev. E. H. GRAY, D. D.

IMPEACHMENT OF THE PRESIDENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore called the Senate to order, and at once vacated the chair that it might be occupied by the Chief Justice. The Senate sitting for the trial of the impeachment having adjourned,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore resumed the chair at eight minutes before two o'clock p. m.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of War, communicating, in obedience to law, a statement of contracts made by the quartermaster's department during the month of April, 1868; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of the Interior, communicating information in relation to recent raids and outrages upon citizens of Texas and in the Chickasaw nation by bands of Indians belonging to the Kiowa and Comanche tribes; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. SHERMAN called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 19, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Buckalew, Cameron, Dixon, Doolittle, Edwards, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, McCreery, Norton, Patterson of Tennessee, Ramsey, Saulsbury, Sumner, Tipton, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Vickers—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Cattell, Cole, Conkling, Conness, Corbett, Cragin, Davis, Drake, Ferry, Fessenden, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Harlan, Howe, Morgan, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Nye, Patterson of New Hampshire, Pomeroy, Ross, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Thayer, Wade, Willey, Williams, and Wilson—31.

ABSENT—Messrs. Chandler, Grimes, Howard, and Yates—4.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. EDMUNDS presented the petition of Mary C. Lane, praying compensation for property taken from her by the military forces of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WILLEY presented a petition of citizens of Texas, praying the removal of the political disabilities imposed upon Horace Taylor, of that State, by acts of Congress; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of John Sheets, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of Washington J. F. Martin, praying to be allowed arrears of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MORTON presented a memorial of members of the General Assembly of the State of Ohio, protesting against the erection of bridges across the Ohio river having a span less than five hundred feet; which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. WILSON presented a petition of officers and members of the constitutional convention of Mississippi, praying the removal of civil disabilities imposed upon Joseph Lemby, a citizen of that State, by acts of Congress; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of colored citizens of South Carolina, praying a removal of the political disabilities imposed upon James Johnson and Hugh Craig, citizens of that State, by acts of Congress; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. RAMSEY presented the petition of Antoinette Darling, praying compensation for damages sustained in consequence of Indian depredations in Minnesota; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. DAVIS gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to facilitate the trial of questions of conflict of jurisdiction between the Government of the United States and the governments of the States; and questions of the constitutionality of all acts of Congress and of the Legislatures of any State by the Supreme Court of the United States.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BUSINESS.

Mr. HARLAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a resolution offered by me a few days since in relation to fixing a day for the consideration of District of Columbia business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the following resolution submitted by Mr. HARLAN on the 21st instant:

Resolved, That, until otherwise ordered, Friday of each week be set apart for the consideration of bills on the Calendar relating to the District of Columbia.

Mr. CONNESS. I move to amend that by fixing one Friday. I think one day a week is a little too much. I will say Friday of this week.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I desire to take advantage of the discussion of this resolution to propound a question to the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia in the hearing of the Senate. I wish to inquire what the law or the understanding is in reference to the duty of Congress to keep Pennsylvania avenue in order; whether it is to be done by Congress or by the city of Washington; and if it is to be done by Congress or the nation, whether the committee have any measure in contemplation for repairing that street?

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from Indiana, I will say that the jurisdiction over the avenues in Washington city has never been conferred on the corporation of Washington; consequently, I suppose, the control of Pennsylvania avenue is under Congress. There are, I believe, petitions before the Committee on the District of Columbia of the Senate for the repair of Pennsylvania avenue; I am sure there are for the repair of several other avenues; and one member of the committee has a bill under consideration now contemplating the paving of one or two of the avenues. There is, however, nothing fully matured on that subject, I think.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on taking up the resolution of the Senator from Iowa for consideration.

Mr. MORTON. I desire to make one statement in this connection. I believe that that street, the principal street in this city, one used to a greater or less extent by all persons connected with the Government and visitors, is, when you consider its length, the worst street in the United States. Certainly between here and the Treasury Department it is a torture to ride over it in a carriage, and there is no comfort in passing over it except in the street cars. It seems to me that if the jurisdiction belongs to the Government of the United States, and the city of Washington is under no obligation or has no right to repair that street, it would be proper that some measure should be presented for the purpose of having it put in repair. It is now full of holes, endangering the springs of any carriage to pass over it faster than a walk; and by next spring, another winter intervening, it will be almost impassable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa, to take up for consideration the resolution submitted by him.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California, [Mr. CONNESS.]

Mr. VAN WINKLE. Will an amendment to that resolution be in order now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is an amendment pending.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. That was offered before it was taken up. I will suggest my amendment, however, and the Senator from California will see whether it conforms to his views. It is, instead of his amendment, to insert after the words "bills relating to the District of Columbia," the words "and private bills;" so that each Friday will be set apart for the consideration of bills relating to the District of Columbia and private bills.

Mr. CONNESS. That would not be enough of time; because nine tenths of the business we do here would be regarded as private bills, and it would be a proposition to change the whole practice of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the amendment be reported. It does not seem to be germane to the proposition as it stands. The pending amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is moved to amend the resolution so as to read:

That Friday next be set apart for the consideration of bills on the Calendar relating to the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on this amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Now, does the Senator from West Virginia offer an amendment?

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I cannot offer mine now because the resolution sets apart only one Friday.

The resolution, as amended, was adopted.

PERSONAL EXPLANATIONS—IMPEACHMENT.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, you will bear me witness that I very seldom deem it necessary to obtrude upon the Senate anything of a personal nature; and I should not do so now were it not that my name has been very improperly connected with a charge brought against another person, a personage of the highest character and the incumbent of a great office. My attention has been called to an article in a Washington newspaper that ought to know better, copied originally, I believe, from a New York paper, in which it is stated that latterly I dined with the Chief Justice, and that thereafter he was closeted with me for three hours plying me with arguments against the conviction of the President. Whether for a Senator to dine with the Chief Justice is an offense of sufficient magnitude to call down the animadversions of the press, and whether it be a crime for a Senator who is a trier in a case to consult with the Chief Justice whom the Constitution makes the presiding officer in the trial, are questions not necessary to be considered in this connection, inasmuch as the whole story is a fabrication without the slightest possible foundation. I have not had the honor to dine with the Chief Justice during all this session of Congress, nor have I been closeted with him, nor have I had any consultation, nor has he adduced any argument whatever to influence my vote in the trial just concluded.

Mr. President, I have been a journalist for a great while, from a period that antedates the service of almost all those who are now engaged in that honorable profession. Familiar with all its vexations, than which perhaps there is none greater than the difficulty, often almost the impossibility of verifying statements of fact in season to be available, and experienced in the trouble which an editor or a correspondent often has, even with the best intentions and with the most painstaking care in avoiding grave misstatements of fact, I am quick to extend to the errors of others that charitable construction which I have often required for my own; but for a statement of this kind, utterly without foundation, I can find no excuse; and as I hold the profession of journalism in high honor and esteem, I am mortified at the uses to which it has been degraded in certain quarters, where better things might have been expected, during this trial. That kind of journalism, Mr. President, that penetrates into dining-rooms and listens at keyholes should at least have the merit of a tolerable degree of accuracy in its statements. It is sufficiently offensive to all decent men even when it does not season impertinence with calumny and add falsehood to malignity.

Mr. WILLEY. Lest my silence, after the remarks which have been made by the Senator from Rhode Island, should be misconstrued, I deem it proper to make a remark. So far as I am individually concerned, although I have been the recipient of a liberal share of misrepresentation and misrepresentation for a great many years, I have never deemed it proper to notice it; but since my name has been connected with that of the honorable Senator from Rhode Island in several of those interviews, and a great deal of that dining and private conference with the Chief Justice, lest it should be inferred by my silence that there was some truth in it with respect to me if I did not rise and deny it, I desire to say that in reference to myself there is not one word of truth in it from the beginning to the end. It is due to the Chief Justice to say that he never had a word of conversation with me upon this trial, nor I with him directly or indirectly; that I have not been inside his house since this trial commenced; that there has been no overture, directly or indirectly, on his part to me or on my part to him. I not only have not been there myself, and I have not only had no conference with him, but I know of no Senator who has. Lest that distinguished gentleman may be implicated in some manner or form by my silence on this subject, under existing circumstances, I have thought it necessary to make this statement. So far as I myself am concerned, I hold in utter contempt all that fraternity that cut these falsehoods out of the whole cloth.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I wish to say, since this subject has been broached, that I have never exchanged a single word with the Chief Justice of the United States on the subject of the impeachment trial; that I have not dined at his house nor been within his doors certainly for more than a year and a half, and that I have received no letters from him in relation to the subject. The only conversation I had with him was when we met in the corridor, during the recess, when he said "How do you do?" [Laughter.]

NATIONAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. If these personal explanations are through, I move to take up Senate bill No. 286.

Mr. JOHNSON rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the bill be read by its title.

Mr. JOHNSON. If the honorable member will permit me to say a word after the bill is taken up, of course I have no objection.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. Certainly.

The Chief Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (S. No. 286) to incorporate the National Life Insurance Company of the United States of America.

The motion was agreed to.

PERSONAL EXPLANATIONS—IMPEACHMENT.

Mr. JOHNSON. With the permission of my friend from New Hampshire, in consequence of what has fallen from my honorable friend from Rhode Island, I deem it proper, not with a view to vindicate myself, but for the purpose of doing justice to others, that I should say a word in relation to some of those calumnies—whether designed or not, still calumnies. On the day when we were in conclave deliberating among ourselves upon the case of the President, it so happened that upon my expressing a wish to return in the car to the honorable member from Missouri, [Mr. HENDERSON,] and receiving an answer from him that he had been invited by the Chief Justice to go in a carriage with himself and the member from Rhode Island behind me [Mr. SPRAGUE] he invited me with the consent, or rather the Chief Justice invited me through one of the party, and we went together in an open barouche, drove down the avenue until we got to Sixth street, I believe, and up Sixth street. When we reached the house of the Chief Justice, he very politely asked me to stay and dine. The Senate had adjourned to meet at half past seven. I was so situated at home, having some persons there whom I wished to see who were going off in the cars, that I declined, and declined with regret, his invitation to partake of a family dinner. The honorable member from Missouri, however, having no family now, was able to stay, and I take it for granted that he dined there. The next morning, or I think that day, as I understand, from this Senate Chamber, a journalist who indulges in a sporting magazine writes home, either by mail or by telegram, that on that day there dined with the Chief Justice the honorable member from Illinois, [Mr. TRUMBULL,] the honorable member from Maine, [Mr. FESSENDEN,] I think the honorable member from Tennessee, [Mr. FOWLER,] the honorable member from Missouri, [Mr. HENDERSON,] and myself, and the subject of conversation was not only the disposition to be made of the impeachment, but the necessity, looking to the public good, of organizing a new party. Now, I do not know what organization my friend behind me [Mr. SPRAGUE] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENDERSON] made; but so far as relates to the others who were alleged to be present, there was not one word of truth in it. The man who wrote the letter fancied, I understand, that immediately in the rear of the carriage of the Chief Justice—I believe the carriage belongs to the honorable member from Rhode Island behind me—there was a hack, engaged by the Chief Justice to take these would-be conspirators who were aiming to defeat both parties by organizing some new party; that that was the object of the dinner. Four of them were in one, and four of us in another, which made eight, a comfortable dinner party. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. President, all joking apart, it is due to the credit of the Senate, to the reputation of the nation, that men who indulge in such slanders should receive the reproof of all honorable men, wherever they may be, and never be suffered to pollute this Chamber by their presence.

As to the opinions of the Chief Justice, they are not better known to me than they are to everybody else. What his opinions were in relation to the impeachment, if he had any decided opinions, and what were the reasons which led him to adopt such opinions, are unknown to me. I had my own. I had no desire to consult with him; and I know the gentleman to whom I have referred so well as to be satisfied that they not only needed no consultation with him, but that they would not have invited any or permitted any if he had asked it for the purpose of influencing their judgment.

A paper here in our midst, edited by one of the officers of this body, a gentleman of whom I do not desire to speak unkindly, because he has always, so far as I know, spoken kindly of me, has assailed, with a bitterness that I have never seen equaled, the members of the Senate, and denounced the body in advance if they should dare to pronounce the President not guilty of these charges. They have dared; and whatever may be the excited feeling of the hour, without meaning to call in question the rectitude of the Senators who differed from us, I have no doubt that hereafter—and a hereafter soon to come—the public judgment will be pronounced at least to the extent of saying that what they did they did from conscientious conviction; that what they did was the result of their calm and deliberate consideration of the law and the evidence; and that they were bold enough, defiant enough of all efforts to control them in the discharge of a judicial duty, finally to decide as they did decide, and the result of which has been the termination of this prosecution.

Mr. CONNESS. If this is to be a general debate I should like to know what the question is that is before us.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland rose to a privileged question.

Mr. CONNESS. If the honorable Senator is engaged in a personal explanation, of course he has a right to make that; but I do not understand his to be a personal explanation.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not know that the Senator has the right to call me to order. I am not out of order. The Senate can decide whether the debate is out of order. What I have said, and it is all I propose to say, is to denounce—that cannot be out of order; I am sure with that the honorable member from California (if he values his own honor, as I am sure he does, as highly as I value mine) would not find fault—to denounce all efforts, coming from whatever quarter they may, designed to call in question the honor and the parity of any member of this body.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I desire to say a word, sir, not for the purpose of explaining anything with regard to myself, for I have no explanation to make and no apologies to offer to anybody. I have noticed a great many articles in the newspapers with regard to myself, in the course of this trial, charging me with divers things. All I have to say about them is that they are all false, every one of them; I have not seen a truth among them, or anything approaching a truth; and inasmuch as on a careful examination of the newspapers of my State I find that they do not, in the columns of any paper of any party, meet with the slightest credit or the slightest attention in any way, it is unnecessary for me to make any explanation about them. I stand upon my character, and I suppose that will take care of itself.

I wish, however, to say a word in regard to a particular story, and that is this story about the dinner at the Chief Justice's. I should be very happy to dine with him on any occasion, and I have received many invitations at one time and another to dine with the Chief Justice, some of which I have accepted in years gone by; but it so happens that at this session I have not had the honor of dining with the Chief Justice at all, nor have I had any consultation with him, directly or indirectly, with reference to this trial, nor have I had one word with him on the subject of any political party or on the subject of his being a candidate for the Presidency. The only thing that the Chief Justice ever said to me with regard to his being a candidate was said when I was Secretary of the Treasury—I think it was about that time or just before—when he said he had no desire to be a candidate for the office of President of the United States. What his own private wishes may be I do not know; but they were never communicated to me in any shape, and I never had any conversation with him—for what reason I do not know, if he had any such; perhaps because it was perfectly well known that I have always from the beginning been in favor of the nomination of the distinguished officer who is now the nominee of the Republican party; perhaps because there was no desire that I should take any sort of interest in the matter one way or the other; perhaps because the Chief Justice entertained no such wishes; it is not for me to say; but it so happens that, although personally intimate with him, and having been so for a long time, he never opened his mouth to me on the subject of the Presidency at all.

Now, sir, with regard to that story, I do not know how it arose, but I wish simply to say, as other gentlemen have said, that there is not one particle of truth in it from beginning to end; and what I rose for was to clear him of any imputation of having in any way had any conversation with me at any time upon that or any kindred subject or the subject of this trial. Having said thus much, I have nothing to say for myself.

Mr. HOWE. I rise simply to say that I am quite sure the country will hear with unfeigned satisfaction that the honorable Senator from Maine has ceased dining with the Chief Justice, and that he is to-day, as he has been all along, in favor of the election of the very distinguished officer who has recently been nominated for President of the United States.

Mr. RAMSEY. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The question being put, there were on a division—yeas 23, noes 21.

Mr. ANTHONY. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 23, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cameron, Cattell, Cole, Conness, Davis, Doolittle, Drake, Frelinghuysen, Henderson, Hendricks, Howe, Johnson, McGreevy, Norton, Nye, Patterson of Tennessee, Ramsey, Saulsbury, Sumner, Tipton, Van Winkle, and Vickers—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Conkling, Corbett, Graggin, Ferry, Fessenden, Harlan, Morgan, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Patterson of New Hampshire, Ross, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Thayer, Wade, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—21.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Chandler, Dixon, Edmunds, Fowler, Grimes, Howard, Morton, Pomeroy, and Trumbull—10.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 26, 1868.

The House met at eleven o'clock a.m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PROTECTION OF AMERICAN CITIZENS IN HAYTI.

Mr. CHANLER. Mr. Speaker, if in order, I should like to offer these resolutions for executive information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the President be, and hereby is, requested to inform this House why a competent naval force was not cruising in the neighborhood of Port-au-Prince, Hayti, to protect the flag of the United States from insult and our citizens from the outrages committed against them by the Government of Hayti in the last revolution, reported by telegraph as having taken place there.

Resolved, That the thanks of this House are due to Admiral Philimore, of the British navy, for the prompt relief afforded by him to our minister resident at Hayti, as also for the protection given our flag.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Those resolutions should go to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. CHANLER. I have no objection that they should take that reference if the chairman of the committee will act upon it at once. For, sir, it is a matter of great importance that this House and the country should know why this Government is at the mercy of the British navy for the protection of our flag and our citizens at Port-au-Prince. I do not think delay is consistent with the honor or the interest of this Government. I do not see the advantage to be gained by delay. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his motion and let the resolutions be acted on at once.

The SPEAKER. It has not been the usage to pass a vote of thanks without reference to some committee.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I have no objection to the first resolution, but the second ought to be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The first resolution was adopted, and the second one was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

J. M. HUTCHINGS AND J. C. LAMON.

Mr. JULIAN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, by unanimous consent, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1118) to confirm to J. M. Hutchings and J. C. Lamon their preemption claims in the Yosemite valley, California; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was recommitted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RECUSANT WITNESS.

The SERGEANT-AT-ARMS appeared at the bar of the House, accompanied by Mr. Charles W. Woolley, and said: I have executed the warrant of the House upon the body of Charles W. Woolley, and now have him at the bar of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Sergeant-at-Arms reports that he has executed the order of the House, and that the person named in the warrant is now at the bar of the House.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire that the Speaker shall ask the witness whether he is now ready to testify fully and truly all that may be asked of him.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I insist that that is not the proper course to be taken with reference to the gentleman now at the bar of the House. The question should not be whether he is now prepared to answer. I suppose the proper question to be whether he has any excuse to render for the conduct for which complaint was made against him.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the precedent, to be found on page 430 of the Journal of the second session of the Thirty-Fifth Congress, Mr. Orr, Speaker.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Mr. George Taylor submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to, namely:

Resolved, That John Cassin, esq., of the city of Philadelphia, now in custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms on an attachment for a contempt in refusing or neglecting obedience to the summons requiring him to appear and testify before a committee of the House, be now arraigned at the bar of this House, and that the Speaker propound to him the following interrogatories:

1. "What excuse have you for not appearing before the select committee of this House, in pursuance of the summons served on you on the 7th day of February, 1859?"

2. "Are you now ready to appear before said committee and answer such proper questions as shall be put to you by said committee?"

The SPEAKER. This is a case where a witness refused to appear: and a case where the witness refuses to testify is governed by the same rule. The usage is for the House to adopt a resolution covering the two points specified in the resolution just read from the Journal. If the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] offers a resolution of that character the Chair will submit it to the House.

Mr. BUTLER. I will offer a resolution following the precedent which has been read.

Mr. WOOLLEY. May I not be heard in my defense?

The SPEAKER. If the House should adopt the resolution the Chair will propound the questions to the person at the bar. He cannot be heard till the House adopts some resolution upon the subject.

Mr. BUTLER. On behalf of the managers I offer the following resolution, on which I demand the previous question:

Resolved, That Charles W. Woolley, esq., of the city of Cincinnati, Ohio, now in custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms on an attachment for a contempt in refusing or neglecting obedience to the summons requiring him to appear and testify before the committee of managers of the House, be now arraigned at the bar of this House, and that the Speaker propound to him the following interrogatories:

1. What excuse have you for refusing to answer before the managers of impeachment of this House, in pursuance of the summons served on you for that purpose?

2. Are you now ready to appear before said managers and answer such proper questions as shall be put to you by said managers of impeachment?

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

The SPEAKER. Mr. Charles W. Woolley, in accordance with the order of the House, I propound to you the following questions:

What excuse have you for refusing to answer before the managers of impeachment of this House, in pursuance of the summons served on you for that purpose?

Are you now ready to appear before said managers and answer such proper questions as shall be put to you by said managers of impeachment?

Mr. WOOLLEY. I am charged, Mr. Speaker, with being in contempt. I believe that is the charge against me. I wish to submit this paper to the House.

The SPEAKER. The answer is in writing, and will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the honorable the House of Representatives of the United States:

Charles W. Woolley respectfully represents: That he was on the evening of yesterday, the 25th instant, between the hours of seven and nine o'clock, taken in custody by the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House; that he has not been informed of the cause of his arrest otherwise than by hearing read to him the resolution of the House, by direction whereof the warrant for his arrest was issued, and that he has been unable to obtain a copy of the report of the managers, to which said resolution refers, as containing the specific "inquiries put to him in the course of the investigation," the alleged refusal to answer which is made the basis of the charge of contempt on which he is now arraigned at the bar of the House; that by the terms of said resolution said report is referred to as containing the specifications of the charge made against him, and without an opportunity to examine the same he is unable to answer in the premises.

Protesting, therefore, that he has in nothing been guilty of any contempt to this honorable body, but demeaned himself in regard thereto with proper courtesy and respect, that he has not evaded nor attempted to evade its process, and that he has fully answered all inquiries made of him by the committee of managers in regard to these matters with the investigation of which said committee was charged by the House, he humbly submits that he be allowed such reasonable time as the House may deem proper and just to examine said report and consult with counsel, in order that he may submit a full, explicit, and suitable answer in the premises.

C. W. WOOLLEY.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, this 25th day of May, 1868.

THOMAS J. WILLIAMS,
Justice of the Peace.

The SPEAKER. The answer of the witness is now before the House.

Mr. BUTLER. I respectfully submit that this is no answer to either of the interrogatories. It is an evasive argument—an argument evading the question, and, I believe, trifling with the House and with the committee.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I move that a copy of the report of the managers be furnished to the witness, Woolley, and that he have till to-morrow at twelve o'clock to answer. I make the motion to take till to-morrow because I suppose the House will be engaged after twelve o'clock to-day at the bar of the Senate. It is possible that an earlier period might answer. I think, however, that is no more than a reasonable time, and certainly it seems to me that the witness has stated a sufficient reason for not answering more fully than he has. It is apparent to those who heard that long report read that the particular question which he declined, or which the committee supposed he declined, to answer, will be found very difficult to be ascertained. I listened to the report, and I must say now that, notwithstanding I paid careful attention to it, I could not myself put my finger upon the particular thing which the gentleman is alleged to have refused to answer. I thought the report insufficient and that the resolution was wrong in itself at the time it was offered in requiring the witness to be arrested and brought before the House to answer, without having any opportunity of knowing what the particular default was that was charged against him.

Now, it is perfectly apparent that if he has labored under the belief that he has answered fully and fairly and has kept back nothing except such matters as he thinks he may have a right to withhold, he cannot answer without a knowledge of the facts stated in that report. It seems to me that it ought to have stated distinctly the particular question which he refused to answer, and that the report ought to have been given to him so that he might know wherein he was in contempt of this House. I should have suggested this yesterday, but the gentleman from Massachusetts persisted in demanding the previous question and allowing only such particular things to be said as he deemed proper. In all cases wherever I have known a witness to be arrested for contempt of court or of any parliamentary body, he has been allowed to know the precise thing which he refused to answer; and it seems to me now that the witness ought, at least, to have this report in order that he may gather, if possible, from the great mass of statements there made wherein he is in default. It is no more than reasonable that he should have that report, and have twenty-four hours within which to answer.

There is another fact suggested to me by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. KEAR,] that under our law a witness is not bound to criminate himself under any circumstances, and that if he be in the position which the gentlemen upon the committee charge this witness with being, of having been guilty of bribery or of an attempt at bribery, he has a right to have counsel upon that question in order that he may know just how far he is obliged to answer. The presumption of innocence applies, I apprehend, to a witness quite as much as it does to a criminal charged at the bar of a court. Sir, I know nothing of this case. I never spoke to this gentleman in my life. I have no acquaintance with him whatever. But I hope the House will give him the opportunity which any criminal at the bar of a court would have of preparing his answer, that he may answer advisedly and truly; that he may know the precise charge made against him, and answer, as he submits that he is ready and willing to do, when he shall be advised of what he is required to answer.

Mr. BUTLER obtained the floor.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to propound a question, or rather make a suggestion, to the honorable manager. Now, I grant that it is entirely beyond the power of a committee of this House to demand of any witness that he shall answer any and all questions that they may put to him. I do not think the managers have claimed or intend to claim that power, for I hope there is no American citizen who would not instantly and at all hazards resist so sweeping a demand by a committee of this House; but any and all questions pertaining directly or indirectly to any matter which the committee has been authorized by the House to investigate the witness must answer, and this House will not fail to punish a contumacious refusal. We are now asked to pass judgment upon the person at the bar of the House for refusing to answer. I desire to suggest that the manager shall state definitely, as I have no doubt he can, that specific question or general question which has been propounded to this witness and which he has refused to answer, but the House may judge both of the propriety of the question, and of the contumacy of the witness. For myself, I have no doubt of the propriety of the questions as reported yesterday by the managers, and if he refuses to answer I hope the House will punish him for contempt of its authority; but I am anxious that we shall at the same time vindicate the authority of this House and not assert a doctrine which will be oppressive to the individual citizens. I hope the honorable manager will state the specific question which the witness has refused to answer.

Mr. BUTLER resumed the floor.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Will the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] allow me to ask him a question in regard to what he has been saying?

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman from Ohio put a question to me, and I will endeavor to answer it. There seems to be some misapprehension in the mind of the gentleman, first as to the power of the House; secondly, as to the privileges of the witness; and thirdly, as to the course which, in my judgment, it is proper for the House to take. In the first place, the witness is called upon to answer any proper question—"proper" is the word; but I by no means concede, although it is not necessary for this purpose, that the House of Representatives have not a right to ask of any citizen, for the purpose of investigation, any question whatever, and the only party to be judge of the propriety of the question is the committee of this House subject to the order of the House. It is not for the witness to say "I will not answer, because it is not a proper question." Judgment must be with the committee in the first instance and with the House in the last. Therefore any question may be asked, and it is only to be met by the witness in a given way—not by refusing to answer—and that way, undoubtedly, will be advised.

Now, to the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. ELDRIDGE.] He says the witness cannot be bound to criminate himself by his answer. To that I reply that in 1857 a witness put himself upon this privilege in the case of the tariff investigation, as to bribery in the case of the tariff law, and Congress passed a law that it should be no excuse to any witness that his answer might tend to criminate him, and that he should never be indicted as to the subject-matter of which he was inquired of. Under that law Floyd, the defaulting Secretary of War, escaped indictment. Therefore, in 1863, Congress altered the law, providing that while the party may be indicted his answer shall not be given in evidence, and no paper which he produces and no testimony which he gives can be used against him, but he must answer.

Now, my friend from Ohio asks for the specific question, and the gentleman from Wisconsin asks that a copy of the report of his testimony may be given to the witness, in order that he may find out what questions he refused to answer. Does not he know as well as anybody on earth what he refused to do? Does he need a copy of anybody's report to tell him what he did?

In order, however, that the House may understand this matter, not admitting that it is at all necessary, and also that they may require the witness to answer specifically, I will read a portion of the testimony of Mr. Woolley:

"Question. Have you sent any telegrams from this city under a feigned name?"

"Answer. I have, sir; but not to—yes, I have.

"Question. What was that name?"

"Answer. I sent one under the name of 'Hooker,' and some under the name of 'Bismarck, junior,'

"Question. Under that feigned name did not you telegraph to have $10,000 put to your credit with the firm of Gilliss, Harney & Co., 24 Broad street?"

"Answer. Not that I recollect of."

"Question. To Sheridan Shook?"

"Answer. In regard to the impeachment trial? I decline to answer as to any dispatches not relating to the President's impeachment trial."

At this point the statute relating to the obligation of a witness to testify was read to the witness—the same statute to which the Speaker referred yesterday—making the refusal to testify punishable by a fine and imprisonment. The witness replied:

"Answer. I am willing to take the penalty. I refuse to answer, because I have sent no dispatch for Sheridan Shook to place $10,000 to my credit in New York, to be used in regard to the impeachment trial."

"Question. Do you still refuse to answer?"

"Answer. That is the answer. I say I have sent no dispatch to Sheridan Shook to place $10,000 to be used in the impeachment trial."

"Question. Did you on or about the 7th day of May, send a dispatch to Sheridan Shook, under the feigned name of 'Hooker,' to put $10,000 at your credit in the banking house of Gilliss, Harney & Co.?"

"Answer. Not for the purpose of being used in the impeachment trial."

"By Mr. WILSON:

"Question. Do you refuse to make any other answer than that which you have made?"

"Answer. I am willing to answer any question concerning the impeachment of the President. I have sent no dispatch to Sheridan Shook relating to the impeachment or conviction of the President of a criminal character."

"Question. Do you refuse to make any other answer than that?"

"Answer. I refuse to answer any question that does not relate—"

"Question. I ask you if you refuse to make any other answer?"

"Answer. I cannot say whether I refuse."

"Question. Will you make any other answer?"

"Answer. I do not say that I refuse."

"Question. Have you sent anything respecting impeachment at all?"

"Answer. Nothing at all, except as information; but nothing that looked directly or remotely to the purchase of any Senator."

"By Mr. BOUTWELL:

"Question. Will you read this dispatch aloud, if you please?"

"Answer. (Witness, looking at the dispatch.) That is not my dispatch, sir."

"Question. What do you say to the dispatch shown you?"

"Answer. I have no recollection of having sent it."

"Question. Did you send a dispatch to Sheridan Shook substantially of the purport of that?"

"Answer. Not to my recollection."

"By Mr. BUTLER:

"Question. Did you not, on the next day, draw on Gilliss, Harney & Co for the sum of $10,000?"

"Answer. Not to my recollection."

"Question. Have you not testified that you did so draw?"

"Answer. I do not think that I testified yesterday that I did."

"Question. Did you not state to the committee yesterday that you did so draw?"

"Answer. I deny your right to ask the question as to what I stated. I do not know what I stated yesterday."

"Question. Is not that dispatch in your handwriting?" [Dispatch exhibited.]

"Answer. Yes, sir; it is."

The dispatch was as follows:

May 6, 1868.

To SHERIDAN SHOOK, 83 Cedar street, New York:

My business is adjusted. Please ten to my credit to-day with Gilliss, Harney & Co., No. 24 Broad street.

HOOKER, Willard's.

"Question. What does the word 'ten' stand for?"

"Answer. As it does not relate to impeachment, I decline to answer."

"Question. Is this dispatch in your handwriting?" [Dispatch exhibited.]

"Answer. As that does not relate to impeachment, I decline to answer; as it does not relate to anything connected with the purchase of a senatorial vote in connection with impeachment, I decline to answer."

The dispatch was as follows:

May 16, 1868.

To JOHN S. C. BURT, St. Nicholas Hotel, New York:

Where is Washington? I will dine with Hancock to-night, or be at Fifth Avenue Hotel Sunday morning. And all right.

Answer. C. W. WOOLLEY.

I have given to the House these questions and answers to show how the witness treated the committee. I will now yield to my colleague, [Mr. BOUTWELL.]

Mr. BOUTWELL. I desire, if it be in accordance with the rules of the House, that the Speaker propound specifically to the party arraigned the last branch of the inquiry contained in the resolution adopted by the House, and upon his refusal to answer or upon any evasive answer whatever I shall offer the resolution which I send to the Chair, and thereupon shall demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The pending resolution is that of the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. ELDRIDGE.]

Mr. BOUTWELL. I move that that resolution be laid on the table.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. On that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. PRUYN. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The motion to lay on the table is not debatable.

Mr. PRUYN. I did not propose to debate it. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The resolution of the gentleman from Wisconsin, which was not reduced to writing, provides that a copy of the report be furnished to the witness and—

Mr. BOUTWELL. I rise to a question of order—whether, under the rules of the House, a resolution not in writing can be entertained.

The SPEAKER. It is too late now to raise that question. The resolution is before the House for consideration. The Chair was about to state orally the purport of the resolution. It is that a copy of the report be furnished to the witness, and that he be allowed till twelve o'clock to-morrow to answer, remaining in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

The question was taken on the motion to lay on the table; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 98, nays 29, not voting 67; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Beaman, Benton, Bingham, Blaine, Blair, Boutwell, Bromwell, Broomall, Butler, Calk, Churchill, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Covode, Dawes, Donnelly, Driggs, Elia, Eliot, Ferriss, Ferry, Fields, Garfield, Halsey, Harding, Higby, Hooper, Hopkins, Chester D. Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Judd, Julian, Kelsey, Ketcham, Kitchen, Koontz, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Logan, Loughbridge, Lynch, Mallory, Marvin, McCarthy, McClurg, Mercur, Moore, Moorhead, Morrill, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Pike, Pile, Plants, Poland, Polsley, Raum, Robertson, Scofield, Smith, Starkweather, Stokes, Taffe, Taylor, Thomas, John Trimble, Trowbridge, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Welker, Thomas Williams, William Williams, James F. Wilson, John T. Wilson, and Woodward—98.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Boyer, Brooks, Burr, Cary, Chanler, Eldridge, Getz, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Grover, Haight, Johnson, Jones, Kerr, Knott, Marshall, McCormick, McCullough, Morgan, Nicholson, Phelps, Pruyn, Randall, Ross, Sitgreaves, Taber, Lawrence S. Trimble, and Van Trump—29.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ames, Archer, Arnell, Axtell, Bailey, Banks, Barnes, Barnum, Beatty, Beck, Benjamin, Buckland, Cook, Cornell, Cullom, Dixon, Eckley, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Finney, Fox, Gravely, Griswold, Hawkins, Hill, Holman, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hubbard, Humphrey, Jencks, Kelley, Lincoln, Loan, Maynard, Miller, Morrissey, Mullins, Munger, Myers, Newcomb, Niblack, Nunn, Peters, Pomeroy, Price, Robinson, Sawyer, Schenck, Selye, Shanks, Shellabarger, Spaulding, Thaddeus Stevens, Stewart, Stone, Taffe, Van Aken, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Henry D. Washburn, Stephen F. Wilson, Wood, Woodward, and Woodward—67.

So the resolution of Mr. ELDRIDGE was laid on the table.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I wish to give notice that on the return of the House from the Senate I shall ask the House to resume this business, if it should not be disposed of before twelve o'clock to-day. I offer the following resolution, on which I demand the previous question:

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House again propose to C. W. Woolley the questions contained in the resolution this day adopted, and that said Woolley be informed that the House requires definite and explicit answers to the questions propounded to be made forthwith.

Mr. ROSS. I move that this resolution be laid on the table, and on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 28, nays 94, not voting 67; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Boyer, Burr, Chanler, Eldridge, Getz, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Grover, Haight, Hotchkiss, Johnson, Jones, Kerr, Knott, Marshall, McCormick, McCullough, Morgan, Nicholson, Phelps, Pruyn, Randall, Ross, Sitgreaves, Taber, Lawrence S. Trimble, and Van Trump—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Anderson, Arnell,

Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Beaman, Benton, Bingham, Blaine, Blair, Boutwell, Bromwell, Broomall, Butler, Calk, Churchill, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Covode, Dawes, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Elia, Eliot, Ferriss, Ferry, Fields, Garfield, Halsey, Harding, Higby, Hooper, Hopkins, Chester D. Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Judd, Julian, Kelsey, Ketcham, Koontz, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Logan, Logan, Lynch, Mallory, Marvin, Maynard, McCarthy, McClurg, Mercur, Moore, Morrill, Myers, Newcomb, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Pike, Pile, Plants, Poland, Polsley, Raum, Robertson, Scofield, Smith, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Stokes, Taylor, Trowbridge, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Welker, Thomas Williams, William Williams, James F. Wilson, John T. Wilson, and Woodward—94.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Archer, Axtell, Bailey, Banks, Barnes, Barnum, Beatty, Beck, Benjamin, Brooks, Buckland, Cary, Cook, Cornell, Cullom, Eckley, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Finney, Fox, Gravely, Griswold, Hawkins, Hill, Holman, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hubbard, Humphrey, Jencks, Kelley, Kitchen, Lincoln, Loughbridge, Miller, Moorhead, Morrissey, Mullins, Munger, Niblack, Nunn, Peters, Pomeroy, Price, Robinson, Sawyer, Schenck, Selye, Shanks, Shellabarger, Spaulding, Thaddeus Stevens, Stewart, Stone, Taffe, Thomas, John Trimble, Twichell, Van Aken, Van Aernum, Van Auker, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Henry D. Washburn, Stephen F. Wilson, Wood, Woodward, and Woodward—67.

So the House refused to lay the resolution on the table.

The SPEAKER. This subject will be resumed upon the return of the House from the Senate.

IMPEACHMENT OF THE PRESIDENT.

The SPEAKER. The House will now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole, according to order, and proceed to the bar of the Senate, following the managers and preceded by the chairman of the Committee of the Whole, who will be attended by the Clerk and Door-keeper.

The House then resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole, in obedience to the order, and proceeded to the bar of the Senate.

At two o'clock p. m. the Committee of the Whole returned to the Hall; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, made the following report: The Committee of the Whole have, according to order, attended the managers to the bar of the Senate, sitting as a court of impeachment for the trial of Andrew Johnson; that the respondent has been declared to be acquitted on the second and third articles severally preferred by the House; and that then, without action on the other articles, the Senate, sitting as a court of impeachment, adjourned sine die.

RECUSANT WITNESS.

Mr. GETZ rose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the proposition before the House. The pending question is the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOUTWELL,] reported before the House went to the bar of the Senate.

Mr. GETZ. I move that the managers be discharged from the further consideration of the subject of impeachment.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I rise to a question of order, that with the adjournment of the court sine die, and the order made to enter judgment of acquittal in the case of the President's impeachment, does by its own force dissolve the committee of managers, and that they have no further power to examine witnesses or exercise any other authority or function which this House has conferred upon it, either the right to make privileged motions or to perform any other duty, to move to suspend the rules or any other extra power conferred upon them by this House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin raises the question of order, as the Chair understands it, as it is not in writing, that the adjournment of the Senate, sitting as a court of impeachment, ends the service of the managers and discharges the witness at the bar.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I did not say anything about the witness at the bar.

The SPEAKER. Then the point of order is not made at the proper time.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. My point was made on the motion of Mr. BOUTWELL, which the Chair announced was the question now pending before the House; and with reference to that I say that Mr. BOUTWELL has no right to present such motion to the House, the functions of the managers having ended. I mean by that that all of the duties of the committee and all of the special powers conferred upon them ceased with the adjournment of the court of impeachment. There is now no impeachment pending, and, of course, no committee of managers.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will perceive that if the Chair sustains his point of order he would then be compelled to rule that he acted improperly in entertaining the motion of the gentleman himself before the House proceeded to the bar of the Senate to-day. The gentleman rose when the witness was arraigned and made a motion, and the Chair recognized that motion as in order, although it was not made by one of the managers. This is a question of contempt of the authority of the House. The gentleman from Wisconsin, as a member of the House, or any other member, has a right to make a motion. The motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] is therefore in order. The point the Chair supposed the gentleman rose to make is another one, but he is not desirous of anticipating a point of order. The Chair overrules the point raised by the gentleman. The resolution is now properly pending before the House.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. The Chair has not ruled, at all events, on the latter question which I presented.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not exactly understand the further point. The gentleman will now present it.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I will first ask to have the resolution read.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House again propose to C. W. Woolley the question contained in the resolution this day adopted, and that said Woolley be informed that the House requires definite and explicit answers to the questions propounded, to be made forthwith.

The SPEAKER. In order to cover the whole ground clearly, the Chair will rule that when a question of contempt of the authority of the House in refusing to answer questions propounded by a committee is before it by its own order, it is the privilege of any member, whether a member of the committee or not, to make motions relative to it.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I will now present the point. It is this: that the resolution presented by the gentleman from Massachusetts requires the Chair to propound these questions and inform the witness that he must appear and give a response to them before this committee, the duties of which committee by the action of the Senate, by the adjournment of the court of impeachment sine die, are ended.

The SPEAKER. That is a question for the House to determine. The House of Representatives must decide it for itself. It is a question of coherence, covered by the rule to be found in the Manual, often quoted by the Chair, that it is not the privilege of the Chair on a question of order to decide a question of coherence. For, to use the language of the Digest, "Were he permitted to draw questions of consistency within the vortex of order, he might usurp or negative an important modification and suppress instead of subserving the legislative will."

Mr. VAN TRUMP. I rise to a question of order. I wish to state—

The SPEAKER. It cannot be debated.

Mr. VAN TRUMP. I wish to state a point of order. The resolution of the gentleman from Massachusetts has no reference to past contempt, but to future testimony of the witness.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules it on the ground that the question of contempt is before the House by its own order. It is taken up and must be determined by the action the House shall take upon it.

Mr. BLAINE. As the gentlemen are arguing questions of order—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must raise a question of order.

Mr. BLAINE. I only wish to refer to the same question the gentleman from Wisconsin has argued.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I have not argued the question of order. The gentleman should state what is true. I call him to order.

Mr. BLAINE. The managers must continue as managers on the part of the House until they report and are discharged. The action of the Senate cannot discharge a committee of the House. No action of the Senate can affect the position of a committee of the House.

The SPEAKER. Although the gentleman may differ very widely from the Chair, yet the Chair thinks it is not now a proper time to test that question.

Mr. BLAINE. I was replying to the gentleman from Wisconsin, and not to the opinion of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The question of contempt of the authority of the House is now before it. That does not affect the question whether the managers are now in existence as such or not.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question being put on agreeing to the resolution, it appeared to be carried.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 95, nays 28, not voting 66; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Beaman, Benton, Bingham, Blaine, Blair, Boutwell, Bronwell, Brown, all, Butler, Calk, Churchill, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Coburn, Corvode, Dawes, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Eila, Eliot, Ferriss, Ferry, Fields, Garfield, Halsey, Harding, Higby, Hooper, Hopkins, Chester D. Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Judd, Kelsey, Ketcham, Koontz, Laffin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Logan, Loughridge, Lynch, Mallory, Marvin, Maynard, McCarthy, McClurg, Mercer, Moore, Moorhead, Morrell, Myers, Newcomb, Nunn, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Pike, Pile, Plants, Poland, Polsley, Raun, Robertson, Sawyer, Seefeld, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Stokes, Taffe, Taylor, Trowbridge, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Welker, Thomas Williams, William Williams, John T. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—95.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Boyer, Brooks, Burr, Chandler, Blaridge, Getz, Glessbrenner, Golladay, Grover, Haight, Hotchkiss, Johnson, Jones, Kerr, Knott, Marshall, McCormick, McCullough, Morgan, Nicholson, Phelps, Pruyn, Randall, Ross, Taber, Lawrence S. Trimble, and Van Trump—28.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, Archer, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Bailey, Barnes, Barnum, Beatty, Beck, Benjamin, Buckland, Cary, Cobb, Cook, Cornell, Cullom, Eckley, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Finney, Fox, Gravelly, Griswold, Hawkins, Hill, Holman, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hubbard, Humphrey, Julian, Kelley, Kitchen, Lincoln, Millor, Morrissey, Mullins, Mungen, Niblack, Perham, Peters, Pomeroy, Price, Robinson, Schenck, Selye, Shanks, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Smith, Spalding, Thaddeus Stevens, Stewart, Stone, Thomas, John Trimble, Twichell, Van Aernam, Van Auken, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Henry D. Washburn, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Wood, and Woodward—68.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BOUTWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Charles W. Woolley, by the order of the House, I am instructed to propound to you the following interrogatories, and to inform you that the House requires definite and explicit answers to the questions propounded, to be made forthwith. First, what excuse have you for not answering the questions propounded to you by the managers of impeachment? Second, are you now ready to appear before said managers and answer such proper questions as shall be put to you by said managers?

Charles W. Woolley, the witness at the bar of the House, made answer in writing, as follows:

The answers of Charles W. Woolley to the resolution of the House of Representatives of the United States passed this day.

To the first question in said resolution, which is as follows, to wit:

"1. What excuse have you for refusing to answer before the managers of impeachment of this House, in pursuance of the summons served on you for that purpose?" This respondent says that he was summoned to appear before the managers of impeachment on Sunday, the 17th day of May, by a process signed by the chairman of said managers; and that on the following day, to wit, Monday, the 18th of May, he telegraphed the chairman that he was at Willard's Hotel, in this city, awaiting the commands of the managers. That on Tuesday, the 19th, he was served with a summons duly issued and signed by the honorable Speaker of the House of Representatives, and that he did thereupon forthwith obey the mandate of said summons and appear before the managers. That, in obedience to the order of the managers, he again appeared before them on the following day, to wit, Wednesday, the 20th day of May, and was subjected to an examination and required to report for a further examination on Tuesday, the 21st of May; on said last-mentioned day, he was unable to comply with said requirement to appear, because of physical indisposition, and thereupon sent to the said managers the following certificate from his medical adviser, to wit:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 21, 1868.

I hereby certify that Colonel C. W. Woolley is under any professional care and unable to leave his apartments and confined to his bed by reason of irritative fever, sequel of gastric derangement.

D. W. BLISS, M. D.

And this respondent further says that, impressed with the belief that the managers, in the course of the examination to which they had subjected this respondent, had transcended the powers conferred on them by this House and violated his rights and privileges as a citizen of the United States, entitled to the protection of its Constitution and laws, he submitted to said managers, to be reported for the consideration of the House, the following protest:

WILLARD'S HOTEL, May 21, 1868.

To the Honorable the Managers on the part of the House of Representatives of the United States to conduct the impeachment of Andrew Johnson, President of the United States:

Charles W. Woolley respectfully sheweth unto your honorable body that he is now confined to his bed by severe indisposition, as appears by the accompanying certificate of his medical attendant, Dr. D. W. Bliss, residing at 244 F street. That your petitioner is ready and willing at all times to yield obedience to the constituted authorities and to answer all legal inquiries which may be propounded to him; but he is advised by counsel that while he is bound to furnish all the information in his power as a witness touching any specific charge affecting any named person that may be pending before the honorable committee, and pertinent thereto, yet he is not bound by the law of the land to submit to a scrutiny into his private affairs, which may result in needless exposure of matters which are purely personal and ought to be sacred.

Such an ordeal no citizen should shrink from when it becomes relevant to the elucidation of any pending charge; but the undersigned solemnly protests, under the advice of his counsel, against all further general inquiries touching the disbursement of his private funds, and which assume no tangible or specific form whatever; and he humbly prays that this paper may be considered and regarded as his respectful refusal to answer vague general inquiries involving his private and personal transactions only, and he begs leave to place this protest on the language of the fourth amendment of the Federal Constitution, which guarantees "the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures," and which declares that "no warrant shall issue but on probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched and the persons or things to be seized." Your petitioner cannot but regard himself as within the pale of this great charter of the rights of an American citizen; for if his papers could not be lawfully seized or searched, except by "virtue of a warrant issued on probable cause, supported by oath," &c., "particularly describing the place to be searched or things to be seized," he cannot see how he can be compelled to furnish private papers and accounts for the public inspection, without the requirement, at least, of some specific complaint on oath. But in thus presenting this constitutional shield against vague general and unsupported inquiries, your petitioner intends no disrespect to the House of Representatives or its managers, and tenders himself ready and willing to comply with any resolution or order that may be passed by the House of Representatives in the premises, and in the meantime he humbly prays that this, his protest and refusal, may be presented to the House for their consideration and action. In conclusion, your petitioner declares that he is impelled to this course because he feels that the rights of the citizen are involved in this matter, and not because he is unable to meet the proposed inquiry into his private transactions, or to explain any and all the statements heretofore made by him in his previous examination.

Very respectfully yours, C. W. WOOLLEY.

That since submitting the foregoing to the managers he has kept them informed of his movements, that they might at any time give him notice of any action taken upon the foregoing paper, and has since then held himself ready in every particular to respond to the commands of the House.

This respondent, therefore, says that he has not "refused to answer in pursuance of the summons served on him for that purpose."

To the second question in said resolution, which is as follows, to wit:

"2. Are you now ready to appear before said committee and answer such proper questions as shall be put to you by said managers of impeachment?" this respondent says that he is now ready to appear before said committee and answer such proper questions as may be put to him by said managers—protesting and asseverating again, as he has heretofore explicitly and fully testified, that he was in no way connected with any association or combination having as its object the use of corrupt influences in respect to the trial of the President of the United States on the articles of impeachment preferred by this House, and also solemnly asseverating and protesting that no money drawn by this respondent from any bank in this city or owned or held by him, or subject to his authority and control, or in his possession, was in any way used in connection with the said trial.

Respectfully submitted, C. W. WOOLLEY.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Mr. Speaker, I have another resolution which I propose to submit, but before submitting it I yield to my colleague, [Mr. BUTLER,] to offer a resolution which, perhaps, may be proper at this time.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, in order that there may be no misunderstanding upon this subject, and in order that there may be no doubt as to whether the House desires that the fountains of public justice shall be shown to be pure or corrupted, as the case may be, and in order to meet all objections as to the power of the managers I desire to submit to the House the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk, upon which I demand the previous question.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I wish to hear the resolution read, and then I propose to raise a question of order.

The SPEAKER. Of course no question of order can be raised until the resolution has been read. The question of contempt is before the House, and the gentleman from Massachusetts or any other member of the House has a right to offer a resolution, subject to points of order. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the managers, as a committee, be empowered and directed to continue the investigation ordered by the resolution of the House of the 16th instant, with all the powers and rights conferred thereby, and to make such full investigation as will determine the truth of the matters and things set forth in the preamble to said resolution.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I suppose that resolution is subject to the ordinary objection. The managers admit by this resolution that they have no longer any rights or privileges before the House as managers, and they have no right to introduce resolutions any more than any other members of the House, and therefore a single objection to the resolution must prevent its present introduction.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point of order that a single objection prevents the House from considering the resolution. The Chair overrules the point of order, and he does so upon the following grounds: the question of contempt is now before the House. It is a question which the House has ordered to be brought before itself. The managers reported that the witness refused to answer questions, submitting the questions and the answers to the House, and the House ordered the witness to be brought to its bar and arraigned. That question is before the House. The question then arises, what will the House do in the premises? Any resolution naturally growing out of this question of contempt would properly be in order. For instance, it would be in order to require the witness at the bar to answer any question propounded to him by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] or the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDRIDGE] or, as they have done this day, by the Speaker.

The Chair is clearly of the opinion that the managers of the impeachment are not now in office; that their duties and rights as managers terminated with the termination of the trial in the Senate. Unquestionably the House, having committed to them previously to the end of this trial matters for special investigation, could, by so stating it in the resolution, have continued their existence until that investigation was completed. But the preamble and resolution adopted for the purpose of conducting the investigation clearly limited it to the recent trial of impeachment. The preamble is as follows:

"Whereas information has come to the managers which seems to them to furnish probable cause to believe that improper or corrupt means have been used to influence the determination of the Senate upon the articles of impeachment exhibited to the Senate by the House of Representatives against the President of the United States: Therefore."

The preamble often limits and defines the scope of the resolution, and in this case shows that the investigation was to be in regard to alleged corruption, or the use of improper or corrupt means to influence the action of the Senate upon the articles of impeachment. But the resolution is still more clear. It is as follows:

"Be it resolved, That for the further and more efficient prosecution of the impeachment of the President the managers be directed and instructed to summon and examine witnesses under oath, to send for persons and papers, to employ a stenographer, and to appoint sub-committees to take testimony, the expenses thereof to be paid from the contingent fund of the House."

This is a clear and distinct limitation that the investigation is "for the further and more efficient prosecution of the impeachment of the President." During that investigation the witness now at the bar of the House appeared before the managers and refused to answer. By the report of the managers yesterday, he again appeared before them, and, as the managers allege, gave evasive answers. The investigation is delayed for several days by the House not being in regular session. On the first day that it is again in session since Wednesday last the managers presented the case to the House for their adjudication. The House ordered the witness to be arrested by the Sergeant-at-Arms and presented to the bar of the House this day. It may have been possible that, but for the refusal of this witness to answer, this investigation would have been terminated before this time. It certainly has been delayed by the refusal of the witness to answer, and now the power of the managers has ceased by the adjournment of the Senate, sine die, sitting for the trial.

The managers on yesterday brought the case of contempt before the House. The House can now refer the investigation to the Committee on the Judiciary or to the gentlemen who were the managers or to any one or more members of the House, as they may see fit; or they can order the Speaker, as they have done today, to conduct the investigation here, in the presence of the House and the reporters and the spectators. That is a matter for the House to determine. Their power is unquestionable. The Chair, therefore, rules that, as this naturally grows out of this question, it is a privileged resolution.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. The resolution, if the Chair will permit me to say, does not in any manner relate to the contempt by this witness. It provides for the managers continuing the investigation which they have commenced. It is, therefore, an independent resolution, not growing out of this particular contempt. According to the very position the Chair has stated, that the House might refer this matter to the Committee on the Judiciary or to any other committee, this is a proposition to raise a new committee or to continue the managers for a new purpose.

The SPEAKER. Clearly this question does not present itself to the mind of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDRIDGE] and the mind of the Speaker from the same stand-point. The investigation by the managers was in regard to alleged corrupt means used to influence the determination of the Senate on the articles of impeachment. The managers state in their report that that investigation has been delayed, hindered, to some extent frustrated, by the action of the witness in refusing to answer the questions propounded to him by them, and that they were prevented by the prolonged adjournment of the House last week from bringing the matter before the House last week. But upon the first day when the House held a session for business the managers brought the matter before the House for their action. The Chair thinks most clearly, and he does not see how the gentleman from Wisconsin can differ with him, that this is a privileged resolution growing directly out of the investigation, which has been delayed by the action of the witness. It is for the House now to determine whether they will continue the investigation, and, if so, to what extent they will limit it; and they may limit it, if they see fit, to this one witness. The House may authorize the committee to investigate matters growing out of the testimony of this witness, if he testifies before them, or may vote down the resolution and decide that this matter shall end here.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. My point is that the resolution does not refer to this subject at all. It is an independent resolution proposing to continue this committee.

The SPEAKER. It certainly proposes to continue the committee in the investigations already ordered by the House.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. And, therefore, I say I have the right as an individual member to object to the resolution, because it is not now in order under the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair differs with the gentleman, and thinks the resolution is clearly privileged, growing out of the matter now before the House.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. With great respect for the Speaker, I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The question then is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?

Mr. RANDALL. Before that question is taken I would like to ask the Chair whether an opportunity will be presented to amend this resolution.

The SPEAKER. If the House should sustain the Chair in deciding the resolution to be in order, and if the previous question should not be seconded, the resolution would be open to amendment. The Chair has already stated, in ruling upon the point, that the House might, if it should see fit, limit the examination to this witness, or might require it to be extended further, so as to embrace all the allegations as to the employment of corrupt means to influence the votes of Senators.

Mr. RANDALL. So far as the impeachment is concerned this board of managers has ceased to have any powers.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has so held.

Mr. RANDALL. This resolution now proposes to give them fresh powers as a committee of the House.

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. RANDALL. My wish is to offer an amendment. It will be observed that the managers are composed of gentlemen representing but one side of the House; the minority have no representation on the board whatever. It seems to me that there should be no objection, if this committee is to be continued, to allowing some representation to the minority.

Mr. PILE. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order without unanimous consent, and objection is made. The pending question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that the appeal be laid on the table.

Mr. PRUYN. Before that question is put I would like to make a suggestion.

Mr. PAINE. I object to any further debate.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order. The Chair rules that it is in the power of the House, the question being properly before it, to decide that the Speaker, or any one member of the House, or any five members, or any committee of the House, may continue this investigation already ordered by the House. From that decision the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDRIDGE] appeals, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] moves that the appeal be laid on the table.

The motion of Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, that the appeal be laid on the table, was agreed to.

Mr. BROOKS. I rise to a point of order. My point is that the common parliamentary law of all civilized nations (to say nothing of the higher law of decency and propriety) requires that the minority of a parliamentary body shall have a representation on all its committees.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Brooks] that the "higher law of decency" is not properly a part of the point of order. The Chair does not rule upon the "higher law," but upon parliamentary law. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROOKS. The point of order which I make is that the parliamentary law of all civilized nations requires that the minority of a legislative body shall be represented on all committees.

The SPEAKER. The Chair rules that the question as to the representation to be allowed the minority on a committee is subject to the determination of the House. The Chair has already stated that the House might commit an investigation to the Speaker or any other single member of the House, and in such a case it would be very difficult to represent both sides, whoever the member might be.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to move an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Butler] is entitled to the floor. Does he yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Randall,] who desires to offer an amendment?

Mr. BUTLER. I do not propose to yield.

Mr. PRUYN. I would like to offer a substitute.

Mr. BUTLER. I decline to yield for a substitute.

Mr. PRUYN. Let it be read.

Mr. BUTLER. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts called for the previous question when he moved the resolution.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question then recurred on agreeing to the resolution.

NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I ask to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That the Comptroller of the Currency be requested to furnish to this House a statement of the amount of dividends declared by the national banking associations since their organization under the present national banking act; the amount credited to the real estate account distinct from the capital expended therefor; the amount credited to the surplus account; the amount of their undivided profits and all losses, each respectively per annum. If such information be not in his possession, he is further directed to take prompt measures to procure and transmit the same to this House.

Mr. RANDALL. The motion was made to reconsider, and it was laid upon the table.

The SPEAKER. It is a privileged question and will be entered. Neither the Globe nor the Journal states that the motion to reconsider was made and laid upon the table. The question can be raised when it comes up.

RECUSANT WITNESS—AGAIN.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to know whether it is in order to refer the resolution pending before the House in reference to the recusant witness at the bar to the Committee on the Judiciary, where both sides have a representation?

The SPEAKER. It will not be in order pending the previous question.

Mr. RANDALL. This is a most unparalleled thing.

Mr. KERR and Mr. ELDRIDGE demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 91, nays 30, not voting 68; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Arnell, Delos R.

Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Beaman, Benton, Bingham, Blaine, Blair, Boutwell, Brownell, Broomall, Butler, Calk, Churchill, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Covode, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Eila, Elliot, Ferriss, Ferry, Fields, Garfield, Gravelly, Harding, Higby, Hooper, Hopkins, Chester D. Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Judd, Julian, Kelsey, Koontz, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Logan, Loughridge, Lynch, Mallory, Marvin, Maynard, McCarthy, McClurg, Mercer, Moore, Morehead, Morrell, Newcomb, Nunn, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Pike, Pike, Plants, Polsey, Raum, Sawyer, Seofield, Smith, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Stokes, Taffe, Taylor, Trowbridge, Upson, Burr Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Welker, Thomas Williams, William Williams, John T. Wilson, and Windom—91.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Boyer, Brooks, Burr, Cary, Chandler, Eldridge, Getz, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Grover, Haigh, Hotchkiss, Johnson, Jones, Kerr, Knott, Marshall, McCormick, McCullough, Morgan, Nicholson, Phelps, Pruyn, Randall, Ross, Sigreaves, Taber, Lawrence S. Trimble, and Van Trump—30.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, Archer, Axell, Bailey, Baker, Banks, Barnes, Barnum, Beatty, Beck, Benjamin, Buckland, Cook, Cornell, Cullom, Eckley, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Finney, Fox, Griswold, Halsey, Hawkins, Hill, Holman, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hubbard, Humphrey, Kelley, Ketchum, Kitchen, Lufkin, Lincoln, Miller, Morrissey, Mullins, Mungen, Myers, Niblack, Peters, Poland, Pomeroy, Price, Robertson, Robinson, Schenck, Selye, Shanks, Shellabarger, Spaulding, Thaddeus Stevens, Stewart, Stone, Thomas, John Trimble, Twichell, Van Aersum, Van Aiken, Van Wyck, Cadwallader C. Washburn, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Wood, Woodbridge, and Woodward—68.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. BUTLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BOYER. I rise to a privileged question.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I rise to submit a resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts rises to a privileged question, and he will be recognized, as the managers have been authorized to continue this investigation.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I desire, before that question is disposed of, to have determined the question involved in that statement.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman makes a point of order the Chair will rule on it after the resolution is reported.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. My point of order is on the statement of the Speaker that the managers have been revived. This committee the Speaker has declared to be defunct, and that it is now revived. I make the point that it is now a new committee, and they have no more charge of this witness than the Judiciary Committee. I desire to make the motion to refer this to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order on the ground, with which the gentleman is familiar as an old member of the House, that the continuance of any committee will revive all of its business. This has been the uniform decision of all Speakers and Congresses. For example: a special committee, which expires with a session, revived at a succeeding session of that Congress, has all of its business revived, and has the same jurisdiction of questions as was authorized by the original resolution.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Boutwell] offers for adoption the following resolution:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the said Charles W. Woolley be committed to and detained in close custody by the Sergeant-at-Arms in the Capitol during the remainder of the session, or until discharged by the further order of the House, to be taken when he shall have purged the contempt upon which he was arrested, by testifying before the committee authorized to continue the investigation which the managers were conducting when the contempt was committed by said Woolley.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Before demanding the previous question, which I propose to do without much debate, I desire to state to the House that it seems to me—and I make this remark on account of what has been said on the other side of the House—that this is a case clearly within the jurisdiction of the House, and that in none of the steps that have been taken, or in the step which I now ask the House to take, is there any, even the least, departure from the well-settled principles and rules of proceeding? This witness was guilty of a contempt of the House by refusing to answer explicitly and properly questions put to him by a committee of this House. He cannot escape responsibility or punishment for that conduct, even though it be true that the committee before which he was testifying, when he was guilty of that contempt, has ceased to exist. He is at this moment not in the custody of a committee, but he is in the custody of this House, because he is charged and properly charged, arraigned and properly arraigned here, being in contempt of this House by refusing to answer questions put to him by a committee of this House, and it is wholly immaterial whether that committee has ceased to exist or not. Now, then, the resolution which I offer affords to the person accused an opportunity to purge himself of that contempt, not by answering before that committee the questions which were proposed to him by the committee, but by answering those questions before another committee, which, by the resolution of the House just adopted, is charged with the duty of pursuing this investigation. It is for the House to judge how and by what means he shall purge himself of that contempt; and neither he nor any person else, here or elsewhere, except speaking the voice of the House, can decide how or when he shall purge himself of contempt.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to a matter which I think he has overlooked. If I understand the case correctly, as it is now presented, the witness has purged whatever contempt he may have committed. He has answered the questions propounded to him by the Speaker by saying that he is now ready to appear before the committee—precisely in the language of the resolution introduced by the other gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. Butler]—and to answer all proper questions.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Ah! Mr. Speaker—

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Will the gentleman hear me through?

Mr. BOUTWELL. The witness refuses to answer only such questions as the accused himself judges to be proper. Thus by his sole judgment he interposes his opinion, or his will, or his prejudice, or his passion, or his corruption between the power of this House and the ends of justice; and the gentleman from Wisconsin asks that we put into the hands of this man, on his own testimony implicated in the grossest corruption of the age, the power to stay the justice of the nation seeking to ascertain, if possible, by what means its authority has been arrested.

Now, then, the answer which the witness has made to the second question proposed by the Speaker is evasive in that he offers to answer all proper questions. It is not enough. The committee, when it puts a question, speaks the voice of the House. The House puts the question to the witness; it is for the time being, until overruled by the House, the judgment of the House.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Will the gentleman recollect that the word "proper" is in the resolution, so that the witness has answered precisely in the language of the resolution?

Mr. BOUTWELL. I understand the word "proper." Proper, in the sense in which we use the word, is the question put by the committee, which for the time being utters the judgment and the wish of the House; and it is not for the witness upon the stand to say that a question put by this House is an improper question. He is to accept the question as a proper one and answer it.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOUTWELL. No, sir; I do not wish to be interrupted at this moment, because I want to read an authority on this point. Judge Black was summoned before the Judiciary Committee on the 14th of March, 1867. The committee put this question to him:

"Did you prepare or have any part in the preparation of the message of the President vetoing the bill 'to provide for the more efficient government of the rebel States' sent into the House of Representatives near the close of the last session?"

To this Judge Black answers, and it is to that that I desire to draw the attention of gentlemen upon the other side of the House:

"There have been several communications between the President and me entirely private and confidential, some of them relating to the subject indicated by your question. I do not think you ought to insist upon that question. I wish simply to enter a protest against your right to demand an answer. I am on record for this opinion, that a witness sworn to testify before any tribunal is bound in conscience to answer a question which that tribunal declares he ought to answer; that he is himself not the judge of what he ought to answer and what he ought not."

That, I take it, is good law, uttered by a person who, I suppose, is good authority upon the other side of the House.

The Committee on the Judiciary accepted that view of Judge Black, and also pressed the question, and he answered it.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Did the gentleman understand Judge Black to say that the committee itself was the tribunal to decide, or did he understand him, as I did at the time, when he answered the question in the committee, that he submitted himself to the House, whose committee was examining him?

Mr. BOUTWELL. No, sir; he submitted himself to the committee.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. And if a question should arise before the committee where a witness refused to answer, would it not be the duty of that committee to report the question to the House, and let the House determine between the witness and the committee, whether he should answer it or not? This committee of managers arbitrarily require the witness to answer any and all questions, and decides the matter without submitting it to the House, and the witness has had no opportunity of declining to answer a question which the House deems proper.

Mr. BOUTWELL. We all know perfectly well that it is for the committee to determine what questions they will put. If the witness chooses not to answer, of course it is not in the power of the committee to arrest the witness; but it is in the power of the committee to do as we have done in this case, bring the matter before the House.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Why, then, I ask in all candor, should not the House, before punishing the witness for contempt, pass upon each question and the propriety of that question, and of the excuse which the witness renders for not answering and the substance and sufficiency of that excuse?

Mr. BOUTWELL. Of course it is not in the power of the House to consider and determine upon each question which may be put to this witness or to any other. If the power of the House is to be maintained, it can only be maintained by maintaining the just authority of its committees. I demand the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. MARSHALL. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts allow me a few moments?

Mr. BOUTWELL. No; I do not wish to protract debate.

Mr. MARSHALL. Allow me a very short time. [Cries of "No!" "No!" on the Republican side of the House.] I think that courtesy will not be denied me.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I will hear the gentleman's question.

Mr. MARSHALL. It is not a question. I just wish to make a very few remarks, which I think will not be deemed improper by any gentleman on the other side of the House. [Cries of "No!" "No!" "No!"]

Mr. BROOKS. Why not?

Mr. MARSHALL. Why not? I am not in the habit of troubling the House much.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Will five minutes suffice?

Mr. MARSHALL. I think that will do; I want a very few minutes.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I yield to the gentleman for five minutes.

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Speaker, I take it for granted that neither the gentleman from Massachusetts nor the House is disposed to make this House an instrument of oppression or to deprive any citizen of the United States of his constitutional rights and privileges. I deny that the witness—a gentleman whom I do not know personally, and never saw until he appeared here to-day—has placed himself in contempt of the House, and I say that it would be an act of oppression on the part of the House to proceed against him at this time as for a contempt.

What are the facts as shown by the managers and by the witness himself? Certain questions were propounded to him which he thought, and which I think, were improper, and which no citizen ought to be compelled to answer in regard to his own private affairs, unless the inquiry is in relation to some matter properly under investigation before them at the time.

But believing that to be his constitutional privilege to refuse to answer these questions, he did not, as shown by his answer, act in a factious spirit or place himself in contempt of the House, or even of the committee, but submitted a respectful protest and asked that that protest be brought before the House, stating to the committee at the same time that he would submit to the direction of the House in regard thereto.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. MARSHALL. I have but a few words more to say.

Mr. BUTLER. For a question merely.

Mr. MARSHALL. Very well.

Mr. BUTLER. Where is the evidence that the protest was submitted to the committee, or asked to be laid before the House?

Mr. MARSHALL. The evidence is contained in the answer of the witness made here to-day, which answer is not denied by the managers, and I imagine will not be. This witness submitted a respectful protest, stating that all the funds in his possession were used by him in his own private business and without any relation whatever to the impeachment question before the Senate, that they were used without any reference thereto whatever, and that he deemed it improper for the committee to investigate his private affairs, and claimed his rights under the Constitution and laws of the United States in regard thereto. But the witness also said to the committee that he wished to have the question submitted to the House, and that he would submit to the direction of the House. How could he in any more respectful manner raise a question as to his rights and privileges in the premises.

Now, where is the contempt of the House or of its committee in all that? What has this witness done to give this House the right to order him into custody as a prisoner of this House? I say that the managers have wholly failed to show any contempt on the part of the witness, and that the retaining of the witness any longer, or to order him into custody until he has shown himself in contempt of the House and has refused to obey the directions of the House, would be an act of oppression which ought to condemn the House as guilty of an act most unjust, arbitrary, and oppressive, and every American citizen should rise up and protest against such tyranny on the part of the House. When you have decreed that he must answer any and every question in regard to his private affairs, whether such decision be correct or not, and he has refused to do so, then he will be in contempt of the House, and not until then. He has not yet placed himself in any such position.

I ask gentlemen on all sides of the House not to commit themselves to an act which would be so unjust, and which on reflection they themselves must condemn. This is all I have to say, and I have said it in no captious spirit, but in justice to the House, and for the purpose of inducing members to reflect before committing themselves to an act not justified by precedent or principle, and which, in my judgment, is a most dangerous, arbitrary, and alarming invasion of the rights of an American citizen.

Mr. PRUYN. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] yield to me for five minutes?

Mr. BOUTWELL. I cannot yield further.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I hope this House will not order a man to be imprisoned during the rest of the session without allowing him to be heard.

The SPEAKER. No debate is in order.

The question was upon seconding the previous question upon the resolution of Mr. BOUTWELL.

Mr. DRIGGS. I ask that the second answer of the witness to-day be read.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I have no objection.

Mr. MORGAN. Let the whole answer be read.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I cannot yield for that.

Mr. DRIGGS. My object in asking to have that answer again read is simply to see whether the witness agrees to answer such questions as he himself deems to be proper, or such questions as the committee may deem proper.

The answer of the witness was read.

Mr. WOOLLEY [at the bar of the House] then said: Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to make a statement to the House.

The SPEAKER. The witness at the bar asks, through the Speaker, permission to make a statement.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. It requires unanimous consent.

No objection was made.

Mr. WOOLLEY. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that I expect to answer such questions as the House may judge to be proper.

Mr. BOUTWELL. It is only necessary to say that that is substantially—

Mr. WOOLLEY. In other words, Mr. Speaker, if the committee and myself differ as to the propriety of a question, I will ask them, as I did on my first examination, to bring me to the bar of the House and ask the order of the House upon it, and I will abide by the order of the House.

Mr. BOUTWELL. This House must see that its power, through its committees, will be at an end if a person summoned as a witness may demand and receive from the House an arrangement which will destroy the just authority of the committee, and render every effort at investigation utterly useless; for whatever may be demanded and received by this witness may be demanded and received by any other witness that any other committee of this House may call before it. I insist upon the previous question.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BOUTWELL. No, sir; I insist on the call for the previous question.

On seconding the call for the previous question, there were—ayes 75, noes 27.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was ordered; which was on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. BOYER called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 81, nays 28, not voting 80; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Arnell, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Beaman, Benton, Bingham, Blaine, Boutwell, Bromwell, Broomall, Butler, Calkins, Churchill, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Corode, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Eli, Eliot, Ferriss, Ferry, Fields, Garfield, Halsey, Harding, Higby, Hooper, Hopkins, Chester D. Hubbard, Hunter, Judd, Julian, Kelsey, Ketcham, Koontz, Lakin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Logan, Mallory, Maynard, McCarthy, McClurg, Mercer, Moore, Moorhead, Morrill, Myers, Newcomb, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Pike, Plants, Polkley, Raum, Sawyer, Scofield, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Stokes, Taylor, Trowbridge, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Welker, Thomas Williams, John T. Wilson, and Windom—81.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Boyer, Brooks, Burr, Cary, Eldridge, Geiz, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Grover, Haight, Hotchkiss, Johnson, Jones, Kerr, Knott, Marshall, McCormick, Morgan, Nicholson, Phelps, Pruyn, Randall, Ross, Sitgreaves, Taber, Lawrence S. Trimble, and Van Trump—28.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, Archer, Delos R. Ashley, Axtell, Bailey, Baker, Banks, Barnes, Barnum, Beatty, Beck, Benjamin, Blair, Buckland, Chanler, Cook, Cornell, Cullom, Dawes, Dixon, Eckley, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Finney, Fox, Gravely, Griswold, Hawkins, Hill, Holman, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Kelley, Kitchen, Lincoln, Loughridge, Lynch, Marvin, McCullough, Miller, Morrissey, Mullins, Mungen, Niblack, Nunn, Peters, Pile, Poland, Pomeroy, Price, Robertson, Robinson, Schenck, Selye, Shanks, Shellabarger, Smith, Spalding, Thaddeus Stevens, Stewart, Stone, Taffe, Thomas, John Trimble, Twichell, Van Aernam, Van Auken, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Henry D. Washburn, William Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Wood, Woodbridge, and Woodward—80.

So the resolution of Mr. BOUTWELL was agreed to.

Mr. BOUTWELL moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BOYER. I submit the following resolution, which I believe to be privileged:

Resolved, That two members of the House of Representatives who voted against the impeachment of the President of the United States be added, by appointment of the Speaker, to the committee authorized to investigate the alleged corrupt influences employed to influence the determination of the Senate upon the impeachment of the President.

The SPEAKER. The Chair rules, in accordance with his former ruling, that this resolution, relating to the question now before the House, is privileged. It can therefore be entertained, subject to the rules of the House.

Mr. BOYER. I call for the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

Mr. RANDALL. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 60, nays 51, not voting 78; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Beaman, Benton, Blaine, Boutwell, Bromwell, Broomall, Butler, Cake, Churchill, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Covode, Donnelly, Driggs, Elia, Ferriss, Fields, Harding, Chester D. Hubbard, Hunter, Judd, Julian, Koontz, William Lawrence, Loan, Logan, Mallory, Maynard, McCarthy, McClurg, Mercur, Moore, Moorhead, Morrell, Newcomb, O'Neill, Paine, Perham, Pile, Plants, Raum, Sawyer, Seolfield, Starkweather, Stokes, Trowbridge, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Welker, Thomas Williams, William Williams, and Windom—60.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Blair, Boyer, Brooks, Burr, Cary, Dawes, Dixon, Eldridge, Eliot, Ferry, Garfield, Geiz, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Grover, Haight, Higby, Hopkins, Hotchkiss, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Johnson, Jones, Ketcham, Knott, Ladin, Marshall, Marvin, McCormick, McCullough, Morgan, Nicholson, Orth, Phelps, Pike, Poland, Pruyn, Randall, Robertson, Ross, Sitgreaves, Taber, Taffe, Lawrence S. Trimble, Van Trump, Elihu B. Washburne, and William B. Washburn—51.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, Archer, Axtell, Bailey, Barnes, Barnum, Beatty, Beck, Benjamin, Bingham, Buckland, Chanler, Coburn, Cook, Cornell, Cullom, Dodge, Eckley, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Finney, Fox, Gravely, Griswold, Halsey, Hawkins, Hill, Holman, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Kelley, Kelsey, Kerr, Kitchen, George V. Lawrence, Lincoln, Loughridge, Lynch, Miller, Morrissey, Mullins, Mungen, Myers, Niblack, Nunn, Peters, Poisley, Pomeroy, Price, Robinson, Schenck, Selye, Shanks, Shellabarger, Smith, Spalding, Aaron F. Stevens, Thaddeus Stevens, Stewart, Stone, Taylor, Thomas, John Trimble, Twichell, Van Aernam, Van Auken, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Henry D. Washburn, James F. Wilson, John T. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Wood, Woodbridge, and Woodward—78.

So the resolution was laid on the table.

Mr. BUTLER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was laid on the table; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BUTLER. I withdraw it.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I renew it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot do so, as he did not vote with the majority.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence was granted indefinitely to Mr. JOHNSON, Mr. ANDERSON, Mr. CAKE, and Mr. KELSEY.

SUFFERERS BY RAID ON WASHINGTON.

On motion of the SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House, on leaving copies, the papers of the sufferers by the rebel raid on Washington in July, 1864.

NATIONAL BANKS—AGAIN.

Mr. RANDALL. I call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House adopted a resolution offered by me yesterday, in reference to the national banks.

The SPEAKER. That can only be called up by the gentleman from Massachusetts, who moved it, and on some other day.

INDIAN OUTRAGES IN TEXAS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a letter of the acting Commissioner of Indian Affairs, relative to recent outrages by certain tribes on citizens of Texas; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

SUBSISTENCE OF INDIANS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a communication from Lieutenant General Sherman, relative to subsistence of certain Indian tribes by the War Department for a time; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT CONTRACTS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with law, a statement of contracts made by the quartermaster's department for the month of April, 1868; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. PILE. What becomes of the morning hour?

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. The Committee on Commerce is the first committee to be called.

The SPEAKER. After the pending bill from the Committee of Claims shall have been disposed of—

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. The Committee on Commerce are not prepared to go on at this late hour, and I hope the motion to go into committee will prevail.

SPANISH INDEMNITY.

Mr. BANKS, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested, if not inconsistent with the public interest, to inform the House what measures have been taken to obtain indemnity from the Spanish Government for spoiliations on the commerce of American citizens during the late war with the South American republics, and to transmit to this House any correspondence which may have taken place on this subject between the United States and the Spanish Government.

RIGHTS UNDER TREATIES.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1119) to restore to certain parties their rights under certain treaties and laws of the United States; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was recommitted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BUTLER. I now ask for the vote on my motion, and pending that I move that all general debate in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union shall terminate in thirty minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion to go into committee was then agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BLAINE in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of House bill No. 1073, making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1869.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the first reading for information be dispensed with.

Mr. BROOKS. I object.

The Clerk resumed the first reading of the bill at the point where he left off when the committee rose on a former day when the same was under consideration, but before completing the reading.

Mr. BROOKS said: I withdraw my objection to dispensing with the first reading, with the understanding that we may adjourn and come prepared to act upon it to-morrow.

Mr. BUTLER. I did not propose to press it to a vote to-day.

Mr. BROOKS. I do not want to have it read at length if I can take it home with me and examine it in detail.

Mr. BUTLER. But to-morrow I may be met with an objection from somebody else.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee may, by unanimous consent, have an understanding on the subject.

Mr. BROOKS. I will consent to waive the further reading with the understanding that the committee now rise.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the further reading be dispensed with.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Is that with the understanding that the committee shall rise?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot put the additional motion, but the committee can understand it as they please.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Then I shall object.

Mr. BROOKS. Unanimous consent will be given.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection the further reading of the bill will be dispensed with. The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARFIELD. I now move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLAINE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being House bill No. 1073, making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending 30th June, 1869, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at three o'clock and fifty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. BALDWIN: The petition of Ethan Allen, of Worcester, Massachusetts, for compensation for the use, by the Government of the United States, of certain machines invented by him, and of which he owns the patent right.

By Mr. BOYER: The petition of 14 iron-workers at Limerick Station, Montgomery county, Pennsylvania, setting forth that owing to foreign competition their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 95 workers in machinery at Norristown, Pennsylvania, setting forth that owing to foreign competition their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 51 workers in Riverside paper-mills, Montgomery county, Pennsylvania, setting forth that owing to foreign competition their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 31 workmen of Conshohocken, Pennsylvania, praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 105 workers in rolling-mills and iron-works at Allentown, Pennsylvania, setting forth that owing to foreign competition their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 45 iron-workers in Conshohocken, Pennsylvania, setting forth that owing to foreign competition their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

By Mr. CHANLER: A memorial of William Whiting, to amend patent laws.

By Mr. COVODE: The petition of sundry citizens of Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, for increase of tariff on imports.

By Mr. COBB: A memorial of Mrs. Harriet R. Clinton, widow of Charles W. Clinton, late lieutenant first regiment Wisconsin volunteer cavalry, for back pay.

By Mr. ELDRIDGE: The petition of Abner Kirby and 200 others, citizens of Wisconsin, for an appropriation for the improvement of the harbor at the mouth of Menomonee river.

By Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio: Five several remonstrances of officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates of Ohio troops who served in the late war, against the passage of the bill to prevent payment of bounty to honorably discharged soldiers in certain cases.

By Mr. McCLURG: The claim of Lieutenant Benjamin F. Lutman, of Missouri.

By Mr. MOORHEAD: The memorial of manufacturers and merchants of Pittsburg and Alleghany, Pennsylvania, praying that Congress will authorize the enlargement and deepening of the St. Mary's canal.

By Mr. MORRELL: The petition of 109 iron-workers and others, of Titusville, Pennsylvania, setting forth that owing to foreign competition their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 38 workmen of Cooperstown, Pennsylvania, setting forth that owing to foreign competition their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 87 iron-workers of Clarion county, Pennsylvania, setting forth that owing to foreign competition their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 42 citizens of Clarion county, Pennsylvania, praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 28 workmen in machine works at Meadville, Pennsylvania, setting forth that owing to foreign competition their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 152 workmen at Westerman Iron Works, Sharon, Pennsylvania, setting forth that owing to foreign competition their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 50 coal-workers in Hickory township, Mercer county, Pennsylv-vania, setting forth that owing to foreign competition their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of William Gates and 45 others, citizens of Rockland, Venango county, Pennsylvania, complaining of the depression of manufacturing industry, and praying for such increase of protective duties as will restore prosperity to the country.

Also, the petition of C. G. Dempsey and others, oil producers and refiners, of Venango county, Pennsylvania, representing that the depression of the manufacturing industry of the country affects disastrously every form of production and business, and must reduce the revenues and impair the credit of the Government, and praying for such increase of protective duties as will revive manufactures and restore prosperity to the country.

Also, the petition of Patrick Hogan and 1700 others, workmen in the iron mills and mines of the Cambria Iron Company, at Johnstown, Pennsylvania, setting forth that owing to foreign competition their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 322 workers in furnaces and forges, of Blair county, Pennsylvania, setting forth that, owing to foreign competition, their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of Thomas P. Himush and others, workers in Roaring Spring paper-mill, Blair county, Pennsylvania, setting forth that owing to foreign competition their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 550 workers in iron and steel, machinists and merchants, of Blair county, Pennsylvania, praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of John Clark and 24 others, citizens of Catharine township, Blair county, Pennsylvania, praying for such increase of protective duties as will revive manufactures and restore prosperity to the country.

Also, the petition of M. Orlady and 49 others, farmers, of Woodcock valley, Huntingdon county, Pennsylvania, representing that the depression of manufacturing industry affects disastrously every form of production and business, and praying for such increase of protective duties as will revive manufactures and restore prosperity to the country.

Also, the petition of 54 mechanics and others, citizens of Woodcock valley, Huntingdon county, Pennsylvania, complaining of the depression of industry, and praying for such increase of protective duties as will revive manufactures and restore prosperity to the country.

Also, the petition of D. R. P. Flenner and 26 others, miners in Woodcock valley, Huntingdon county, Pennsylvania, praying for such increase of protective duties as will revive manufactures and restore prosperity to the country.

Also, the petition of Theo. R. Brunell and 50 others, iron-workers of Lewistown, Pennsylvania, setting forth that, owing to foreign competition, their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of George McCombs and 89 others, workers in Juniata Iron Works, of Huntingdon county, Pennsylvania, setting forth that, owing to foreign competition, their industry is greatly depressed, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of William Hoover and 68 others, iron-workers at Mill Creek, Huntingdon county, Pennsylvania, setting forth that, owing to foreign competition, their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 88 workers in Barree and Colerain Forges, Huntingdon county, Pennsylvania, praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 21 workmen in ax manufactory at Lewistown, Pennsylvania, praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of A. McAllister and 54 others, iron-workers of Springfield Furnace, Blair county, Pennsylvania, praying for such increase of protective duties as will revive manufactures and restore prosperity to the country.

Also, the petition of W. P. Mendenhall and 137 others, workers in iron and other metals, at Altoona, Pennsylvania, complaining of the depression of manufacturing industry, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of P. Van Devander and 45 others, citizens of Williamsburg, Blair county, Pennsylvania, complaining of the depression of manufacturing industry, and praying for such increase of protective duties as will restore prosperity to the country.

Also, the petition of Augustus Troxell and 52 others, workmen of Lewistown, Pennsylvania, praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 66 coal-miners in Carbon township, Huntingdon county, Pennsylvania, praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of Samuel McVitty and 44 others, citizens of Clay township, Huntingdon county, Pennsylvania, praying for such increase of protective duties as will revive manufactures and restore prosperity to the country.

By Mr. MYERS: The petition of Louis Sonntag, for bounty due him under act of July 28, 1866.

Also, a memorial of Joseph Nock, praying Congress to reenact the repealed sixth section of the act of 1842 in relation to patents.

Also, the petition of Ellen Baird, mother of James Baird, deceased, company M, twenty-first Pennsylvania cavalry, for arrears of pension.

Also, the petition of Mary Groogan, widow of James Groogan, deceased, company B, ninth Pennsylvania volunteers, for arrears of pension.

Also, the petition of Mary Baskerville, mother of James Baskerville, deceased, company H, second regiment Pennsylvania reserves, for arrears of pension.

By Mr. O'NEILL: The petition of 82 workers in paper factory and other branches of industry in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, setting forth that, owing to foreign competition, their industry is greatly depressed, and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 110 workers in Pascal iron-works of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, setting forth that, owing to foreign competition, their industry is greatly depressed, and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 54 glass-workers in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, setting forth that, owing to foreign competition, their industry is greatly depressed, and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 22 citizens of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, praying for such increase of protective duties as will revive manufactures and restore prosperity to the country.

Also, the petition of 108 workers in the Harrison boiler works of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, setting forth that, owing to foreign competition, their industry is greatly depressed, and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of George Banks and 15 others, workers in the Howard machine works Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, praying for additional protective duties.

By Mr. WELKER: The petition of Rosalinda McCabe, widow of Barney McCabe, late of company I, tenth New York cavalry, for a pension.

Also, the petition of Chaney D. Rose, for a pension.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, May 27, 1868.

Prayer by Rev. E. H. GRAY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's legislative session was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. ANTHONY. I offer the memorial of Governor Ambrose E. Burnside, John Carter Brown, Robert H. Ives, William Goddard, T. P. I. Goddard, and others, praying for an appropriation for deepening the St. Mary's canal. The memorialists represent that when the first grant of public lands was made to the State of Michigan for this canal its capacity was sufficient for the transit of the largest vessels then employed on the lakes, of about six hundred tons burden. Since that time it has been found advantageous to employ vessels of a much larger burden, and the interests of commerce require very much that a grant should be made for deepening that work. I move its reference to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DRAKE. I present the petition of Isaac M. Couch, a private in company E, forty-fourth Missouri volunteer infantry, praying pay for one hundred and nineteen days' service rendered after the discharge of his regiment. I do not know whether this petition should go to the Military Committee or the Committee on Claims. I will move its reference to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. NYE presented the petition of Lonisa J. Simpson, widow of Major George Simpson, late paymaster in the Army of the United States, praying for an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented additional papers in support of the claim of Lieutenant Valentine H. Voorhes, for pay for services in the Army from March 1, 1864, to November 30, 1864; which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, presented a memorial of officers of the United States Army, remonstrating against the passage of the bill which deprives all retired officers of the Army of their longevity or service rations; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. ROSS presented the petition of John A. Wilcox, captain fourth regiment United States cavalry, praying to be relieved from all liability on account of Government funds stolen from him on the 14th of February, 1867; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

FUNDING BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Finance either to ask the Senate to take up Senate bill No. 207, called the funding bill, and postpone it until Tuesday next, or to give notice, which I prefer to do, that on next Tuesday, at one o'clock, I shall move to take up that bill with a view to dispose of it, so that it may not stand in the way of other matters.

Mr. POMEROY. Give the notice.

Mr. SHERMAN. I therefore give notice that on next Tuesday, and I hope it will be noted and Senators will try to be prepared, I shall endeavor to get up that bill and have it disposed of one way or the other.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HARLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 420) to incorporate the Connecticut Avenue and Park Railway Company, in the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 344) to incorporate the Washington Target-Shooting Association, in the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment.

Mr. POMEROY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 287) granting the right of way and lands to the Pecos and Placer Mining and Ditch Company of New Mexico, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. NYE, from the Committee on Territories, reported a bill (S. No. 487) to disapprove an act of the Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory redistricting the Territory and reassigning the judges thereto; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. NYE. I should like the immediate consideration of that bill, if there be no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That can only be done at this time by the unanimous consent of the Senate.

Mr. HARLAN. I prefer that this bill should go over. I understand that it will affect the work of some of the judges, and one of them originally came from my State, and he has written me a letter on the subject. I am not sure but that I shall vote for the bill; but I wish to look into it first, and therefore I prefer that it should go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will go over, under the rule.

Mr. WILLEY. The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the resolution of the board of common council of the city of Washington, asking the passage of an act to compel the mayor of the city to pay to each member of the board of council and board of aldermen the amount due them for their services as such members, have considered the same, and being of opinion that the proper redress for these gentlemen is in the courts of the District, by mandamus or otherwise, have instructed me to report it back and ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the petition of Alexander J. Atocha, reported a bill (S. No. 488) to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief of Alexander J. Atocha," approved February 14, 1865; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. FESSENDEN, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported an amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 818) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1869, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, under the rules.

Mr. MORGAN. The Committee on Finance, to whom was referred a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury in regard to the claim of John Bullfinch and others, owners of the brig Ocean Belle, have had the same under consideration, and have directed me to report in writing. The committee believe the claim to be an equitable one; but they believe also that it should go to the Committee on Claims. I ask, therefore, that the report be printed, and that the whole matter, with all the papers, be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HOWE. The Committee on Claims is crowded with business that it is really unable to dispose of as promptly as the rights of suitors would seem to demand. Now, it does not seem to me that there is any necessity that any one of these claims should be considered by more than one of the committees of the body. I know nothing about this claim; but as it has undergone the examination of the Committee on Finance, I do not see why that should not be just as satisfactory as to have the recommendation of any other committee of the body. I do not understand that there is anything in the constitution of the Senate or in the constitution of the Committee on Claims that requires absolutely that everything in the nature of a private claim should go to that committee. It is, as I suppose, a committee created for the purpose of considering those matters, unless they are, at the pleasure of the Senate, referred to another committee. This matter having been considered by one committee, I hope the Senator from New York will not insist on his motion, for I cannot conceive that it would tend to promote the public interests, and it clearly would not the interests of the claimant. I hope the motion will not be insisted on.

Mr. MORGAN. It was the opinion of the Committee on Finance, after full consideration, that this was really a matter that belonged to the Committee on Claims; but if the Committee on Claims object to its being referred to them, it having been fully examined by the Committee on Finance and a written report presented, I shall not press it any further.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I understand that as it now stands there is a favorable report from the Committee on Finance; or is that report taken back by that committee?

Mr. MORGAN. There is a favorable report; but there is no bill connected with it, because we supposed the Committee on Claims would report a bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then it had better be returned to the committee. I know something about the claim, and that is the reason of my inquiry. I should like to have the Finance Committee take it back and report a bill.

Mr. MORGAN. I will report a bill, then, without its being referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator move that the report be printed?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir; I move that the report be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

RAILROAD IN CALIFORNIA AND OREGON.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 216.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can only be done at this time by unanimous consent.

Mr. POMEROY. I desire to offer a resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to get up the bill. It will take but a few minutes to pass it.

Mr. POMEROY. What is it?

Mr. WILLIAMS. A little bill extending the time for constructing a railroad. It simply extends the time, nothing more.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him. Is there any objection?

Mr. TRUMBULL. Let us hear the title of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The bill proposed to be taken up is the bill (S. No. 216) to amend an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central Pacific railroad, in California, to Portland, in Oregon."

By unanimous consent, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend section six of an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central Pacific railroad, in California, to Portland, in Oregon," as to provide that as to so much of that railroad and telegraph line as is or may be located within the State of Oregon, instead of the times now fixed in the first section of twenty miles of the railroad and telegraph shall be completed within three years from the date of that act, and at least twenty miles in each three years thereafter, and the whole on or before the 1st day of July, 1880.

The Committee on Public Lands reported the bill with amendments. The first amendment was in line six, after the word "Oregon" to insert "approved July 25, 1866."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line seven, after the word "that," to strike out the words "as to so much of said railroad and telegraph line as is or may be located within the State of Oregon."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line eleven, to strike out the word "two" before the word "years" and to insert "three."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line twelve, to strike out the word "date," and to insert the word "passage;" and also to strike out the word "said" and insert "this."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as thus amended, reads as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section six of an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central Pacific railroad, in California, to Portland, in Oregon," approved July 25, 1866, be so amended as to provide that, instead of the times now fixed in said section, the first section of twenty miles of said railroad and telegraph shall be completed within two years from the passage of this act, and at least twenty miles in each three years thereafter, and the whole on or before the 1st day of July, A. D. 1880.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Oregon whether this is anything more than a mere extension of time; whether it affects any other rights or not?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will state, for the information of the Senator from Maine, that it does not. It simply extends the time without affecting any right whatever. It does not take a dollar from the Treasury of the United States, or a foot of land from the United States; but it simply extends the time. The road has been commenced. Of course in a new country like Oregon it is very difficult to commence the construction of a road of this description; but it has been commenced in good faith, and the company are now progressing with the work, and they simply desire a little extension of this time, so that there shall be no forfeiture of what land they may have under the act.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

CREEK INDIANS.

Mr. POMEROY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to inform the Senate, at as early a day as practicable, the reasons why a large number of persons enrolled as Creek Indians by the Creek agent in the spring of 1867, were stricken from said rolls and payment of their per capita dividend refused.

DEPARTMENT OF ARKANSAS.

Mr. DRAKE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to communicate to the Senate a copy of the report of Inspector General Marcy, made in 1864, and the condition of the department of Arkansas and the Indian territory.

WILLIAM H. HARMAN.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 183.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 183) for the relief of William H. Harman. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to remit and release to William H. Harman the internal revenue tax assessed on five hundred and six gallons of whisky of his manufacture, the same having been destroyed by fire before removal from the distillery, and before its sale.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I beg leave to state to the Senate that this bill passed, after a very considerable discussion, during the session of the winter a year ago, went to the House, and failed there for want of time. It has twice passed the Finance Committee, and I apprehend it will not take long to consider it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. HOWE. What committee does that claim come from?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. The Committee on Finance.

The bill was passed.

ADJOURNMENT SINE DIE.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I ask the Senate to take up for consideration House bill No. 786. It will take but a moment, I think, to pass it.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. While the Secretary is looking for that bill, I ask my friend to allow me to offer a resolution, to lie on the table. I ask that the resolution be read; I will not ask any action upon it now, but will call it up hereafter.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives adjourn their respective Houses sine die on Saturday, the 13th of June next, at twelve o'clock m.

MEDICAL HISTORY OF THE WAR.

Mr. ANTHONY. As there seems to be some difficulty in finding the bill of the Senator from Maine, I ask the Senate to take up the joint resolution providing for the publication of the medical and surgical history of the war. If we are going to publish it at all it should be provided for now.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. No. 97) to provide for the publication of the medical and surgical history of the rebellion and the medical statistics of the provost marshal general's bureau.

The resolution provides that the appropriation made in an act approved July 28, 1866, for publishing the medical and surgical history of the rebellion and the medical statistics of the provost marshal general's bureau may be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, for the purpose of preparing those works for publication, and directs the Congressional Printer to print the same, under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. ANTHONY. This appropriation was passed at the last Congress in a general appropriation bill. It did not come from the Committee on Printing, and the original measure never was under the consideration of that committee. The appropriation is so worded that the Congressional Printer thinks it must be applied to the ordinary cost of the publication, setting the type, paper, binding, &c. This resolution transfers the whole of the appropriation to the preparation of the work, engraving plates, &c., leaving the publication to be provided for, as all other publications are, and as I suppose this was intended to be, out of the general appropriation for the public printing. This work, Senators are aware, is an exceedingly expensive one; and I think it is a very valuable one. I do not wish the Senate to pass upon the question without understanding what it is.

Mr. RAMSEY. What is the work, may I ask?

Mr. ANTHONY. It is the "Medical and Surgical History of the Rebellion," prepared under the direction of the Surgeon General.

Mr. RAMSEY. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Printing what has become of a resolution that I offered, and which was referred to that committee some three months since, providing for the printing and circulation of a large number of copies of the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office? That document is very much wanted by the people in all the land States, and, indeed, it is sought for in Europe. Many persons are writing for it; but it is impossible to obtain it.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not think that is exactly pertinent to this subject, but still I will answer the question very cheerfully. We have been engaged in the impeachment trial for the last three months, and have attended to no legislative business. It has been impossible to bring a report before the Senate or to get up any subject which could engage its attention; and on days when we have tried to do legislative business some Senators—I know the Senator from Minnesota is not of that number—were constantly voting for adjourning very early. [Laughter.]

Mr. RAMSEY. I desire to ask the chairman a further question: whether it is probable, now that impeachment is over, as I am told it is, that this matter will engage the attention of the committee, and we can soon look for a report?

Mr. ANTHONY. If there is time to consider the subject between the end of this impeachment and the beginning of another we shall certainly bring it up.

Mr. POMEROY. Does the Senator know what the expense would be?

Mr. ANTHONY. Of this work?

Mr. POMEROY. Of this work.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not suppose this work will cost less than one hundred and fifty or two hundred thousand dollars when completed. I presume it will take two or three years to complete it. I think that is the estimate which the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. Wilson,] who introduced the measure, put upon it.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As this resolution is leading to debate, the Chair feels under obligation to lay it aside and call up the bill which the Senate agreed, on the motion of the Senator from Maine, to consider.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That bill, I understand, is now before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is regularly before the Senate.

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope this resolution will be allowed to come up next. I want it disposed of.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I shall not object to that.

PORTS OF DELIVERY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (H. R. No. 286) declaring St. George and Boothbay, in the State of Maine, and San Antonio, Texas, ports of delivery, and authorizing the establishment of bonded warehouses at Bucksport and Vinalhaven, in the State of Maine, is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and will be read.

The bill was read.

The Committee on Commerce proposed to amend the bill by inserting after the word "Saluria," in line six, the words "and Bucksport and Vinalhaven and North Haven, in the State of Maine, in the district of Castine and Belfast, respectively."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Committee on Commerce further proposed to amend the bill by striking out the following clause, from line nine to line eighteen:

And that the privileges and provisions of the act entitled "An act to extend the warehousing system by establishing private bonded warehouses, and for other purposes," approved March 28, 1854, be, and the same are hereby, extended to the said ports, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury; and that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish private bonded warehouses at Bucksport and Vinalhaven, in the State of Maine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, reads as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That St. George and Boothbay, in the State of Maine, in the collection districts of Waldoboro and Wiscasset, respectively, and San Antonio, Texas, in the collection district of Saluria, and Bucksport and Vinalhaven and North Haven, in the State of Maine, in the district of Castine and Belfast, respectively, be, and the same are hereby, declared ports of delivery: Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall occasion additional expense to the Government of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, its title was amended to read: "A bill declaring St. George, Boothbay, Bucksport, and Vinalhaven, in the State of Maine, and San Antonio, Texas, ports of delivery."

NATIONAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business of yesterday. The reading of the bill then under consideration was nearly completed, and I think it will take but a few moments to dispose of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business of yesterday is the bill (S. No. 286) to incorporate the National Life Insurance Company of the United States of America.

Mr. CONNESS. I suppose that will be in order at one o'clock. The Senator now proposes to consider a private corporation bill in the morning hour.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. I understand that there is great anxiety in the Senate to consider the Arkansas bill after the morning hour, and I should like to have this bill out of the way. It will lead to no discussion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 286) to incorporate the National Life Insurance Company of the United States of America.

By its provisions John D. Defrees, William E. Chandler, Samuel Wilkeson, E. A. Rollins,* Nathan G. Starkweather, John A. Wills, Frank Turk, Adam S. Pratt, Henry C. Swain, and all the other persons who shall hereafter become stockholders in the company incorporated, are to be created a body politic and corporate, by the name and style of the National Life Insurance Company of the United States of America, for the purpose of carrying on the business of insurance on lives, and to make all and every insurance appertaining thereto or connected therewith; and to grant, purchase, and dispose of annuities in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, and elsewhere, with a capital stock of $1,000,000.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to amend the bill by adding to the tenth section the words "subject to the laws of the States respectively in which they may be established;" so as to make the section read:

That the office of the company shall be located in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, and said company may establish branches or agencies elsewhere, subject to the laws of the States respectively in which they may be established.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. There is no objection to that.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CONNESS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 489) to relinquish the interest of the United States in certain lands to the city and county of San Francisco; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

UMATILLA INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. CORBETT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 215) to vacate and sell the Umatilla reservation in the State of Oregon.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate with the Indians upon the Umatilla reservation, in the State of Oregon, for the relinquishment to the United States of all their claim or right to that reservation, and for their removal to other reservations in that State or Washington Territory; and to defray the expenses of the negotiation the sum of $2,000 is appropriated; but all expenses incurred and all payments made or promised to these Indians in acquiring their right or claim shall not exceed the probable proceeds of the sale of the reservations.

By the provisions of the second section the Commissioner of the General Land Office, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, after the negotiation is completed and ratified, is to cause the reservation to be surveyed into tracts of one hundred and sixty acres each, and, after giving notice for three months in two papers in the State having the largest circulation, to cause the same to be sold at auction, in tracts of not more than three hundred and twenty acres, to the highest and best bidder therefor.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, the first of which was to insert after the word "appropriated" in line eleven of section one the words "or so much thereof as may be necessary, and the agent of the Umatilla reservation in Oregon and the agent of the Yakama reservation in Washington Territory are hereby appointed to act with one commissioner, to be appointed by the President, for such negotiations."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the word "therefor" in line nine of section two to insert:

Provided, Said lands shall not be sold for less than $1 25 per acre.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask for the reading of that provision which limits the cost of the negotiation, &c., to the proceeds of the land.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That all expenses incurred and all payments made or promised to said Indians in acquiring their said right or claim shall not exceed the probable proceeds of the sale of said reservations as hereinafter provided.

Mr. SHERMAN. I certainly would object to a bill so indefinite as that. The cost of this transfer of these Indians from this reservation in Oregon to another portion of the country is unlimited substantially. The commissioners, or whoever may make the treaty, are to estimate the probable value of this land, and that is the only limit. I do not know the extent of the reservation or the number of Indians upon it, or any facts that would justify me in proposing a limit; but it is usual always to appropriate a fixed sum of money to pay the expense of negotiating a treaty with Indians for the sale of their lands and their transfer from one section of country to another. But this gives them the whole value of the land, and the only limit is the estimated amount of money which will probably be received from the land, not the actual proceeds of the land. I must object to a bill of that kind. It should be more definite.

Mr. HARLAN. I desire to hear the first section of the bill read that authorizes the appointment of a commission.

The Chief Clerk read the first section of the bill.

Mr. HARLAN. I now desire to inquire whether it was the purpose of the committee in framing this bill to place the power in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior and the other officers named to make a final disposition of this land, or whether the phraseology "negotiate" means the negotiation of a treaty which will come before the Senate for ratification?

Mr. CORBETT. The design of the bill, and it so provides, is that when this negotiation shall have been made and ratified the arrangement shall go into operation.

Mr. CONNESS. Ratified by whom?

Mr. CORBETT. Ratified by the Senate. If not, it will not go into operation; $2,000 is appropriated to defray the expenses of this commission in making the negotiation. It is provided, also, that the expense of the removal to this other reservation shall not exceed the probable amount of receipts from the lands which we propose to negotiate for and on which the Indians are now situated. It is proposed to sell these lands at auction, provided they shall not be sold for less than $1 25 per acre, and the commission is to take into consideration in removing these Indians whether the expense of it will cost more than the probable receipts from the sale of the lands. I will state to the Senate that this reservation lies in the direct line of travel from California and Oregon to Idaho and the mining region, and the miners passing through the reservation create some little trouble with the Indians, and it is liable to bring on a war. It is the desire of the people that the Indians should be removed, and I suppose the Indians are willing to remove provided a satisfactory arrangement can be made with them. If such an arrangement can be made, the treaty will be ratified by the Senate if they consider it a satisfactory treaty; otherwise it would be rejected and would be of no effect, and the only result would be the expenditure of $2,000 for this negotiation. It is the desire of the people of Oregon to have these Indians removed from the reservation to avoid trouble for the future, which might cost hundreds of thousands of dollars if we should be involved in a war by the miners passing through this country. There is a road directly through this Indian reservation as now situated. It is proposed to remove them entirely from that route where the miners pass, away from the temptation and the trouble that may be involved by this travel.

Mr. SHERMAN. How large is the reservation?

Mr. CORBETT. About twenty by twenty-five miles. A portion of it is situated in a valley, and a portion upon the Blue mountains.

Mr. NYE. Allow me to ask the Senator whether any evidence has been taken in regard to the desire of these Indians to remove.

Mr. CORBETT. I was upon the reservation myself, and consulted with the agent there, and it was his opinion that there had better be such a negotiation made with the Indians and to have them removed.

Mr. NYE. I did not know but that this came within the rule we had just established, that the President could remove by order. [Laughter.] I have only one suggestion to make in regard to this bill, and that is in relation to the appointment of this commission. I desire to enter my protest against authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to appoint commissioners for every purpose. The Government already have officers on the spot who can act as commissioners. The superintendent of Indian affairs for the State of Oregon is probably as good a man as can be found to ascertain the wishes of the Indians, and it is entirely within the purview of his official duties to know all about this matter. That can be done without the expenditure of $2,000; but the rule is to send out some pet from here and pay his expenses liberally to negotiate with Indians that it is impossible he should know anything about. These pet commissionerships, I think, we have had enough of.

Mr. CORBETT. I will state that I am personally acquainted with the agent upon this reservation and the one upon the Yakama reservation; and I will make a motion to amend, by inserting the superintendent of Indian affairs for Oregon as the third commissioner.

Mr. NYE. Then strike out your appropriation, for the matter is within his duties. It is his duty to ascertain the wishes of the Indians.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator from Oregon is through, I desire to submit a motion that the bill be recommitted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) The Senator from Oregon has submitted an amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. Pending the amendment I move to recommit the bill, and I will give my reasons very briefly. This bill, if it excites the attention of the Senate sufficiently to enable them to judge of it, contains several new features. It has been usual in negotiating Indian treaties to provide a small appropriation to authorize a negotiation of a treaty. That is the first step. When that treaty comes in it is ratified or rejected as the case may be. This bill contains several new features. It makes an appropriation of $2,000 and all the proceeds of this land. I am told the reservation is twenty miles by twenty-five, or five hundred square miles; so that the commissioners authorized by this bill would proceed to negotiate upon the basis of paying the Indians the entire cost of the land and $2,000 besides, and this in anticipation of the confirmation of the treaty.

It also makes a different mode of selling the public lands from what is provided by law in all other cases. It provides for a different mode of sale, contains a limit, and cuts off all scrip, warrants, and everything of that kind. It does seem to me that the Indian Committee have not sufficiently considered this matter, and I therefore move to recommit this bill to the Committee on Indian Affairs. I believe that motion takes precedence of any motion to amend.

Mr. CORBETT. I think I made the motion to amend previous to that.

Mr. SHERMAN. But a motion to recommit precedes a motion to amend.

Mr. CORBETT. I should like to state my amendment before that question is put.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. CORBETT. I desire to strike out in line fourteen, after the word "with," the words "one commissioner to be appointed by the President for such negotiation," and to insert "the superintendent of Indian affairs of Oregon." I desire to state before the question is put that it is not the fair interpretation of this bill, nor the intention that they shall expend this amount of money.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair deems it his duty to state that this amendment is not now strictly in order, it being an amendment to an amendment which has been agreed to; but it will be in order when the bill shall be considered in the Senate. We are now acting as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CORBETT. I am speaking in opposition to the commitment of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is in order.

Mr. CORBETT. I will state to the Chair that it is not the intention to expend this entire amount of money; but that in providing new reservations in negotiating with the Indians upon the Yakama reservation and the Warm Spring reservation, which are the reservations to which they will probably be removed, the expense of negotiating shall not exceed the probable amount of money that this reservation will fetch when it is placed upon the market and sold at auction; and if the lands do not bring $1 25 per acre, they will be withdrawn from the market.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Ohio is somewhat mistaken in saying that this bill is without any precedent, for I prepared the bill and I drew it from acts that I found on the statute-books, and particularly one in reference to the sale of a reservation in the Territory of Utah. Although this bill does not in every particular conform to the provisions of that bill, yet in substance it is like that and some other enactments upon the subject.

This bill provides that a negotiation shall be made with these Indians for the purpose of purchasing this reservation. The reservation belongs to the Indians. It is their property. It is located in the midst of a thickly-settled country. Every man who has any experience on the subject knows that whatever treaty stipulations there may be, when the whites and the Indians are brought in contact, as they are when the Indians are located in the midst of a thickly-settled country, disturbances ensue, and it is desirable for the sake of the Indians and for the sake of the country that they should be removed if possible to some other localities.

The object of this bill is to provide, in the first place, that negotiations may be made with these Indians for the purpose of purchasing this reservation, and $2,000 are appropriated for that purpose. That is to provide the ways and means by which these commissioners may assemble the Indians together in council and attend the meetings of the Indians. Of course it will be attended with some expense. This inconsiderable amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is to defray those expenses. Then the bill provides that they may negotiate for the purchase of this reservation from these Indians and for their removal, but they are not to pay any more for the reservation, nor agree to pay any more, than the probable proceeds of the sale of the reservation; so that the Government of the United States shall lose nothing by this transaction. This land does not belong to the Government of the United States at this time. It belongs to these Indians; it is their property; and the object of this bill is simply to enable the United States, through commissioners, to purchase this property from the Indians and to obtain their consent to go upon other reservations in the neighborhood in Washington Territory and Oregon, and to do that without subjecting the United States to any expense more than the proceeds of the sale of this reservation.

I do not know how the bill can be framed in a more satisfactory manner. It does not appropriate anything; it simply provides that these commissioners shall not agree, when they negotiate with these Indians, to pay more than the probable proceeds of the sale of this reservation; not that they shall agree to pay anything out of the Treasury of the United States to these Indians for this reservation; but if the Indians will consent to go upon other reservations for the amount that these lands will probably bring when exposed to sale, then they are authorized to complete the negotiations.

As to the mode in which it is proposed to sell these lands, what other mode can be adopted? There is no such thing as a preemption right to these lands, because they belong to the Indians, and when the Indians are removed they are exposed to public sale; competition is invited from all quarters, and men go there and bid for the lands, and they are allowed to bid and pay as much as they please, not less than $1 25 per acre. So that this mode of selling the land is of more advantage to the Government than any other mode of sale that has been adopted. I believe this is the mode adopted in reference to the sale of reservations for military purposes. Time and again bills have passed the Senate providing that where reservations for military purposes are exposed to sale they shall be sold in parcels of land at public auction and bring as much as people are disposed to pay for them; and so in reference to this reservation.

There is no reason that I can see why this bill should be recommitted, why there should be any particular objection to this negotiation. It is of great consequence to the people of the State of Oregon that this negotiation should be made. This reservation lies right upon the great thoroughfare between Oregon and Idaho Territory. There is a public road through the reservation, and hundreds of people are passing right through the heart of this reservation all the time with their teams, and they are brought into contact with the Indians, and disturbances spring up, and the whole community is kept in a state of commotion in consequence of difficulties that grow out of the contact of these teamsters, and transient persons and other people, with the Indians. This is simply a proposition to remove the Indians, if possible, to other reservations. If the negotiation does not succeed, there will be no great loss to anybody; but if it does succeed, it will be of great benefit, in my judgment, to the country; it will bring that valuable tract of land into use for agricultural purposes; and it will be a benefit to the Indians, because it will remove them to the Simcoe reservation, the Warm Spring reservation, or some other reservation in the immediate neighborhood, I suppose, on satisfactory terms, on which they are willing to go.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope this measure will be disposed of. I was waiting for a vote on this motion to recommit it. I gave notice on Monday that to-day I should endeavor to call up the bill to recognize the State government of Arkansas, which is an important matter; and, unless a vote can be taken at once, I move that the bill under consideration be postponed with a view to proceed to the consideration of the bill of the House of Representatives to recognize the State government in Arkansas.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the vote will be taken on the motion to recommit by common consent.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I withdraw my motion if we can take a vote at once on this.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to make some remarks on this bill if it is to be pressed now; but I have no objection to its recommitment to the committee, and if they, on reexamining the points to which I call attention, find nothing in them, I shall have no objection to the bill; but I wish to secure that reexamination.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I withdraw my motion with a view to take a vote on the motion to recommit.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not wish to speak upon it if the Senate will recommit the bill. I only wish to have it examined again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recommit the bill to the committee that reported it.

The motion was agreed to.

SECRETARY OF THE SENATE.

Mr. SUMNER. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the resignation of Mr. Forney, as Secretary of the Senate, is hereby accepted, and Mr. McDonald is authorized to act as Secretary ad interim until the choice of a successor.

I ask the action of the Senate upon it now.

Mr. DRAKE. I object.

Mr. HARLAN. Does one objection carry the resolution over?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does.

Mr. HARLAN. I object to its consideration.

Mr. NYE. I merely want to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he could not use some other word than "ad interim." [Laughter.] I do not like it.

Mr. SUMNER. It is applicable to this case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution goes over under the rule.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 658) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1869, and for other purposes, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and has appointed Mr. J. G. BLAINE of Maine, Mr. J. A. GARFIELD of Ohio, and Mr. C. E. PHELPS of Maryland, managers at the same on its part.

THE ALABAMA CLAIMS.

Mr. MORTON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be requested to lay before the Senate, if not inconsistent with the public interest, copies of all negotiations and correspondence between the British Government and the Government of the United States in relation to what are commonly called the Alabama claims.

IMPEACHMENT OF PRESIDENT—PRIVILEGE.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move now that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1039, to admit the State of Arkansas to representation in Congress.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I wanted to arrest that subject. I got up and addressed myself to the Chair before the vote was taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator addressed the Chair before—

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly I did.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not recognize him until after the announcement.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to take up the resolution in relation to the privileges of the Senate that I introduced a few days ago. I ask for the reading of the resolution.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Whereas it is represented that some persons have been and are engaged in violating the rights and privileges of the Senate by the use of threats, intimidation, and other unlawful and improper means toward its members to constrain them in their consideration, action, and judgment in the matter of the articles of impeachment against the President of the United States now pending before the Senate as a court of impeachment: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That a committee of three, to be appointed by the Chair, do proceed to inquire into the facts of such imputed threats, intimidation, and other unlawful means aforesaid, and the names of the persons, if any, using, or that have used, them; and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers, to take evidence, employ a stenographer, and report the facts to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on taking up the resolution just read for consideration.

Mr. DAVIS. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 23, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Cole, Davis, Doolittle, Edmunds, Ferry, Fessenden, Fowler, Frothingham, Henderson, Howe, Johnson, McCreery, Morgan, Norton, Patterson of Tennessee, Ross, Sherman, Sprague, Trumbull, Vickers, and Wiley—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Cameron, Conness, Corbett, Cragin, Drake, Harlan, Howard, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Stewart, Sumner, Tipton, Wade, and Williams—14.
ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Cattell, Chandler, Conkling, Dixon, Grimes, Hendricks, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Nye, Patterson of New Hampshire, Saulsbury, Thayer, Van Winkle, Wilson, and Yates—17.

So the motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is an amendment pending to the resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the amendment and resolution both be read.

Mr. DAVIS. Before the amendment is read I ask to modify the resolution. The amendment offered is an additional resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can modify his original proposition.

The CHIEF CLERK. The resolution, as proposed to be modified, reads as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to inquire into and report the facts in relation to any threats, intimidation, or other improper influences that were used or offered to be used, directly or indirectly, to control or influence the consideration or decision of the Senate, or any Senator, in the matter of the impeachment of the President of the United States, lately pending before the Senate as a court of impeachment. Also, to inquire into and report the facts in relation to any overture or offer of an improper character to any person by or in the name of any Senator in connection with said impeachment trial, and the names of any persons connected with said transactions, or any of them. Said committee to have power to send for persons and papers, to summon witnesses, to take their evidence, and employ a stenographer, and to report as early as practicable.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask that the last clause of the resolution be read again, beginning with the words "also to inquire."

The Chief Clerk read the last clause of the resolution.

Mr. CONKLING. The purport of that seems to be, and I inquire of the honorable Senator whether the intention is, to limit the investigation to overtures made by a Senator or by some person professing to act for a Senator.

Mr. DAVIS. I will make an explanation. The second branch of the resolution proposes it in both forms, whether an overture was made by any Senator or if and in his name, and the names of the persons who made the overture or offer in the name of the Senator.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I inquire of the honorable Senator, if he will allow me, whether the other part of the resolution extends the inquiry to similar overtures made by some person other than a Senator, or some person not professing to act in the name of a Senator?

Mr. DAVIS. I do not know that it does. I have no objection to it in that form and in the simplest form in which it can be put. My object is to probe the whole subject.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask for the reading of the resolution again.

Mr. DAVIS. With the permission of the honorable Senator from Maryland I will make one statement. In making this proposition I have no reference to any Senator whatever.

On the contrary, when I saw published in the papers and heard in conversation implications of a certain Senator, I then avowed my utter disbelief that he was at all complicated in the matter. I am still firmly of that opinion; but I desire to have the matter thoroughly explored and every man who is criminal exposed—I care not who he is—whether a Senator, a correspondent, or anybody else. My object is to make an inquiry into the purity of the Senate, and in relation to every approach that was made to any Senator during the progress of this trial, come from what quarter it may.

I will make another remark in reference to a suggestion that was made by the honorable Senator from Maine [Mr. MORRILL] a few days ago. He expressed his doubt whether there were any grounds upon which to introduce this resolution, whether there were any threats. It seems strange to me, when the Senator made that declaration, that he did not remember the declaration made by his colleague to the Senate some days ago. That Senator said that he was receiving many letters upon the subject of the trial, many of them of a threatening character, some of them threatening his assassination, and that one of those letters threatening assassination was either written or indorsed in the Senate. I did not understand him particularly upon that point. [Mr. FESSENDEN shook his head.] If I did not understand the Senator, I will ask him for an explanation.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I made no allusion, and intended to make none, to any Senator whatever.

Mr. DAVIS. I understood so.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I had heard of a remark made in the Senate by an outside person that was something of the same character, and it struck me rather as an indorsement of the idea. I did not state what it was, and I did not state who the individual was; and I should not care to state, because it might have been and probably was a hasty remark made in passion by somebody who might not have intended to convey the impression that the remark might naturally have conveyed in time of excitement to anybody's mind. It was not a Senator, but some person outside.

Mr. DAVIS. I understand the honorable Senator from Maine substantially now as I did previously. Indeed, I understood him to disclaim expressly on that occasion that there was any indorsement of any such threat by a Senator; but I understand the Senator to state distinctly that it was made in the Senate, and my inference was that it had been made by an officer of the Senate.

Mr. FESSENDEN. No, sir.

Mr. DAVIS. That, I admit, was a mere inference, and I am gratified that I was mistaken in it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. A person not connected with the Senate in any way.

Mr. DAVIS. But that there have been threats, intimidation, and improper influences attempted upon various Senators in connection with the trial, I have no doubt under the sun.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Will the honorable Senator allow me to say one word?

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Senator certainly misunderstood me. I did not rise on the former occasion to say that there had been no threats, but rather to call upon the Senator from Kentucky to state the grounds upon which he offered his resolution, whether he had information which authorized him to offer such a resolution. That was my proposition, and I think I said in the same connection that there had been threats, doubtless. I had received them myself, but they were idle; they did not disturb me. I did not suppose that I was going to be assassinated. I had no belief of it, and they did not amount even to intimidation. They were anonymous in all cases so far as I am concerned, and I passed them by as utterly worthless, not worth a moment's consideration or attention. And that was the manner in which I was disposed, with all respect, of course, to treat the Senator's proposition—as not worth the consideration of the Senate, unless somebody somewhere knows something more than has come to my knowledge. It was in that sense that I called upon the honorable Senator from Kentucky to state whether the threats to which he referred were of this trivial character as I regarded those which I had received myself, as other gentlemen had, or whether he knew of something so grave and menacing and really threatening as should justify the Senate in an investigation into it.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President—

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator will allow me, I wish he would either strike out those words confining the inquiry to what has been done in the name of a Senator, or else add "any other person," so as to remove that restriction.

Mr. DAVIS. I will insert the words "or other person" in the proper place. I desire to make one single remark in connection with the remarks of the honorable Senator from Maine. I have received some letters, as the honorable Senator himself has received them. I have regarded them precisely as he does, and I want no inquiry in relation to my affairs—none whatever. But, at the same time, I know not of my own personal knowledge, but upon the most creditable information, that Senators were approached and were threatened and intimidated, face to face, and I want to get at that sort of influence and invasion of the privileges and rights of the Senate.

I desire, sir, that the purity and independence of the Senate shall be vindicated. With that view, I have asked simply for a committee to inquire into and report all the facts to the Senate, and, when the facts are laid before the Senate, that the Senate shall take what course it may please in relation to the matter. That is its right and its privilege, and the right and privilege of nobody else.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified by the mover.

Mr. HOWARD. I wish it may be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to inquire into and report the facts in relation to any threats, intimidation, or other improper influences that were used or offered to be used, directly or indirectly, to control or influence the consideration or decision of the Senate or any Senator in the matter of the impeachment of the President of the United States lately pending before the Senate as a court of impeachment. Also, to inquire into and report the facts in relation to any overture or offer of an improper character to any person by or in the name of any Senator or other person in connection with said impeachment trial, and the names of any persons connected with said transactions or any of them. Said committee to have power to send for persons and papers, to summon witnesses, to take their evidence, and employ a stenographer, and to report as early as practicable.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to amend so as to have the committee appointed by the Chair.

Mr. MORTON. I suggest a further amendment, that the committee consist of five instead of three.

Mr. DAVIS. I have no objection to that. I accept that suggestion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The modification suggested by the Senator from Indiana is agreed to by the mover of the resolution.

Mr. ROSS. Mr. President, since the vote taken in this Chamber on the 16th instant, which resulted in the acquittal of the President of the charge of a high misdemeanor in office, set out in the eleventh article of impeachment, the whole country has been filled with rumors of bribery and corruption on the part of members of this body. Were these rumors confined to street or bar-room gossip they might not be worthy the notice of the Senate; but the House of Representatives has deemed them of sufficient importance to predicate official action on them, and since the date of that vote the board of managers have been in daily session, prosecuting investigations on this subject.

These charges are calculated to affect the honor of the Senate, and as they have received from the House of Representatives such marked and protracted attention it is becoming in the Senate to take notice of them. An investigation is due from the Senate to its own high character, to its accused members, and to the American people.

If there be on this floor a Senator who has received or offered, or agreed to take a bribe of any nature whatever to convict or acquit the President, let him be proven guilty before a committee of his peers and expelled.

If there be one who has yielded his convictions to threats, let us expose the coward to the merited contempt and scorn of a courageous people.

If there be one who has attempted to bully or bribe a fellow-Senator, let us know the fact, and determine whether he is a fit associate for us in this high council chamber.

But if none of these offenses have marred the dignity of this great trial, let the calumnies which the tongues and pens of ten thousand slanderers have scattered broadcast over the land be dispelled, and let the purity and dignity of the American Senate, and of the humblest as well as of the highest of its members be vindicated by its own act.

I have borne in silence until now assaults on my character and motives as a member of the court, such as few, if any, of my associates have endured. I do not allude to the fierce storm of party denunciation which burst over the heads of the seven Republicans who voted "not guilty," for that was anticipated, and I was prepared for it. The peltings of that storm I have borne with equanimity, conscious that I had performed a just and worthy act, and confident that the development of time would bring an ample vindication of my conduct against the charges of infidelity to my party and the country. I allude to the charges of bribery in its various forms, now being examined by the managers of the impeachment in secret session. I allude to scandals which have been deliberately concocted by those urging the cause of impeachment, and repeated threats of assassination, all brought with the view of affecting my action in favor of the conviction of the President.

Believing the trial would soon end, I have thus far submitted in silence to these accusations and assaults, rather than provoke a controversy in the Senate as to matters then pending before the court. But the trial is now ended, and I have something to say in vindication of my conduct during it, which it is both my right and my duty to say.

At the beginning of the trial of this cause I was sworn by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, as a member of the court of impeachment, to do "impartial justice to Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, according to the Constitution and laws." I had been, and still am, an earnest opponent of the reconstruction policy of his Administration. I thought, as I still think, that policy in many most important particulars, unwise and injurious to the best interests of the country. I longed, and still long, for such changes in the administration of the Government as would conform it to the views of the dominant party of the country, and to the reconstruction policy of Congress. But I could not, with the light then before me, declare the President guilty of high crimes and misdemeanors on mere differences as to governmental policy. I sought to divest my mind of all party prejudice, hear the accusations and the evidences, and endeavored to cast my vote in the cause with the candor and courage of an honest judge.

In this spirit I discharged my duty as a member of the court of impeachment. I voted to admit all the evidence offered by both the prosecution and the defense, so that the Senate, sitting as a court and jury, as judges of law and fact, might sift it all and determine the cause with no fact shut out by technical rule which bore on the guilt or innocence of the accused; and when I voted on the several articles of impeachment I cast out of the scale, as far as I was able, all mere party considerations, and weighed the cause as the Constitution and laws and my oath demanded.

I do not claim the attention of the Senate to-day in order to vindicate the wisdom of my votes. The law and the evidence applicable to the several articles have been ably discussed by the managers on the part of the House, by the counsel for the President, and by the lawyers of the Senate, and any argument from me would be egotistic, superfluous, and now out of time. I ask the attention of the Senate to assert the integrity of my conduct as one of the judges in the trial; to denounce falsehoods set afloat affecting my honor as a Senator; to demand of the Senate that all charges of improper influences brought to bear on Senators during the late trial be openly and thoroughly investigated by the Senate and not be committed to the secret investigation, but public criticism of the board of prosecutors appointed by the House. I challenge any man or board to appear before this Senate or its committee and exhibit accusations or evidence against me; and, finally, to give notice that when that committee is appointed, I shall move the Senate to call on the House for copies of all the testimony taken by its board of managers under the resolution of the 16th instant, so that if any evidence of corrupt practices by or toward any Senator, whether he be one of those voting for or against conviction, be in possession of the board, it may not fail to be brought to the attention of the Senate.

As a foundation for the charge of bribery brought against me it is claimed that I assured my colleague repeatedly, and up to the day of the vote, that I would vote for conviction on the eleventh article; that he had my pledge in writing to that effect, together with that of thirty-five other Senators; and that I suddenly and unaccountably, except upon the supposition of bribery, changed my determination in a single night. If the assertion of fact were true, the inference were monstrously unfair. Who among you, Senators, anxious to keep his oath and do impartial justice, was at all times free from doubt? The honorable Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. WILLEY,] in a card published on the 25th instant in the papers of this city, says that he and his colleague were in doubt as to the eleventh article until the week of the judgment, and that he was led by the announced opinion of the Chief Justice on the manner of taking the vote on that article to vote for conviction, while his colleague was led by the same opinion to vote for acquittal. I confess, as I am sure a large part of this Senate might truthfully do, to having entertained doubts about that and other articles until a few days before the vote was taken, and I then resolved the question in my own mind by giving to my country the benefit of my doubts. I do not deny that it has been my intention to support a portion of the articles of impeachment, nor that I have given numbers of those who approached me on that subject to understand that such was my intention. But, sir, does that debar me from changing that purpose when I become convinced that a wrong is to be perpetrated by carrying it out? Is it an uncommon thing for men's minds to be changed with the lapse of time and the further development of the questions at issue?

But no man ever had from me a positive assurance that I would vote either for conviction or acquittal on that article, or either of the other articles voted on, prior to Thursday, the 14th instant.

That my colleague had no such assurance, but was fully informed of my position upon those articles, will be amply shown upon the investigation contemplated by this resolution by the testimony of Senators on both sides of the question of impeachment.

Mr. President, I have been no summer soldier, no sunshine patriot. I was baptized in politics in the old Abolition party of 1844, when but seven thousand men in the United States dared to say that they were the friends of the slave, and bore my share of the whips and scorn which fell to the lot of its members before anti-slaveryism became a popular and lucrative profession. I led a colony to Kansas in 1856, and there struggled with success to check the spread of slavery; and again, when rebellion threatened the nation's life, I entered the ranks of the Union Army as a private soldier and carried the flag until slavery was destroyed and the authority of the national Government reestablished. I have never labored or fought for plunder. My hands have no dishonorable stain upon them. No man can point to a single instance where I have wavered in the maintenance of my convictions, whether in the battle's front or the polemics of the forum. Always poor in this world's goods, I have contentedly worked and fought for the establishment of principles which I believed to be beneficent to my fellow-man and to my country; and without egotism I may challenge any honorable Senator here to produce a record of service, in civil or military life, freer to this moment from all stains of selfishness or blot of dishonor than that which I now proudly look back upon and call my own.

Mr. President, I feel that this charge is heralded over the land and evidence ostentatiously sought to sustain it to make me a scapegoat for the egregious blunders, weaknesses, and hates which have characterized this whole impeachment movement; itself a stupendous blunder from its inception to the present time. I have been singled out as the object of assault, doubtless, because I am a new member here, unskilled in debate, unknown to national politics, and comparatively without the means of self-defense possessed by abler and more experienced members. I am conscious of these disadvantages, as well as of the strength and malignity of my accusers. They have to-day at their back a large majority of the great patriotic party to which they and I belong, with nearly all its machinery of vengeance; while I have but a feeble voice here, backed, however, by that never-failing source of strength, my own consciousness of rectitude and patriotic, honest purpose. Let them do their worst. There is a just people behind us all who constitute the court of last resort, in which all our acts are tried and judged. Dear as I value my hard-earned reputation—the chief property of myself, my wife, and my children—profoundly as I appreciate my weakness and the strength of my accusers, I am upheld by a consciousness of rectitude which no power can shake, and I bid defiance to them and their calumnies.

Mr. President, I desire to offer a substitute for the resolution now pending.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, which was to strike out all after the word "Resolved" and insert:

That a committee be appointed by the President of the Senate, to be composed of three Senators, whose duty it shall be to inquire whether improper or corrupt means have been used, or attempted to be used, to influence the votes of the members of the Senate in the trial of the impeachment of the President; and that the said committee be authorized and empowered to send for persons and papers, and to do all things that in their judgment may be necessary for the furtherance of the object of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. ROSS. In conformity with the suggestion acceded to in regard to the other resolution I will modify it so as to make the committee five instead of three members.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the resolution as amended.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is a bill pending; I think the Arkansas bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. WILSON.]

The motion was agreed to; and after a short time spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 198) to reestablish the boundaries of the collection districts of Michigan and Mackinac, and to change the names of the collection districts of Michilimackinac and Port Huron;

A bill (H. R. No. 875) to repeal an act approved March 2, 1867, entitled "An act to regulate the disposition of fines, penalties, and forfeitures received under the laws relating to the customs, and for other purposes," and to amend certain acts for the prevention and punishment of frauds on the revenue and for the prevention of smuggling;

A bill (H. R. No. 1119) for the registration or enrollment of certain foreign vessels;

A bill (H. R. No. 1120) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to change the names of certain vessels; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 96) for the relief of John Sedgwick, collector of internal revenue third district, California.

REPRESENTATION OF ARKANSAS.

On motion of Mr. TRUMBULL, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1039) to admit the State of Arkansas to representation in Congress, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. DRAKE, to strike out all of the bill after the enacting clause, and in lieu thereof to insert:

That the State of Arkansas, under and with the constitution thereof adopted in convention on the 11th day of February, 1868, and subsequently ratified by the people of said State, shall be entitled to be admitted to representation in Congress as one of the States of the Union whenever the Legislature of said State shall pass an act agreeing, on behalf of said State, to the following fundamental condition of such admission, to wit: That the said constitution shall never be so amended or changed as to deprive any one of the right to vote at all elections held in said State by the people for Representatives in Congress, or for State, county, or municipal officers, or for any other purpose, who now is or may hereafter become, according to the present terms of said constitution, entitled to vote; unless such deprivation be imposed as a punishment for such crimes as are now felonies at the common law, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted under laws equally applicable to all the inhabitants of said State; that the third section of the first article of said constitution, in the words following, to wit: "The equality of all persons before the law is recognized, and shall ever remain inviolate; nor shall any citizen ever be deprived of any right, privilege, or immunity, nor exempted from any burden or duty, on account of race, color, or previous condition," shall never be repealed or changed; that any violation by said State of the terms of this condition shall authorize the exclusion of said State from representation in either House of Congress so long as such violation continues; and that all laws or ordinances enacted or ordained in said State in contravention of this fundamental condition shall be wholly inoperative therein.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That upon the passage of such an act by the Legislature of said State legally authenticated copies thereof shall be transmitted to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and by them laid before the Congress, and if declared by a concurrent vote of both Houses to be in accordance with this act, the said State shall be admitted to representation in Congress as one of the States of the Union.

Mr. DRAKE. Mr. President, I deem it proper to say a few words in explanation of this amendment. I do not propose to go into any extended remarks upon it, nor in any way to occupy the attention of the Senate for any length of time in connection with it or with the original bill.

I desire it to be understood, sir, in the outset, that the amendment is not offered in antagonism to the bill, but for the purpose of putting the bill, as I conceive, in a better shape. As it came from the House of Representatives the bill contains a fundamental condition intended to secure a certain great object in connection with the admission of Arkansas to representation in Congress. The reason of my offering the amendment now before the Senate is that the bill as it came from the House of Representatives seems to me to be inefficient in accomplishing the object which it bears upon its face.

I make these remarks, sir, in order that the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom the bill was referred here, and who reported it back without amendment, may understand my purpose in offering the amendment.

In the first place, Mr. President, on the general ground of imposing fundamental conditions on the admission of States to representation in Congress, I take it for granted that the practice of the Government for more than fifty years on that subject establishes the right of Congress to impose such conditions, and that that right can hardly become the subject of argument here in connection with this bill. A prominent and well-known instance in which that was done in reference to the constitution of a State to be admitted was in 1821, in regard to Missouri; and again it was done when the State of Nevada was admitted, and again within the last eighteen months when the State of Nebraska was admitted.

In view of these precedents, I do not undertake to make any remarks further upon the right of Congress to impose fundamental conditions to the admission of any State; and I proceed now to show very briefly wherein this bill as it came from the House of Representatives appears to me to be insufficient for the purpose it was intended to subserve.

In the first place, the fundamental condition is imposed on the State of Arkansas without, as in previous instances of a like kind, the assent of that State being required to be signified to it. If the State shall be admitted without signifying by formal act its assent to the fundamental condition, the door will be left open in the future for it to deny that it ever did assent to the fundamental condition or that it is in any wise bound by it. I do not wish to leave that door open for future difficulty; and therefore the amendment which I propose requires the Legislature of that State, as in the case of Nebraska, to assent to the fundamental condition precedent to her admission to representation in Congress.

Again, the bill as it stands says "that the constitution of Arkansas shall never be so amended or changed as to deprive any citizen, or class of citizens, of the United States of the right to vote who are entitled to vote by the constitution herein recognized." Now, let us look at that constitution. The bill as it stands protects only citizens of the United States. The constitution adopted by Arkansas provides for persons who have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States being entitled to the right to vote; therefore the bill offers no protection whatever to them. Hence it may be considered as in some sense antagonistic to the very constitution which it is intended to affirm.

Again, it applies only to "citizens of the United States" when the Constitution says that "every male person born in the United States;" it does not say "citizens" of the United States, but "every male person born in the United States, and every male person who has been naturalized," &c. I wish that the act admitting the State into the Union should be in its terms coextensive with the constitutional provision of Arkansas with regard to the elective franchise; and when the people of that State say that every male person born within the United States shall have the right to vote, I do not wish that the act itself should confine its terms to persons comprised within the class of those known as citizens, because if we restrict it to citizens of the United States the question may be sprung in that State hereafter whether colored people born in the United States are citizens, and I do not wish to leave any such question open.

If it be answered that an act of Congress declares that they are citizens, I reply that that act of Congress will be of no avail whatever before the State courts of Arkansas if that State should ever come under the control of those who were engaged in the rebellion. I do not wish to leave that question open; and, therefore, sir, the amendment that I have drawn says that the constitution "shall never be so amended or changed as to deprive any one of the right to vote," &c. That comports with the language of the Arkansas constitution. The act as it stands, in my opinion, does not.

But, sir, there is another objection to the condition contained in the bill, and that is that the condition says that the constitution shall not be so amended or changed "as to deprive any citizen or class of citizens of the United States of the right to vote who are entitled to vote by the constitution herein recognized." That phraseology, "who are entitled to vote," may be held to mean those that are now entitled to vote, and not those that may hereafter become so entitled. In order to obviate the difficulty which may grow out of the attempt to disfranchise men there who become voters after this bill shall pass, my amendment provides that the protection shall extend to all those who may hereafter become by this constitution entitled to vote, as well as to those now entitled.

There is still another objection to the condition as expressed in the bill, and that is in the exception as to the punishment for crime. The bill authorizes men to be deprived of the right to vote "as a punishment for such crimes as are now felonies at common law, whereof they shall have been duly convicted." There is one fundamental defect in that, and that is that there is no requirement that the laws under which men shall be duly convicted of these crimes shall be equally applicable to all the inhabitants of the State. It is a very easy thing in a State to make one set of laws applicable to white men, and another set of laws applicable to colored men. I saw it stated in a paper recently in such an authoritative manner that I have no doubt of its truth, that in the State of Florida, at this time, a negro who commits an assault and battery upon a white man may be sold into slavery for a period of twenty years, and that negroes have been sold into slavery there for jostling white men upon the sidewalks of the streets.

Mr. CONKLING. Was that a felony?

Mr. DRAKE. They may declare it to be a felony or they may make other offenses felonies. I only cite this as an illustration of the spirit of the legislation of these States if they ever come under rebel control again, that one punishment is to be meted out to a white man and another punishment to a negro. I wish to guard against that, and that is guarded against in the amendment which I propose by declaring that those laws shall be equally applicable to all the inhabitants of the State.

These, Mr. President, are the points on which I object to this bill as it stands; but there is one very much greater point than any of these, behind the whole, and that is, that there is no sanction whatever to this fundamental condition. If you pass the bill as it stands now, and the State of Arkansas chooses to violate the fundamental condition, what are you going to do to it? Where is the recourse? Will you go into the courts of that State if they should have fallen under rebel control again? What rights would any loyal man get in the courts of that State? If you look at it as a political question, what recourse has Congress or the nation for a violation of this fundamental condition? There is the great defect of the bill, in my judgment. I wish to guard that thing, and therefore it is that the amendment which I propose provides "that any violation by said State of the terms of this condition shall authorize the exclusion of said State from representation in either House of Congress so long as such violation continues." That is the only guarantee I know of that Congress has it in its power to impose now for the observance of this fundamental condition. If any other can be presented by any Senator that will be more efficient I will most gladly adopt it; but that we ought not to pass a bill containing a fundamental condition which must look forward to the long future to protect the rights of men without having some means of enforcement of the condition, or in the absence of the means of enforcement of it by penalty, that we should have some means of making the State of Arkansas feel that it must stand up to its engagements, I trust that every Senator on this floor will agree with me.

There is another feature in the amendment which I have offered that I think should become a part of the condition, and that is, that the third section of the first article of the constitution of Arkansas shall never be changed or repealed. That section is in the declaration of rights, and declares that—

"The equality of all persons before the law is recognized, and shall ever remain inviolate; nor shall any citizen ever be deprived of any right, privilege, or immunity, nor exempted from any burden or duty on account of race, color, or previous condition."

The people of Arkansas have laid the foundations of their new government upon that cornerstone, and I hold that it is one which the Congress of the United States should have so planted within the constitution of that State that it can never be removed, that it should be the sheet-anchor of the safety of all the colored race in that State in all the future.

These, Mr. President, are the features of the first section of the amendment. The second section prescribes merely the manner in which the assent of this State shall be brought to the knowledge of Congress, by sending a copy of the act of the Legislature assenting to this fundamental condition to the Presiding Officers of the two Houses of Congress; and then, when the fundamental condition shall have been agreed to and made known to Congress in that way, the two Houses, by a concurrent resolution requiring no presidential sanction, shall admit them to their seats in the two Houses.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will my friend permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. DRAKE. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to inquire of my friend from Missouri whether the only powers that the Legislature have are not derived from this very constitution now adopted by the State of Arkansas?

Mr. DRAKE. I suppose so.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That being so, as of course it is, what authority have the Legislature to agree to any change or fundamental condition touching that constitution?

Mr. DRAKE. I do not propose, sir, in this amendment that the Legislature of the State of Arkansas shall assent to any change of the constitution. The proposition is that certain features of the constitution shall not be changed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the difference?

Mr. DRAKE. A great deal of difference. One is to sweep away and the other is to make fast.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is not the principle the same?

Mr. DRAKE. I think not by any means. Now, sir, if the question of the honorable Senator from Vermont looks to the matter of denying the capacity of Congress here in this manner to make any contract or agreement with the State of Arkansas about this matter—

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, no; not by any means.

Mr. DRAKE. If it looks to denying the capacity of Congress to make any agreement, or any such agreement as is contemplated in the original bill, and as is contemplated in my amendment, then all I have to say is that if the two Houses of Congress should take that view of it and refuse to impose this condition I shall then insist upon it, so far as my action is concerned, that the State of Arkansas shall not be again admitted to representation in the two Houses of Congress.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My friend will permit me to say, so that I may not be misunderstood, that I agree with him as to the propriety of imposing such conditions as we think are wise, and I agree with him as to the power of Congress to impose them. The only difficulty I had was as to the question whether the assent of the Legislature of Arkansas, being a mere creature of the constitution, would make it any stronger. I do not know but that it would; and I rose for the purpose of getting information about that point.

Mr. DRAKE. The constitution of Arkansas says that the whole "legislative power in this State shall be vested in a General Assembly." I take it that there is nothing clearer in constitutional law than that the Legislature of a State, the body having the whole legislative power of the State, has the right to bind the State by compact or agreement.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In violation of its constitution?

Mr. DRAKE. Not in violation of its constitution; of course not; but in support of its constitution; and that is exactly the thing that I wish that Legislature to do now, to support its constitution; not to violate it or take out of it any of its provisions, but to declare that those provisions there which protect the colored man, which guarantee his civil and political rights to him, shall remain inviolate; shall not be open to repeal.

Mr. STEWART. I would like to inquire of the Senator from Missouri if we have not a precedent where a provision in a State constitution was virtually abrogated by a compact of this kind, in the case of his own State? There, I believe Congress admitted the State upon condition that a certain provision of its constitution which provided that no persons of color should come within the State, should never be enforced, and the Legislature of Missouri were required to pass an ordinance agreeing to that condition upon the admission of the State, if I recollect aright.

Mr. DRAKE. Yes, sir; the Senator is correct; and as the discussion seems to be drifting in that direction, though I do not wish to prolong it, I will read the resolution for the admission of Missouri into the Union:

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That Missouri shall be admitted into this Union on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatever, upon the fundamental condition that the fourth clause of the twenty-sixth section of the third article of the constitution submitted on the part of said State to Congress shall never be construed to authorize the passage of any law, and that no law shall be passed in conformity thereto by which any citizen of either of the States in the Union shall be excluded from the enjoyment of any of the privileges and immunities to which such citizen is entitled under the Constitution of the United States: Provided, That the Legislature of the said State, by a solemn public act, shall declare the assent of the said State to the said fundamental condition, and shall transmit to the President of the United States, on or before the fourth Monday in November next, an authentic copy of the said act; upon the receipt whereof the President, by proclamation, shall announce the fact; whereupon, and without any further proceeding on the part of Congress, the admission of the said State into this Union shall be considered as complete."

And now, Mr. President, that that matter is up, I may as well refer to the act to enable the people of Nevada to form a constitution and State government, wherein it is provided:

"Whereupon the said convention shall be, and it is hereby, authorized to form a constitution and State government for said Territory: Provided, That the constitution, when formed, shall be republican, and not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States and the principles of the Declaration of Independence: And provided further, That said convention shall provide, by an ordinance irrevocable, without the consent of the United States and the people of said State: First, That there shall be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude in the said State, otherwise than in the punishment of crimes whereof the party shall have been duly convicted. Second, That perfect toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured, and no inhabitant of said State shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of religious worship."

Similar provisions were required to be incorporated in the constitution of Nebraska, and after that constitution was adopted and presented here an act was passed admitting Nebraska upon condition that a certain matter should be agreed to by the Legislature of that State. Unfortunately I have not that act before me at this moment; but it is quite familiar to all the members of the Senate.

Then, sir, the requirement upon a State to agree, through its Legislature, to a fundamental condition, and the recognition of the right of the State, through its Legislature, to agree to that fundamental condition, is a thing that has been heretofore established by the practice of the Government, and it does not seem to me now to be open to question.

As I said, Mr. President, I do not desire to go into any extended debate upon this subject. I have stated the points of objection to the original bill, all of which I have endeavored to obviate in the amendment which I propose, and I will finally now call the attention of the Senate to one single view. That is, that if there is any objection whatever made to the right of Congress to impose a fundamental condition upon this State in the form in which I have stated it in my amendment, the objection lies equally well to the original bill. The whole object of my amendment is to put that in a firm and grappling and enduring condition, which now seems to me in the original bill to be at loose ends, without any sanction and without any effective power.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Mr. President, I do not understand that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DRAKE] offers his amendment in any hostile disposition toward this bill; but rather that he is in favor of the recognition of the State government in Arkansas which has recently been organized. The effect of his amendment, however, will only be delay; and, as I think, it will accomplish no great good, and I may say no good. This thing of imposing conditions upon States which are to be admitted into the Union when new States are formed out of Territories, or imposing conditions upon State governments which are now being organized in States where the old State governments were overthrown and destroyed by the rebellion, is attended with great difficulties. The Senator from Missouri supposes that he obviates these difficulties by putting into his amendment a sanction to the law which he proposes to enact now on recognizing this State government in Arkansas; but the Congress of the United States would have as much power without this sanction as with it. It is impossible by any act of Congress passed now to give to a Congress which shall assemble hereafter any other powers than it would have without it. And this provision in the Senator's amendment, "that any violation by said State of the terms of this condition shall authorize the exclusion of said State from representation in either House of Congress so long as such violation continues," gives no additional power to a subsequent Congress. Any Congress would have just as much power to deny representation to any of these States without this enactment as with it.

The Senator proposes to make valid and forever binding this clause in the constitution of Arkansas:

"The equality of all persons before the law is recognized, and shall ever remain inviolate; nor shall any citizen ever be deprived of any right, privilege, or immunity, nor exempted from any burden or duty on account of race, color, or previous condition."

That is a clause in the constitution as made in convention by the people of Arkansas. It is a clause in the constitution as ratified by a popular vote of the people of that State, and now the Senator from Missouri says, "I am not satisfied with that; I want the Legislature to sanction it." Why, sir, the Legislature which assembles under this constitution is bound by that; it cannot, if it would, pass any law in violation of it which would have the least validity. It would be no sanction to ask the Legislature to ratify it!

Mr. STEWART. I should like to inquire of the Senator his opinion upon the compact that was made between the United States and Missouri as to one clause in the constitution of Missouri providing that persons of color should not enter the State. The resolution read by the Senator from Missouri, by which Missouri was admitted, provided that the State should be admitted upon the express condition that the Legislature should pass a resolution declaring that that provision of the constitution should be in effect a nullity. That was to put out of the constitution a provision that was in. I should like to inquire of the Senator whether he regards that compact as binding?

Mr. TRUMBULL. Mr. President, as I said, this thing of imposing conditions upon States is attended with a great deal of difficulty, and has never had a practical demonstration as to how it is to operate. If the Senator from Nevada wishes my opinion, it is that that clause in the constitution of Missouri was utterly void under the Constitution of the United States, which gives to every citizen of every State the rights and immunities belonging to citizens in each State.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But Groves vs. Slaughter, the Mississippi case, decided that each State had a right to exclude a particular class of individuals. The Supreme Court is against you on that point.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not understand the case to which the Senator from Vermont refers; I am not aware that the Supreme Court of the United States has ever decided that a State has a right to exclude citizens of another State.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The case that I allude to is the Mississippi case, where they said that the Legislature of a State, by its laws, had a right to exclude such class of persons as it thought the immigration of would be injurious to its policy, and, therefore, that the Legislature of Mississippi had a right to exclude the introduction of persons who were held to servitude in another State. It did not turn there upon the question of citizenship, it is true.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It did not turn upon the question of citizenship, but it turned rather upon the question of a State's right to regulate its own affairs. I suppose it has that power to keep out paupers or convicts.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They are citizens.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It did not turn upon the question of citizenship. You may deprive a citizen of his liberty for crime. The decision there—although I am not familiar with it—I apprehend, did not turn at all on the question of the rights of citizens.

Mr. CONNESS. My impression of the decision is that it held that the State was to be the judge of who should live within its limits and who were dangerous to the peace of its society; that under the police power, of which it made the State the judge, citizens might be excluded.

Mr. TRUMBULL. But we have a clause now which is much larger in its operation than the clause in the original constitution, and the Senator from Missouri will see that it is a perfect answer to one of his suggestions. He suggested that the question might hereafter arise whether colored people were citizens in Arkansas. That question is settled by the fourteenth amendment. We are only recognizing these State governments on condition of the fourteenth amendment being ratified; and, whether it is already ratified or not, practically the Senator from Missouri knows, as all do, that it will shortly be ratified by the requisite number of States. Some think it is already ratified, and I am not prepared to say that they are not correct in that opinion; but, whether so or not, we are only recognizing these State governments in the rebel States now on the express condition of their giving their sanction to the fourteenth amendment. The fourteenth amendment contains this clause, which forever settles the question of citizenship throughout the United States:

"All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the States wherein they reside."

That settles that question.

Mr. DRAKE. Will the Senator allow me to suggest one point to him there not covered by his remark? The constitution of Arkansas extends the right of suffrage to aliens who have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States, and as the bill stands now it gives them no protection while my amendment does.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I will reply to that by asking the Senator from Missouri if he really wants to put as a fundamental condition in the constitution of the State of Arkansas, which can never be changed, that aliens on a six months' residence shall vote? I hope they will change it. I do not believe it is a wise provision to put in the constitution. I think that citizenship should be required as a requisite to the right of suffrage. The right of suffrage is a great right. I am not prepared to say that it was not a wise policy in the early settlement of the Territories, and perhaps in some of the new States, to allow persons to vote who had declared their intention to become citizens. That was formerly a provision of the constitution of my own State; but twenty years ago the people of Illinois held a convention and remodeled their constitution, and they changed this feature from a six months' residence of a foreigner to citizenship. Now, no one votes in the State of Illinois who is not a citizen of the United States. And, if for no other reason, I should be opposed to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri for the very reason that it imposes a condition upon the people of Arkansas which will forever compel them to allow a foreigner on a six months' residence to vote. I should not want to impose such a condition.

Now, sir, as to these fundamental conditions as they are called, I shall express no decided opinion in regard to them one way or the other. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." When the time comes that any of the States of this Union so change their constitutions as to set up something different from a republican government, the Government of the United States may interfere; but the State of Arkansas, when admitted to representation here, will be admitted to representation on the same terms and conditions that the State of Illinois was admitted to representation; on the same terms and conditions as the State of Missouri and all the other States of this Union. These States, all of them, under the Constitution, regulate suffrage for themselves. We can provide, and we have wisely provided, in my judgment, in the reorganization of State governments in the recently rebellious region, that all the male citizens of those States twenty-one years of age should participate. We had the right to do that, and we have a right to refuse to recognize these State governments until they come here with constitutions acceptable to Congress. I agree to that; and if this constitution is not acceptable in the shape they have presented it here, there is no obligation on us to recognize this State government. If it were a Territory; if the Territory of Colorado or Utah or any of the other Territories comes and asks for admission into the Union as a State on equal terms with the original States, it is for Congress in its discretion to admit them or not. The language of the Constitution is that Congress may admit new States into the Union. Congress is not bound to do it; but when they are admitted, then they assume the position of States on an equal footing with the other States; and I think very little is to be gained by inserting these clauses which we have inserted of late years in the various laws admitting new States.

I am not prepared to say what steps should be taken in case the State of Nebraska should hereafter change its constitution, and in that change adopt a different rule in regard to suffrage from that which was recognized at the time the State was admitted. Perhaps we could find some way to compel the State of Nebraska to allow the same persons to vote that it agreed it would allow to vote when it was admitted into the Union; but we should have to find that way out then; we cannot provide for it now.

If I were to consult my own views entirely, Mr. President, I should be willing to recognize the government which has been set up in Arkansas, or the constitution as they have framed it. They have provided in that constitution for equal suffrage to all the inhabitants of the State, without reference to color or class, or anything of the kind. I am satisfied with that provision. It will require a change of their constitution to alter it, and I do not think any law we may now pass will be likely to prevent the people of Arkansas from changing their constitution. What will prevent it? What is the safety against a change of the constitution in Arkansas and the subjection of the colored people of that State to slavery again? What is the real protection? The real protection is to be found in the freedom we have given them, and the ballot we have given them in the organization of the State government. They have got it now, and they will not give it up. They will protect themselves. There is where the real protection is to be found. We have struck the shackles from all these slaves; we have made them freemen; we have armed them with the ballot. They have gone to the polls; they have helped to frame the constitution; they have ratified it when framed.

They constitute a large portion of the population in all these States. And, sir, their real protection is in their own hands and in these constitutional amendments which have been adopted that protect them in their freedom, protect them in their citizenship; and Congress will have such power as under the Constitution belongs to it, whether you undertake to reserve it in this act of admission or not.

I am aware that the bill as it came from the House contains the principle of declaring a fundamental condition, and I am not objecting to it. I do not mean to be understood in the Senate as objecting to it, because I expect to vote for the bill. I merely say that I have very little faith in these provisions. I am willing, however, to let the provision remain in the bill, and let us have such benefit as can be derived from it. But I do not think we are to gain a sufficient advantage to justify us in sending the bill back to the House of Representatives in order to get the Legislature of Arkansas to ratify what the Constitution has already provided and the people have already adopted!

The bill, as it came from the House of Representatives, provides "that the constitution of Arkansas shall never be so amended or changed as to deprive any citizen or class of citizens of the United States of the right to vote who are entitled to vote by the constitution" which has been framed. We declare that in the law.

Mr. DRAKE. Suppose they change it?

Mr. TRUMBULL. Suppose they do change it, what then? The Senator from Missouri says, "Let us get the Legislature to agree that they will not change it; that it shall be a fundamental condition." Suppose the Legislature does change it, or that the people change it hereafter, notwithstanding the declaration of the Legislature, what are you going to do about it? The Senator from Missouri says, "I will put it in the bill that Congress shall have the power to deny them representation." Would Congress not have the power without your putting it in the bill?

Mr. DRAKE. That is not certain.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If they have it by your putting it in the bill they would have it without. Really, then, I do not see that we are to gain anything particularly by the amendment of the Senator from Missouri. I have no very special objection to it. The Senator from Missouri will not understand me as supposing that it presents any insurmountable objection to my mind; but the value of it does not strike me as so great as to justify us in delaying the bill to incorporate it.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I should like to inquire what is to be the practical advantage to result from the amendment of the Senator from Missouri. He seeks to impose a fundamental condition upon the people of Arkansas, that they shall never amend their constitution in regard to suffrage so as to take it away from any class of persons who have it by the constitution as now framed. This is emphatically a fundamental condition by which all future generations are to be denied the power of amending their constitution in that way. I should like to ask that learned Senator how the Legislature of Arkansas, that is not an organic body, but is merely the creature of this same new constitution, can impose a fundamental condition upon the people of that State. Sir, it is not possible; a fundamental condition can only be imposed, if they otherwise have the power, by the people in their primary capacity, acting in the form of a constitutional convention, or in some other primary way. A Legislature that has merely the ordinary powers of legislation, that is not a primary body, but is the creature simply of the constitution, cannot impose a fundamental condition upon the people of the State.

Now, sir, how does this very constitution provide for amending itself? It provides that in order to adopt an amendment it shall be voted by the Legislature by a two-thirds majority, and then it shall be advertised three months before the next election, and then the succeeding Legislature shall also pass it by a two-thirds majority, and after that it shall be submitted to the people, and if ratified by a majority of the electors it shall then become a provision of the constitution. That is the only way it can be amended according to its own provisions; but the amendment of the Senator from Missouri would provide for attaching a fundamental condition more binding than any other part of that constitution, because it is to be obligatory for all time, by a mere Legislature which is a creature of the constitution and has no other powers than those of ordinary legislation. Sir, any compact formed in that way is not worth the paper it is written on. It seems to me, with all due respect to my learned friend, that it is too plain a proposition to argue.

Mr. President, while these States were in their deranged and disordered condition, resulting from the rebellion, their governments gone, we had a right to come in and reconstruct republican governments by any means that were necessary and proper for that purpose. We had a right to use the instrumentality of the colored vote for that purpose, to enfranchise that race as a means of reconstructing and establishing governments there. We have done that; but when these States are admitted, when they have complied with all our conditions and come back and are received, then they stand upon the same platform with every other State in the Union; they have every right and every power that belongs to every other State.

The right to regulate the question of suffrage belongs to the States under the Constitution. It has been recognized as belonging to the several States ever since the foundation of the Government. And, sir, another right belongs to the States; and what is that? It is that the States have a right to alter and amend their constitutions at pleasure, so that they do not change their republican character. The State of Arkansas will have the same right to assemble the people in convention from time to time and to alter and amend their constitution as they see proper that Illinois and New York have; and the State of Arkansas will have the same power to regulate the question of suffrage that the State of New York has, unquestionably. If these rights belong to the State when she comes in under the Constitution of the United States, I ask how can they be taken from her by a compact agreed to by her State Legislature?

Mr. CONKLING, How can they be taken from her at all?

Mr. MORTON. I am just coming to that question. I say the idea of their being taken from her by a compact made by her State Legislature, it seems to me, cannot be argued successfully for a moment; and I now come to the question of fundamental conditions in general. I have always had a very decided opinion upon that subject ever since I have been a student of the Constitution; and that is, that this Government has no right, and it has no power, to impose a fundamental condition on any State by which that State parts with any right which it has under the Constitution of the United States. A State cannot alienate her rights under the Constitution of the United States any more than a man can alienate those great natural rights that belong to him. What nature is to us in regard to our rights the Constitution is in regard to artificial States; and if a State has a right under the Constitution of the United States to regulate the question of suffrage that right cannot be alienated, bartered, or compacted away by any State. I contend that every State has the right to regulate the question of suffrage and to amend her Constitution in any particular from time to time, so that it does not cease to be republican in its character.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Who is to judge of that?

Mr. MORTON. I suppose that is a question to be judged of by Congress. There is nothing peculiar in that regard in respect to suffrage; but the question is, how can any State by compact part with any constitutional right without destroying the equality of the States before the law. You make it a condition on Arkansas that she shall part with the right to regulate the question of suffrage in a certain way; you make it a condition on Colorado that she shall part with another right; you make it a condition with Montana, when she comes in, that she shall part with some other right that would belong to her under the Constitution, and thus you have one State that is not equal to the others because there is right compacted away, and another State unequal to the rest because another right is compacted away, and thus the equality of the States before the Constitution and the law is destroyed.

Sir, there is but one security and there is but one regulation on this subject, and that is that the several States shall not so alter or amend their constitutions as to cease to be republican in form. That is provided in the Constitution itself.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I have some faith in these compacts. I believe that certain things may be contracted between the General Government and the States. In the first place, we have the uniform practice of the Government in favor of that idea. In the admission of nearly all the new States there are certain conditions; one which is common to all of them is that the property of non-residents shall not be taxed higher than the property of residents.

Mr. MORTON. If the Senator from Nevada will allow me, I should like to say one word on that point. I intended to mention it—it was in my mind—but that is certainly not a parallel case, because the question of taxation is one that is legitimately within the control of the Legislature, and it is not a fundamental condition that goes to any question of forming a constitution. After being in the Union the Legislature can perhaps make a contract with the General Government on the question of taxing certain property, as any other contract can be made. The Legislature has the power to make contracts in regard to matters within legislative control, and the question of taxation is within legislative control, but the question of saying that a State shall never amend its constitution upon a certain question fundamental in its character is not within legislative control.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I know of no quality of sovereignty of a higher character than the power to tax. I believe that is one of the highest attributes of sovereignty—the power to tax the people; to take their property for public use; and that has been regulated by compact with regard to a great many States. There are other things that have been regulated by compact. The instance of Missouri which has been referred to was a regulation by compact. I concur with the Senator from Indiana to this extent—I wish to be understood—that any compact which is within the purview of the Constitution of the United States, which is in harmony with its principles and provisions that the State and the General Government agree to, may be carried out. The compacts which have been made heretofore have been carried out for years. When a State has made any one of these arrangements with the General Government she has never attempted to violate it. Missouri did not; and none of the other States have violated the compacts made in regard to taxation. A contract in violation of the Constitution of the United States or that would impair the legitimate functions of a State, of course would not be binding. A compact that would make the Government anti-republican in form, a compact between the State and the General Government which would allow the State to set up a king and become a monarchy, would of course be a nullity; but a compact that it should be intensely republican in form, in the full spirit and meaning of that term, and should ingraft on its fundamental law the principles of the Declaration of Independence, would be so in harmony with the spirit of the Federal Constitution that, if both parties agreed to it, it seems to me, it would be likely to be recognized and enforced as these other compacts have been. It would be a pledge of good faith such as no State has hitherto seen fit to violate or thought itself degraded by accepting with regard to taxation and with regard to a great many other questions.

Such compacts have been made with regard to the question of slavery, which was peculiarly a State institution. Before the abolition of slavery by the constitutional amendment, Congress imposed upon several States, as a fundamental condition in their constitutions, that slavery should never be tolerated. That was done in regard to Nevada before the abolition of slavery by the constitutional amendment, and was acquiesced in. A compact of this kind, which is in favor of liberty and humanity, is not likely to be violated.

I do not know that any provision we may make now would materially increase the remedy that Congress would have over the question, because if the Government of the United States must guaranty to each State a republican form of government, the general power being granted to the Government of the United States to do this, and Congress having authority to carry into execution the general powers granted to the Government, Congress in carrying out the general power must be the judge of the means to be employed. If one of these compacts should be violated, and violated in such a manner as to render the State anti-republican, or to overthrow the republican principle, Congress then would have power to interfere with or without such a fundamental condition being inserted in the act of admission. But if the State, on being admitted to representation, had pledged the honor of the State not to violate that principle, it might be a more marked case. Their attention having been thus particularly called to it, Congress might be justified in acting more rapidly and upon less evidence than it would if the fundamental condition had been omitted originally.

Upon the question of suffrage, I think that almost everybody is a little wrong as to the power of the States. I do not believe that it is exclusively with Congress or exclusively with the States. I believe the power to regulate suffrage is with the States; the mere matter of regulating it has been with them in practice; but if you mean by the power of regulating it the power to take it away and create an oligarchy, that power is not with the States. When they attempt that, the Government of the United States is bound to interfere. I concur fully that the power to regulate suffrage is with the States; but the power to create an oligarchy is not in the States. The power of regulation may be abused by the States so as to call on Congress to interfere. So with any other power that a State may have; it may be so abused as to destroy the republican form of its government, and in that case Congress should interfere.

As to these compacts, I say if they are in harmony with the Constitution and carry out the general principles of free government it is well to declare them, well to put them in, because they have been universally respected; they never have been violated, and will not be violated. It is not the question what remedy you are to have, but the fact that they have been universally respected is some guarantee that they will be hereafter respected; and a proper fundamental condition, calling the attention of the State at the time it is admitted, to the fact that the Government of the United States expects that it will maintain good faith toward all its citizens as a compact with the General Government, is certainly of some use as a declaration of a principle. I do not know; however, that the amendment of the Senator from Missouri is materially better than the original bill.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. CONKLING. Do I understand him to say that in the history of what he terms fundamental compacts it has never occurred that States have refused to recognize them and to be bound by them?

Mr. STEWART. I think it has occurred in the case of the rebellion.

Mr. CONKLING. No; I speak of long before the rebellion. Does not the Senator remember that States have utterly refused to be bound by such compacts, have denied that they had any validity whatever; and does he not know that the question thus made has been carried to the courts?

Mr. POMEROY. In the Missouri case.

Mr. STEWART. The Missouri case was not carried to the courts. I know that under the doctrine of secession the States in the South have violated their compacts.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not speak of the doctrine of secession, but take for example the Alabama case—

Mr. JOHNSON. Pollard's Lessee vs. Hagan.

Mr. CONKLING. The Mobile case, Pollard's Lessee vs. Hagan, and the other cases of the same kind, for that is not the only one; are they not cases where States have refused entirely, after becoming States, to be bound by such compacts, taking the ground that all preliminary arrangements of this kind expired and were dissolved by the fact of statehood accruing?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The case of Pollard's Lessee vs. Hagan did not raise the question necessarily.

Mr. CONKLING. But they discussed the question in that case. I should like to know, if the Senator from Nevada will be good enough to inform us, where the case is that has been treated by the courts, in which it has been said that such a compact could be enforced anywhere.

Mr. STEWART. I do not think that the matter has generally gone before the courts. These questions have not gone before the courts, because in a majority of cases the compacts have been carried out. There may be one or two exceptions in the South under the strong States' rights notions there prevailing, where they denied the binding validity of a compact made on coming into the Union, or indeed their binding obligation to the Union at all. But I am speaking of most of the western States, where they have admitted the validity of these compacts and have acquiesced in all their conditions. In the case of Missouri the question did not come before the courts; it was not raised. The propriety of these conditions was generally acquiesced in, and the precedent is of some value for that reason.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Nevada will pardon me for interposing again. I do not wish to interfere with him; but we are discussing this matter for the sake of light, no doubt, and it is a question upon which a great deal can be said on both sides. The Senator affirms that there are many instances, old and new, in which this has been done, and in which respect has been paid to it when done. He says that was true in the case of Missouri. Now, I think I cannot be mistaken in my recollection that the provision in the Missouri case which he refers to was defended upon the ground that without any such provision such a law as was inhibited would be void because repugnant to the Constitution of the United States; and the argument was, "This is only an assertion, it is only an affirmation, of the force and effect of the Constitution of the United States." Passing by the Missouri case, until we come to a very recent period, I know of no compacts in our history of this sort except those compacts relating to the public lands, for a reason special there which the courts pointed out and which we can all point out, and those relating to the taxation of non-residents, distinguishable entirely from this case for reasons which have also been pointed out in the decisions to which I make reference. Except these cases—the Missouri case, special in the way I suggest, and the other cases, special for their own reasons—I recollect no example of this sort until we come down to the State represented by the Senator himself; I think that came first.

Mr. STEWART. Nebraska.

Mr. CONKLING. No; Nebraska followed; that was later. In these cases—I speak now of Nebraska particularly—there was such a fundamental compact as we are talking about. The question has never been raised as to its validity; but my recollection is, speaking of this body, that the oldest lawyers in it denounced the proposition, I might say vehemently, and those lawyers of the Senate who are known in the phraseology of the day as being Radical especially, if I remember, were among those who scouted the idea of imposing upon Nebraska any valid obligation by what was there adopted and termed a fundamental compact. So that in these two cases, Nevada and Nebraska, which in my recollection stand alone as illustrations of what we are discussing, we have the assertion of a large number of the members of this body that it was mere blank paper, and we have a debate in the two Houses which certainly is not calculated to give confidence to the proposition or to prove that confidence was felt by those who attempted it, and we have nothing in the courts or anywhere else recognizing it. So that I think the Senator ought to subtract a little from what he says when he speaks of the respect due to the usage in this particular of the Government—the respect due to the fact that this has been done and repeated and gone unchallenged, receiving at least that measure of respect. I confess I do not so understand it.

Mr. STEWART. I should like the Senator, before he takes his seat, to state the particular point of the exception he alludes to in Alabama. I think the rule is more general than the exception. I should like to know what was the particular point in the Alabama case, as the Senator recollects it.

Mr. CONKLING. The general point, as I recollect it, in the Alabama case—I have not looked at it recently—was this: the State of Alabama came in upon a compact agreeing, among other things, that the navigable waters in the State should forever remain public highways; and a question arose between individuals afterward whether, by virtue of that, anybody took or anybody lost a right; and although there were other points in judgment, although the case may be criticised, yet the judges, in writing, (and several of them wrote), discussed the question very fully, and held that such an agreement as that was dissolved and determined by the acquisition of statehood for the reason stated—I think with great clearness—just now by the honorable Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORRIS,] that the equality of the States forbade any such hampering, and that a State burst the ligaments of that sort by which in its territorial condition it had been bound the moment it acceded to the condition of a State.

Mr. HENDERSON. With the permission of the Senator, I have the case in my hand and will read an extract from it. The condition in the case of Alabama was in these words:

"That all navigable waters within the said State shall forever remain public highways, free to the citizens of said State and of the United States, without any tax, duty, impost, or toll therefor imposed by said State."

The decision of the Supreme Court is in these words:

"The provision of the Constitution above referred to shows that no such power can be exercised by the United States within a State. Such a power is not only repugnant to the Constitution, but it is inconsistent with the spirit and intention of the deeds of cession."—Pollard's Lessee vs. Hagan et al., 3 Howard, p. 224.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Which opinion are you reading from?

Mr. HENDERSON. The opinion of Mr. Justice McKinley, who delivered the opinion of the court.

Mr. CONKLING. While the Senator from Nevada is looking at the book, let me make an inquiry of my honorable friend from Missouri, [Mr. HENDERSON.] He does not intend that we shall understand that the court did not say in its opinion very distinctly that the fundamental compact there was for that purpose void?

Mr. HENDERSON. That it could not take away any of the rights of a State enjoyed under the Constitution of the United States; that each and every State was upon an equal footing, and must be, after admission.

Mr. CONKLING. So that by parity of reasoning, in this case, if, by the Constitution of the United States, the regulation of suffrage is one of the functions and prerogatives of a State, a fundamental compact impinging upon that would be on all fours with the fundamental compact there discussed.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is the inference the Senator draws from it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If my friend from Nevada will permit me, while he is looking at that case, to come into this ring—

Mr. STEWART. I shall come in after a while. [Laughter.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not want to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. STEWART. It is no interruption.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I want to call the attention of the Senate and of my friends from New York and Missouri, who have rather strange notions about this case, to what the case really was. In the first place, the territory was ceded by the State of Georgia and some of the other States to the United States, and one of the conditions of that cession was as follows:

"Upon condition that the territory so ceded shall be laid out and formed into States, containing a suitable extent of territory, not less than one hundred nor more than one hundred and fifty miles square, or as near thereto as circumstances will admit, and the States so formed shall be republican States and admitted members of the Federal Union, having the same rights of sovereignty, freedom, and independence as the other States."

That was the original compact between the State of Georgia, which made the cession, and the United States. The Supreme Court decided that any regulation of Congress or agreement between Congress and the authorities of a new State, formed in that territory, limiting the powers of the State, would be in violation of that original compact; and therefore they held that if any such regulation had been made it would have been void; but they proceeded to decide that no such regulation had been made; that the compact between the United States and the State of Alabama, when she was admitted, retaining jurisdiction over the navigable waters, was one that by the Constitution of the United States was reserved to the United States as a power to regulate commerce; and therefore that the question did not arise, what was the effect of a compact of that kind independent of the act of cession, because the power which was contained in the act of admission they expressly decided was a power which, by the Constitution, belonged to Congress, and therefore it was not, and could not, be taken away. That was the effect of that decision.

Mr. HENDERSON. They decided that it was not only against the deed of cession, but also against the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. STEWART. I do not see the force of that case. It has not been very well stated by the Senator from Vermont, and I will not pursue it further. But even if the Supreme Court had at that day made a decision from which an inference of that kind could be drawn I do not think it should be strictly followed, inasmuch as it made other declarations about the same time and subsequent to that which are as much in conflict with the present theories of government. If we were to follow its dicta outside of the question that arose in that case or in the Dred Scott case we should find quicksands plenty. I think I was substantially right in my assertion that Congress has been in the constant habit, both before the case mentioned and since the admission of Alabama, in the admission of other States, of putting in more or less conditions. I looked into that question last year, and I believe a compact of some kind was entered into in the admission of every State which I examined, and I examined them all. If it had been so clear a proposition that Congress could make no conditions at the time of admission, or that if made they were of no value, it seems to me that putting conditions in would be an idle thing, and yet each Congress admitting new States has been repeating this matter of conditions. If the Supreme Court had held that there could be no compact made at the time of admission, if that case had covered the whole ground, it seems to me we have been acting in plain violation of it ever since. In the case of Nevada there were substantial fundamental conditions; and so in the case of Missouri; so in the case of Nebraska, relating to the same subject-matter, to the question of personal liberty; and cases with regard to the question of taxation are very numerous.

While I did not see that the amendment of the Senator from Missouri is so materially better than the original bill, I could not allow it to be said that there was no propriety in putting declarations of principle in the acts admitting States; that there was no propriety in them; that they were a perfect nullity, and that they bound nobody, when I know that as a general rule they have been respected; and hence it is of some value to make such declarations. Although I admit, with the Senator from Indiana, that it might not authorize Congress to interfere, it would be notice to the State not to violate these principles, or Congress might be compelled to interfere. It would be a notice to the State of what was expected of it; that is, good faith to the citizens that organized the constitution. Thus far I think it would be valuable. I undertake to say that the State might go so far in the way of denying suffrage to its citizens as to substantially change the form of government, and then it would be the duty of Congress, under that clause of the Constitution which requires the Government of the United States to guaranty to each State a republican form of government, to interfere.

Mr. BUCKALEW obtained the floor.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator from Pennsylvania will pardon me for one moment, I wish to read a very brief extract from this opinion, as a question of fact has arisen here. I read from the opinion of the court, page 222 of the volume in my hand, in the case of Pollard's Lessee vs. Hagan et al.:

"When Alabama was admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States she succeeded to all the rights of sovereignty, jurisdiction, and eminent domain which Georgia possessed at the date of the cession, except so far as this right was diminished by the public lands remaining in the possession and under the control of the United States, for temporary purposes provided for in the deed of cession and the legislative acts connected with it. Nothing remained to the United States, according to the terms of the agreement, but the public lands. And if an express stipulation had been inserted in the agreement, granting the municipal right of sovereignty and eminent domain to the United States, such stipulation would have been void and inoperative, because the United States have no constitutional capacity to exercise municipal jurisdiction, sovereignty, or eminent domain within the limits of a State or elsewhere, except in the cases in which it is expressly granted."

That is, granted by the Constitution of the United States, of course. But again:

"The right of Alabama and every other new State to exercise all the powers of government which belong to and may be exercised by the original States of the Union must be admitted and remain unquestioned, except so far as they are, temporarily, deprived of control over the public lands."

Reading from the opinion of the court still, I will only intrude upon the Senator long enough to read another brief passage.

Mr. STEWART. What page?

Mr. CONKLING. Page 402, although this is the condensed report, and hence the paging may rather mislead than aid the Senator.

Mr. BUCKALEW. What is the marginal page?

Mr. CONKLING. The marginal page is 229:

"The declaration, therefore, contained in the compact entered into between them when Alabama was admitted into the Union, that all navigable waters within the said State shall forever remain public highways, free to the citizens of said State and of the United States, without any tax, duty, impost, or toll therefor imposed by the said State, would be void if inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States. But is this provision repugnant to the Constitution? By the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution power is granted to Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States." If, in the exercise of this power, Congress can impose the same restrictions upon the original States in relation to their navigable rivers as are imposed by this article of the compact on the State of Alabama, then this article is a mere regulation of commerce among the several States, according to the Constitution, and, therefore, as binding on the other States as Alabama."

Now, I think that that is pretty much to the purpose, and it is thus applied to this case: if the Congress of the United States have the right, speaking for all the States, to make a general regulation quoad suffrage or quoad navigable streams, then they may make it in the case of any State, but no more because that State is a recent comer than in the case of a State long a dweller within the Union. I think the reasoning of the court must be conceded to mean that. As I said before, (for I do not wish to mistake this authority,) the effect of it is impaired by the fact that there were points in judgment upon which the court could have made the case turn without deciding this particular proposition; but there it is imbedded in the reasoning of the judge who gave the opinion, speaking for the whole court except those judges who dissented, as the report shows.

Mr. STEWART. I shall trouble the Senate but a moment longer. I think the portion of the decision read by the Senator from New York bears out precisely the declaration that I made at the outset, that compacts in harmony with the Constitution of the United States had usually been observed in good faith. Of course, a compact made in conflict with the Constitution would be entirely void, and the judge in this obiter dictum says:

"The declaration, therefore, contained in the compact entered into between them when Alabama was admitted into the Union, that all navigable waters within the said State shall forever remain public highways, free to the citizens of said State and of the United States, without any tax, duty, impost, or toll therefor, imposed by the said State, would be void if inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States."

He says a compact of this kind, inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States, would be void; and in another part of the decision that the Senator read he says that the municipal jurisdiction properly belonging to a State could not be ceded. Of course not.

Mr. CONKLING. Then, if my friend will allow me, does not that confront this question of law, or fact, or both, to wit: whether the question of suffrage and its control is one that the State can cede away, as he expresses it; in other words, a subject-matter of which the Constitution gives the Congress of the United States jurisdiction. Do we not come back to that question at last?

Mr. STEWART. If the Senator had paid a little attention to my remarks he would have seen that my position is perfectly consistent with the Constitution and with this authority on that subject. I say that the regulation of suffrage is with the States. That is clear; but the exclusion of all men from suffrage is not within that regulation by the States.

Mr. CONKLING. Why not?

Mr. STEWART. Because the Constitution expressly delegates to the Government of the United States the power to secure to each State a republican form of government; and whenever they abuse any of the functions which are legitimately State functions so as to be in conflict with that provision of the Constitution, it is the duty of the Congress of the United States to interfere. Therefore I say that neither the question of suffrage nor any other question is exclusively within the power of a State. It may be abused to such an extent as to require the General Government to interfere.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator will permit me further, I think now he is making a very logical argument, whatever it may be worth, that the guarantee clause of the Constitution finds a time and a place to which it applies. The question is, whether that helps him here. If it be said that Congress, under the guarantee clause, is bound to interpose when black men, for example, are excluded unless they are worth a certain sum of money, because that government has ceased to be republican, then I wish to know why this is not true: suppose a certain State coming here has in its constitution a provision that all women with black eyes and black hair shall vote, but no others, why, as a question of power, have we not the same right to interpose and say, "this is anti-republican; here is a distinction wholly arbitrary, wholly oppressive; there is no reason why a person with a certain colored hair or eyes should vote rather than another, and we must interpose for that reason?" Why is it, in other words, that we find the particular point at which the guarantee clause begins to operate when we come to a point where a State is inclined to say "men of a certain color shall not vote in this State unless they are freeholders to the amount of $250," for example? Why does that, more than the other case which I put, demand action under the guarantee clause?

Mr. STEWART. We do not pretend to determine at what point Congress should interfere under the authority of the guarantee clause. That will be for a future Congress when the question comes up. That there are times when it should interfere the Senator from New York now admits.

Mr. CONKLING. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. Every man who reads the Constitution must admit that there may be times when the Congress should interfere upon the question of suffrage. I do not pretend to say that the insertion of this declaration in the bill will alter either the constitution of the State or of the General Government. It is a notice, however, to these parties; it is a compact; it is a declaration of principle, which has generally been respected. Such a declaration has not been decided to be unconstitutional or void, except upon the ground that a provision could be put in which would be in conflict with the Constitution of the United States. A provision of this kind is certainly not in conflict with the Constitution of the United States, and cannot be declared void. A principle of this kind, a compact in harmony with the Constitution, has never been declared void. Such compacts have been respected to some extent; and they would only be declared void by reason of conflict with the Constitution of the United States, because that is the only instrument by which the laws of the United States are to be tested. A compact that is in harmony with the Constitution of the United States, I say, is valuable as a declaration of principle, as a notice to these States that they shall not deprive their citizens of the right of suffrage. I do not say that it gives Congress an additional power to interfere, but it might be an additional reason for interfering if they broke the faith of the pledge that the State made when it came in. As it is customary to put these provisions in constitutions, as they were put in the constitution of my State and of other States, it would certainly be an additional reason for interfering.

I see no objection to the declaration in the bill as it came from the House or to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri. I am not so particular as to the form, because I believe, after all, if Congress does interfere, it will be because it has the fundamental right to do so under that clause of the Constitution which says that the Government of the United States shall guaranty to each State a republican form of government. Therefore, I think, for the purpose of serving notice, for the purpose of good faith, that perhaps the bill as it came from the House is just as well as it stands.

Mr. HENDERSON. Before the Senator concludes, I desire to ask him a question. I observe that the second section of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution is in these words:

"SEC. 2. Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States, according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the Legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being twenty-one years of age and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such State."

Now, we make it a condition-precedent to the admission of Representatives upon this floor and in the other House from the State of Arkansas that the Legislature of that State shall have adopted this constitutional amendment. This amendment clearly permits the State to exclude, for any reason whatever, the male inhabitants of the State from the suffrage. It only requires that, if they are excluded, the State shall lose proportionately its representation in Congress. That is the penalty. If we impose a fundamental condition requiring that everybody shall vote, and also another fundamental condition that the State shall adopt, before it is admitted to representation, a constitutional amendment, which, in words, permits them to discriminate between individuals, let me ask the Senator what sort of a condition we shall be in, and which is to be the paramount authority?

Mr. STEWART. I will reply to that in one word.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I gave way some time since to the Senator from New York and the Senator from Nevada to settle the question of the decision of the Supreme Court upon the case of Alabama. I understand that now a new question is about to be debated, and I am inclined to claim the floor.

Mr. STEWART. I ask the Senator to give way for a moment to enable me to answer the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. BUCKALEW. If the Senator wants to make a single remark, I will do so.

Mr. STEWART. I wish merely to answer that question, and I do it for the purpose of enlightening the Senator from Missouri, because I feel abundantly able to do it. I suppose that that provision in the constitutional amendment was not intended to authorize any State to deny all its citizens the right of suffrage. I do not suppose that that provision of the constitutional amendment imposing a penalty in case the right of suffrage should be abridged, intended to sanction the denial of the suffrage altogether in any State.

Mr. HENDERSON. It expressly grants the power.

Mr. STEWART. It does not do it expressly; but only by implication. It only imposes a penalty in case that there is a denial of suffrage.

Mr. CONKLING. What class of case does it give them power to deny it in?

Mr. STEWART. It does not give them power to deny it to any class. It says that in case of a denial there shall be a certain punishment. You might as well say, because there is a law on the statute-book, that if a man committed murder he should be hung; therefore that it gives him a right to commit murder. That is about a parallel case. I do not think, therefore, that it affirmatively disposes of that provision in the Constitution which authorizes the Government of the United States to interfere in case a State government is subverted by denying the right of suffrage to a majority of its citizens. It only adds one remedy in case the republican principle is violated with regard to any class. I do not think it changes the general principle that the Government of the United States must see that each State has a republican form of government.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. President, I feel no interest in the question which is under debate between the amendment of the Senator from Missouri and the bill as reported by the Committee on the Judiciary. In either form I am against this proposed imposition of a disqualifying or disabling clause upon a State of this Union. What I desire to speak to, however, is a very important question, and I shall say but a few words upon it. I understand that the two vital, legal conditions upon which States are admitted into this Union are these: first, that the State admitted shall have a republican form of government, and in the next place that it shall be admitted on an equal footing (as the old and familiar expression is) with all the other States.

Mr. DRAKE. Will the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania allow me to make an inquiry of him at that point?

Mr. BUCKALEW. If the Senator will excuse me, I shall be done in a few moments, and will then answer his question.

Now, sir, these propositions have largely undergone debate in Congress and in the courts, and I had thought, until within a few years past, that they were so well established in our political system, so fixed and certain, that nobody would be found hardy enough to question them. But, sir, a mischievous precedent was put upon the statute-book when Missouri was admitted, which has been misconceived, and therefore it is that within a few years past we have had two cases where Congress has made what I must regard as invalid compacts with States about being admitted; I mean the cases of Nebraska and Nevada.

The resolution of Congress when Missouri was admitted was adopted for the purpose of putting that State upon an equality with the others. Why, how manifest that is! If the State of Missouri, under her constitution, could exercise authority to prohibit the free entrance of citizens of other States within her borders, she would enjoy a right and a power that no other State enjoyed. She would, therefore, come into the Union with a privilege or power denied to all the rest by the Constitution of the United States. That was one view. The other view was, that if the Constitution of the United States instantly upon her admission operated fully upon her case this provision of her constitution was, so far as it interfered with citizens of other States, null and void. Therefore, what Congress did by their resolution was one of two things: either to strike from the constitution of Missouri, upon her admission, a clause which would have made her position unequal with that of the other States, or to do what was of no consequence, what was perfectly harmless, but the doing of which was justifiable under the circumstances of great public excitement which then existed, as a measure of peace and safety. It was regarded in this latter view by its author and by others; but by all those who supposed that there was anything material in that resolution of Congress its effect was held to be to place Missouri upon an equal footing with the other States of the Union into whose companionship and association she was about to be admitted.

Now, sir, that is no precedent for what was done in the case of Nevada or in the case of Nebraska, or for what is proposed in the pending bill. In this case the proposed action of Congress is to put Arkansas upon a different footing from that occupied by all the other States within the Union, whether those that composed the original thirteen or those which have been admitted since the Government was formed. I say, then, that the precedent in the Missouri case has been misconceived, and that in accepting it as an example and an authority for what is proposed in this bill, and for what has been done under extraordinary circumstances in recent years, we fall into gross error and depart from those well-settled constitutional principles which shaped the practice of the Government in former times.

This is the first one of a series of bills which will be considered in Congress with reference to the readmission of States from the South, and I think it very desirable that this important question of State equality should now be once more looked at and determined. We should do upon this occasion what was always done in the admission of States before we were disturbed by the war into certain departures from the well-settled practice of the Government. Let us stand where Congress stood from the foundation of the Government down to the outbreak of the war in 1861, and maintain as a settled, as an invaluable principle, that each State, under the legislation of Congress, shall stand the peer and equal of every other. And let us not be misled by this reference to the Missouri case, which is no example and no precedent for the legislation now proposed. If a constitution sent here, that of Arkansas or of any other State, contains matter which is objectionable; or if upon grounds of public policy it is inexpedient to accept it; or if there be temporary considerations which should induce delay, let those matters be duly considered and influence the action of the Senate; but whenever you admit the State to representation do not admit her with an improper check upon her sovereign power; do not admit her as an inferior member of the sisterhood of States; for if you attempt thus by congressional legislation to mold the political institutions of the States that are to be rehabilitated, and of the new States that are to be admitted, you will enter upon a policy fraught with infinite mischief and one, too, forbidden by the Constitution.

As to the cases which have undergone judicial investigation regarding the reservation of property rights by the United States in the admission of new States and limiting the taxation of settlers upon the public lands therein, they raise questions in quite a different field of investigation from that in which we are now employed.

I rose, Mr. President, for the purpose of speaking to this question, because this is the first bill of the session which has directly and clearly raised it. It is one of a most important character, and should be correctly decided.

Mr. SHERMAN obtained the floor.

Mr. DRAKE. I should like to ask the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania now the question which he declined to allow me to ask before.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Certainly.

Mr. DRAKE. The Senator from Pennsylvania bases his remarks largely upon the equality of the States and upon their coming into the Union upon an equal footing. I should like to inquire of the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania whether he meant to intimate that there is anything in the Constitution of the United States that requires States to be admitted on an equal footing with the other States?

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. President, I will answer the Senator by referring him to the debates in Congress, most elaborate and exhaustive, upon that very question in former times. It is not a question to be answered in a sentence, or I should gladly answer it.

Mr. DRAKE. It does not meet my question for the gentleman to refer me to the debates in Congress. I wish to know whether the gentleman meant himself to intimate that this equal footing of the States with each other upon their admission is a thing that is required by the Constitution?

Mr. BUCKALEW. I will answer the Senator if he asks my opinion. I say most certainly I think so.

Mr. DRAKE. I ask the honorable Senator, then, to point me to the clause of the Constitution which requires it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I believe I have the floor. Mr. President, I shall follow the example of the Senator from Pennsylvania in making my remarks upon this bill very brief, because I hope there will be a vote to-day, so that we may have the question disposed of. My view of this case is confined simply to regarding it as a sequence or appendix to the act of March 24, 1867. By the terms of that act, commonly known as the military reconstruction bill, we provided for certain acts to be done by these rebel States. Those acts were clearly defined. All of them were expressed in legal language. For the purpose of ascertaining whether the people of the State of Arkansas have complied with these conditions I will read the fifth section of that act, which provides:

"That when the people of any one of said rebel States shall have formed a constitution of government in conformity with the Constitution of the United States in all respects, framed by a convention of delegates elected by the male citizens of said State twenty-one years old and upward, of whatever race, color, or previous condition, who have been resident in said State for one year previous to the day of such election, except such as may be disfranchised for participation in the rebellion or for felony at common law, and when such constitution shall provide that the elective franchise shall be enjoyed by all such persons as have the qualifications herein stated for electors of delegates, and when such constitution shall be ratified by a majority of the persons voting on the question of ratification who are qualified as electors for delegates, and when such constitution shall have been submitted to Congress for examination and approval, and Congress shall have approved the same, and when said State, by a vote of its Legislature, elected under said constitution, shall have adopted the amendment to the Constitution of the United States, proposed by the Thirty-Ninth Congress, and known as article fourteen, and when said article shall have become a part of the Constitution of the United States, said State shall be declared entitled to representation in Congress."

And then we provide that these Senators and Representatives shall be admitted. Now, sir, every condition, every qualification imposed by the act which authorized the loyal people in these States to form a constitution and government for themselves has been complied with, and you have no right, in justice or honesty, to add additional qualifications. These qualifications were prescribed after the most careful deliberation. You took all the guarantees, all the guards, and all the securities that you deemed advisable. You had the undoubted right then to prescribe terms and conditions to these people. They were at your mercy. Their governments had been overthrown by war. Congress, as the law-making power of the country, had the right to impose terms and conditions upon these people; and you did it, and they have complied literally with every qualification and condition you imposed upon them. Now, sir, it is not right, in my judgment, even if we had the power, to add additional terms or qualifications.

What is the proposition of the Senator from Missouri? After these people have done all we have required of them, after their constitution is perfect, so far as there are any statements here made, when by its provisions it secures liberty, equality, and justice; when the whole machinery of the government is in the control of the loyal people, when no distinction is made by that constitution on account of color; when the constitution itself has been ratified by the people and is approved by Congress, what right have you to impose upon them additional conditions, and say that unless their Legislature subsequently elected shall do so and so we will not admit them? You did state, as a condition of their admission, that their Legislature elected under the constitution should meet together and adopt the constitutional amendment called article fourteen. What right have you to go further now, and say that the Legislature shall again meet and shall again adopt—

Mr. CONKLING. It was provided that the other States should also adopt the constitutional amendment before any of them should come in.

Mr. SHERMAN. But that is a matter we may waive if we choose. If Senators say that none of these States shall be admitted until all of them, or a sufficient number of them, have adopted the constitutional amendment, that is one thing. I can see that that ground may be technically tenable; but it is a sufficient answer even to that that a bill has come to us, and I believe is now in the Judiciary Committee, which provides for the admission of a sufficient number of States to comply with that condition, and unless we put the two bills together we must take one before the other. It seems to me, therefore, that that is a new point suggested by the Senator from New York not now made in the case.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator will pardon me for one moment, I do not make it as a point; I merely suggest it to him. If this was put on the ground that the State was entitled to admission because the conditions precedent had been complied with, we then should find, scrutinizing the bill, that one important thing provided for in the act of March 2, 1857, had not, in fact, occurred. I did not make it as a point.

Mr. SHERMAN. It may be that that technical objection could be made; but, as a matter of course, if we act upon these constitutions severally, one by one, we must act in anticipation of the action of a sufficient number to adopt the constitutional amendment. But practically this is of no consequence, because we know that a sufficient number of States have either already adopted the constitutional amendment or are in process of doing it; and we must take, therefore, the facts as they are likely to arise. Now, I say, it is not right or just, after the people of this State, in all forms, by their convention and by their Legislature, have agreed to comply with every term, and condition you have imposed upon them, to impose any others.

In regard to the bill as it came from the House I see no objection to it, because I think the stipulation or "fundamental condition," as stated by the House, substantially comes within the meaning of the Missouri condition, as stated by the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania. I believe that when a class of people have the right in a State government to vote, a portion of the people cannot deprive them of that right; that it would be wrong to change the constitution in that particular. It would be very difficult indeed to limit the power of a State to change its constitution, and I agree with what was said by the Senator from Illinois that the mode and manner of enforcing these stipulations would be very difficult indeed. Congress may, or either House may, deny the admission of members from a State that has absolutely refused to comply with the fundamental conditions attached to its admission; but that is a question neither here nor there.

I should be willing to vote for the bill with the qualification; I should be willing to vote for the admission of Arkansas without this qualification. They have already put this provision in their constitution, and I want no more guarantee. I do not believe it is possible in the nature of things ever to deprive the colored people of any of these southern States of the right to vote. To attempt to do it would be so great an outrage that it would create civil war, contention, and strife; and I do not fear it at all. But I do not object to this bill because it contains that stipulation, for it is in harmony with the precedents. It simply guarantees to the people there who now form this government and their descendants the right to participate in that government now and hereafter. I do not believe that right is in danger; but if, in the opinion of any Senator, this additional clause will give an additional guarantee to the people there that the government shall not be so changed as to deprive a portion of the people who have participated in framing that government of the right to vote, I am willing to give it to them by an act of Congress. It is in accordance with the precedents, and it comes within the meaning of the very rule so clearly stated by the Senator from Pennsylvania; that is, that the purpose of this Union is to secure to each State equality.

If any of the older States should attempt to deprive any portion of the people who participated in the formation of their State government of the right to vote, that would be an infraction, as I believe, of the spirit of the Constitution; it would be anti-republican. But that case has not arisen. From the foundation of the Government to this time the tendency has always been toward the extension of the elective franchise, and to broadening the basis of all the State governments. From the framing of the Constitution no step backward has been made; and I do not fear that any of us will live to see the time when any portion of the people of any State will be deprived of a right which is given to them by the constitution of the State. The tendency in this country is all the other way, and until we turn our course backward and go up stream toward despotism, there is no danger of any portion of our people now possessing the right of suffrage being deprived of that right by the action of a State. Local jealousy or a spirit of caste may prevent a State from extending the elective franchise when it is demanded by common sense and by the march of events; people may pause and hesitate in conferring the elective franchise; but there is no step backward in this process, and there is no danger at all, in my judgment, of any portion of the people of the United States now possessing the elective franchise being deprived of the right of suffrage.

I shall vote against the amendment of the Senator from Missouri as unjust in itself, delaying the admission of this State until this matter is sent back to the Legislature to comply with new conditions, and then when they have sent them back here we shall probably impose others, and they will be denied the right which we have tendered them. It seems to me it is unjust. The clause as sent to us by the House seems as unobjectionable as any we are likely to have. Although this clause may not be very effective, if in the opinion of any Senator it will tend to secure to the people of these States and their descendants the right to participate in their government, I am willing to vote for it.

Indeed, it seems to me that we ought promptly to act upon the admission of all these States, and let them all in. We have done all we can possibly do, and I believe we have successfully secured to the loyal people of the southern States the control of the political power in those States. Eventually that political power will rest in the majority of the voters there, without any disqualification on account of rebellion or caste or color. We must depend upon that. But for the present we have done all we could to secure to the loyal people the supremacy in the State governments, and we ought, in accordance with the spirit and in harmony with our form of government, to leave to those people their local government, and withdraw the superintending control and power of the national Government, except as to such matters as are by the Constitution placed within the sole and exclusive authority of the national Government.

Mr. FERRY. Mr. President, disapproving both of the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri and of the condition attached to the original bill, I desire at this time, if it be in order, to perfect the text of the original bill by moving an amendment to that bill in order to obtain a vote, before the question shall be finally had, upon the principle of attaching any condition whatever.

Mr. DRAKE. Before the honorable Senator from Connecticut offers that, I desire to modify my amendment, as it may make some difference in the judgment of Senators.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported as modified.

The Chief Clerk read the first section of the amendment, as modified, as follows, the second section being unchanged:

That the State of Arkansas, under and with the constitution thereof adopted in convention on the 11th day of February, 1868, and subsequently ratified by the people of said State, shall be entitled to be admitted to representation in Congress as one of the States of the Union, whenever the Legislature of said State shall pass an act agreeing on behalf of said State to the following fundamental condition of such admission, to wit: that within the said State there shall be no denial of the elective franchise in all elections by the people or of any other rights to any person by reason of race or color, excepting Indians not taxed; and that any violation by said State of the terms of this condition shall authorize the exclusion of said State from representation in either House of Congress so long as such violation continues; and that all laws or ordinances enacted or ordained in said State in contravention of this fundamental condition shall be wholly inoperative therein.

Mr. FERRY. The proposition made by the Senator from Missouri is a substitute for the entire bill. What I propose to do is to perfect the text of the bill by a motion to strike out a part of the original bill, which I suppose to be in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order to amend the original bill before the vote is taken on the substitute.

Mr. FERRY. The motion which I wish to make is to strike out all of the original bill after the word "Union" in the fourth line.

Mr. JOHNSON. How will it read then?

Mr. FERRY. It will read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c. That the State of Arkansas is entitled and admitted to representation in Congress as one of the States of the Union.

Sir, I am of opinion that it is not in the power of the Congress of the United States, nor in the power either of the Legislature or a convention chosen for the express purpose, of the people of a State to make a compact whereby the people of that State in future times shall be prohibited from altering or amending their constitution. I do not wish to argue the question; but I desire by my vote to express the opinion which I thus entertain upon the original condition in the bill as sent to us from the House. If the Senate shall, upon such vote, decide to retain the original condition, I may then feel constrained by the present situation of public affairs to vote for the bill even as it stands, although the Senate shall have decided, against my opinion, to keep it in its present condition. Such vote, however, will be based in my own mind upon the conviction that the "fundamental condition," as it is termed in the original bill, is simply waste paper, and utterly void.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I expect to vote in such form as the bill shall assume, under the prevailing judgment of the Senate, for the admission of Arkansas; not, however, with that faith which seems to inspire the honorable Senator from Ohio, and I rise because I was struck with one or two observations made by him. He consoles himself by saying that we have gone far enough to place the political power in this and the other southern States in the hands of those deserving protection. I content myself now with saying that I hope and trust events will bear him out.

Passing that, he proposes a ground upon which we may consistently vote for this proposed condition; and whether the vote I give upon this condition is favorable to it or adverse to it, I should like to know; and I should be glad that we might all know the grounds upon which we are proceeding. Really, I submit to the Senator that the most ingenious, at least, of all devisable theories upon which this condition may be imposed, is that which he has suggested, namely, that it answers the purpose sought in the Missouri condition and raises up this State to an equality with the older States, or reduces her to an equality, for otherwise she would be above it. He says, if I understand him, that no State would have the right by the action of a portion of its people to deprive any other portion of the right of suffrage which theretofore they had enjoyed, and in that way he says equality is conferred by these words, "Upon the following fundamental condition: that the constitution of Arkansas shall never be so amended or changed as to deprive any citizen or class of citizens of the United States of the right to vote who are entitled to vote by the constitution herein recognized, except as a punishment for such crimes," &c. It might, perhaps, be a sufficient answer to this proposition to say that if in truth and in law no State in this Union possesses that right or prerogative now, nothing is to be accomplished by inserting this condition, and verily, then, it would be in its utmost extent, as the Senator from Connecticut said, blank paper.

But, Mr. President, let us see whether in another light such one proposition as this can stand for a moment. In the State of Indiana, for example—I think I am not mistaken in the fact—all men otherwise entitled enjoy the elective franchise upon a residence of ten days, and only ten days, within that State. Does the honorable Senator from Ohio doubt that the Legislature of Indiana may say to-morrow that hereafter a year of residence shall be an indispensable condition precedent before the elective right shall ensue? And yet this proposition beyond all question would apply precisely to such legislation as that. If Indiana has that right; if New York has the right to say, as she does say, that no man shall vote unless he has resided a year in the State, four months in the county, thirty days in the district, and ten days in the precinct in which his vote is cast; and if every other State has the right to regulate these provisions just as it pleases, changing them with the shifting sands of public opinion or public exigency, how can we say, when we tie up the State of Arkansas and say to her that in no one of these respects shall she exercise a legislative discretion, that we thereby confer upon her the prerogative of equality, and that in that way we liken this case to the case of Missouri.

Mr. President, I submit with great deference to the Senator that that will not do, and that no man can wink so hard as not to see that this is the plain proposition of imposing upon a particular State a condition peculiar to it; not a condition precedent, which beyond all question we have the right to impose—a right which in the older debates was always conceded—but a condition to continue to adhere to that State not only during its minority, not only during its territorial experience, but to stick to it forever, like the tunic of Nessus. That is this proposition, and I think, with the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania, that we should meet it fairly, meet it as the pioneer case of these deranged and disordered States, and meet it as a question likely to be of still more importance than heretofore it has ever assumed.

Mr. President, one other remark made by the Senator from Ohio attracted my attention. He takes the ground, if I understand him, that Arkansas has acquired a vested right, so to speak, in admission at once to the Union. Why, and how? Because, said the Senator, we imposed with all the circumspection and caution that we could observe in advance certain prerequisites, the understanding being that compliance with these should be consummated by admission, and that compliance having occurred the consummation should follow. If that be so it leaves really very little discretion of any sort to the Senate. Certainly it seems to me it does not leave us at liberty to impose this condition, as I understand it. It leaves us at liberty to do it as the Senator understands it; because it would be a mere flourish of trumpets, a mere piece of rhetoric or of verbiage, as the case might be.

But can it be true that we stand in any such condition as to Arkansas, that she is to be admitted upon that ground at all? I pointed out to the Senator one respect which seemed to me important, in which no compliance has taken place with the premises presupposed in the reconstruction act. That act, which is not before me, says, in substance—I will not venture to give the language—that this admission shall occur after the fourteenth article of amendment to the Constitution has been not only voted upon approvingly by the State itself, but when, and not until, that article has become imbedded in the imperishable bulwarks of the Constitution itself. The Senator says that is technical. Why, sir, is that technical? I am one of those who believe up to this time—I have never been reformed in that respect—that the best, the wisest, the most effectual, the most all-sufficient plan and proposition of reconstruction that we ever had, that the ingenuity of any man ever suggested, is comprised and bound up within this very constitutional amendment, the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution; and I conceive that nothing is more substantial, nothing is more radically important, nothing is better entitled to be called the Aaron's rod of this whole matter, swallowing up all other things, than the consummation of that constitutional amendment.

The Senate may answer it as matter of fact in this case by saying, so many other States are coming here in an omnibus bill as is stated in the newspapers, which the other House has passed; so many States are going to enter in, that even according to all men's arithmetic, three fourths of all the States will have voted affirmatively, and then the consummation will be reached. Grant that, if you please, as a matter of fact; but do not let us say that the absence of that consummation is a mere technical, a mere formal, a mere superficial defect. I submit that the word "fundamental," which has entered so often into this debate, is applicable to nothing more than to that.

Mr. President, I do not believe that we are bound to admit the State of Arkansas. I do not believe there is any one of these States that stands in such an attitude as to demand admission, foreclosing us from exercising a wise discretion, an unrestricted discretion, within the limits of the Constitution, upon the whole question. As I said, I expect to vote for the admission of Arkansas, and I expect to do it for reasons which I will not intrude upon the Senate, but which I hope may approve themselves by time. This has been an experiment all the way. It seems to me the admission of this State is an experiment; it seems to me that the admission of the other States is an experiment which may result in such a way as to put to confusion the faith of those gentlemen who believe that we have already insured in the hands of the loyal men of the South the political power of that region. But, sir, I will not go into that. I rose chiefly for the purpose of distinguishing between what I conceive to have been the argument in the Missouri case and any arguments which can successfully be made to vindicate this proposition.

Mr. WILSON. I move—

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senator to yield to me for two or three minutes.

Mr. WILSON. I propose now to move an adjournment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to an adjournment after I reply to one or two observations of the Senator from New York.

Mr. WILSON. Very well.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I desire to make one or two observations in reply to the Senator from New York, and I prefer to make them now, because otherwise I shall forget them before morning.

The Senator from New York, with a good deal of ingenuity, endeavors to compare this case with the case of the State of Indiana, which, although not quite so liberal as he says, is very liberal in allowing persons to vote there who have resided in that State six months. There is nothing in this clause that would prevent the State of Arkansas or any other State from changing its constitution in this or any other particular that did not amount to class legislation; and the distinction between the case provided for by this clause and the case he illustrates it by is the difference between a general provision applying to all classes of voters and a provision applying to a particular class of voters. For instance, suppose the State of Indiana should undertake to say that a white man who resided in the State six months should vote, but that a negro should be required to live there two years before he should vote, that would clearly be class legislation. It would be aimed at a portion of the people, a portion of the electors, a portion of the citizens. The State of Arkansas requires one year's residence by the constitution laid upon our table; but they might, if they choose, more liberalize their constitution by requiring but six months' residence; and there is nothing in this fundamental condition to prevent them from doing it. They might require a residence of two years, and if that requirement was applied to all electors, white and black, who came into that State, it would be clearly constitutional.

Mr. CONKLING. Is not the language of the bill "individual or class?"

Mr. SHERMAN. The language is:

That the constitution of Arkansas shall never be so amended or changed as to deprive any citizen or class of citizens of the United States of the right to vote.

If that was aimed against a citizen or a class of citizens it would be unconstitutional; but if it was aimed at all persons who had not resided within the State for a certain length of time it would be clearly constitutional. There is the distinction which I know my ingenious friend from New York will perceive at once.

Again, he says that the act of last year has not the binding force I give it. I do not say that it is binding upon us, because nothing is binding upon us. We have the power, if we choose, to exclude these States for all time to come, because we have the power and control of Congress, and without the consent of the Senate no Senator can ever come into this body from the State of Arkansas.

But it is not a question of power; it is a question of right, of duty, of fair play. We have said to the people of Arkansas, "If you will do so and so, a matter that is a great deal of trouble to you, if you will call a convention, hold elections, go through the various forms and processes which we require of you"—and we required the people of Arkansas to toil day after day and night after night to be registered, to be enrolled, to vote half a dozen times—"if you will do all these things we will let you in." When they have done all that they could do, is it right for us now to impose additional conditions on the ground that we have the power to do it? I think not.

I agree fully with what the Senator from New York says in regard to the fourteenth constitutional amendment. I have always thought that that was the best, safest, and surest basis of reconstruction; and had it not been for the evil genius of Andrew Johnson I think this question would have been settled long ago on the basis of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution. If Senators are really fearful that Arkansas will be admitted here, and that the other States will refuse to ratify the constitutional amendment, I would not vote for the admission of Arkansas. If I supposed that the fourteenth amendment would not be adopted by the process of reconstruction that is now going on in the southern States, I should refuse to vote to admit these States, or any of them, until that amendment was adopted, because that is our great safety and bulwark. But I take it we can all act in view of common faith in men; and while these States are going on organizing their governments we know that they will adopt the constitutional amendment as a part of the necessary process. If I feared that sufficient States would not adopt it, I would go with other Senators and postpone the admission of Arkansas; but I have no doubt of it. They will eagerly adopt it.

Mr. DRAKE. Will the honorable Senator from Ohio be so good as to state how many States now stand as having adopted the constitutional amendment; I mean the whole number?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think twenty-three or twenty-four; I cannot say exactly; but the Senator knows as well as I.

Mr. DRAKE. No; I appeal to the honorable Senator for information.

Mr. SHERMAN. My impression is that twenty-three or twenty-four have adopted it.

Mr. DRAKE. Since Ohio and New Jersey retracted?

Mr. WILSON. Twenty-three States.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think the withdrawal of New Jersey or Ohio is at all valid. I think it is the opinion of the best lawyers of the country that having once performed a constitutional power they cannot withdraw it. I do not think it is necessary to have these constant interruptions. I wish to close what I have to say, and I desire simply to say that I shall vote for the admission of Arkansas with the expectation that it will go far to promote the admission of the other States and facilitate the prompt settlement of this whole question on the basis of the constitutional amendment and universal suffrage.

Mr. WILSON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

PRIVILEGES OF SENATORS.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Before the Senator submits his motion to adjourn I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to submit a resolution that may go over.

Mr. EDMUNDS and others. Let us hear what it is.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I simply wish to present it and let it go over.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, (as the sense of the Senate,) That any enforced attendance of a member of the Senate before a Committee of the House of Representatives to be examined as a witness upon any question or matter relating to the impeachment trial would be a flagrant breach of the privileges of the Senate, and that any voluntary attendance of a Senator before such committee for such purpose would be highly improper.

The resolution was laid over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the Senate do now adjourn.

INDEX TO IMPEACHMENT REPORT.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to offer a resolution providing for an index to the report of the impeachment trial, which I should like to have adopted before an adjournment, if no Senator objects.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts withdraw his motion to adjourn for that purpose?

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHERMAN. No one will object to it, I know. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That a suitable index be made by the Secretary of the Senate for the official report of the proceedings in the impeachment trial.

Mr. ANTHONY. An index has been already prepared.

Mr. SUMNER. I think there is no occasion for that for a particular reason which I should like to state.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well; I withdraw it.

Mr. SUMNER. It is within my knowledge that the proprietors of the Globe have taken special pains with regard to the index of the report of the impeachment trial. I speak from knowledge on the subject.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well; I withdraw the resolution.

Mr. WILSON. I renew the motion to adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 27, 1868.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOXTON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

BRIDGES OVER THE OHIO.

Mr. CARY, by unanimous consent, offered the following preamble and resolution; which were read, considered, and agreed to:

Whereas several bridges are in progress of construction over the Ohio river; and whereas the navigation of this great highway of commerce should not be obstructed:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be requested to consider the propriety of a general law providing that no bridge shall be constructed over said river with a span over the channel of less than five hundred feet; and that they report by bill or otherwise.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLAINE. I hold in my hand the bill (H. R. No. 658) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes, which has come from the Senate. It has been informally considered by the Committee on Appropriations. There are some half a dozen amendments made by the Senate, one or two of which are of some importance; the rest are unimportant. The committee have instructed me to move to non-concur in the amendments and ask for a committee of conference, as the easiest way of adjusting the matter.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. Let the amendments be read.

The amendments were reported, as follows:

Page 1, line two, after the word "source," insert as follows: "Except appropriations made by act of March 2, 1867."

Same line, after the word "hereby," insert "directed to be."

Same line, after the word "Treasury," insert "at the close of the current fiscal year."

Page 2, lines seven and eight, strike out: "For expenses of the signal service of the Army, $5,000."

Strike out all of section two after the enacting clause, as follows:

That the sums appropriated for each of the several items contained in this act shall be made up only by computing the unexpended balance for such item which may remain in the Treasury on the 30th day of June, 1868, and adding thereto so much more from the Treasury as will give the sum for each of such items appropriated by this act; Provided, however, That this shall not be construed to prevent the payment from the proper appropriation of expenditures made during the current fiscal year after said year shall have closed.

And in lieu thereof insert:

That from the sums appropriated for each of the several items contained in this act there be deducted the unexpended balance for such item which may remain in the Treasury on the 30th of June, 1868.

Insert as an additional section the following:

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That of the appropriation of $50,000 for publishing the medical and surgical history of the rebellion and the medical statistics of the Provost Marshal General's office, made in an act approved July 28, 1866, $30,000 shall be devoted to the preparation and publication of five thousand copies of the medical statistics of the Provost Marshal General's Bureau, and that the work shall be compiled and completed by Assistant Medical Purveyor J. H. Baxter, under the immediate direction of the Secretary of War, and without the interference of any other officer.

Mr. PAINE. If it is in order I wish to move to concur in that Senate amendment which strikes out the appropriation for the Signal corps.

The SPEAKER. The question of concurrence is before the House. It arises naturally, and if the gentleman insists on a separate vote on that amendment the Chair will put the question on concurrence.

Mr. PAINE. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] says that he will be in favor of concurring in that amendment as a member of the committee of conference, and I therefore withdraw my request.

The question was taken on Mr. BLAINE's motion, and it was agreed to.

CANADIAN FISHERIES.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from Mr. George W. Brega, relative to the Canadian fisheries and the regulations of the Canadian Government in regard thereto; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

INTERNAL TAX BILL.

Mr. SCHENCK. I desire, as authorized by the House, to report back from the Committee of Ways and Means the bill (H. R. No. 1060) to reduce into one act and to amend the laws relating to internal taxes. It was my intention to move to commit the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and have it made the special order for to-day and thence on, as the House authorized, from day to day until disposed of; but after some conference with the Committee on Appropriations with reference to the state of business I have agreed to submit a motion that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and made the special order for to-morrow after the morning hour and from day to day until disposed of. And before that motion is put I desire to explain to the House that under the instructions of the Committee of Ways and Means I report the printed bill back without amendments. The committee have been revising the bill and will have a number of amendments—not a very great number, however—to submit as the sections shall be read in their order. They are mostly of a verbal character, giving greater precision and exactness to the bill, and I am instructed to offer them as the reading proceeds.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that under a suspension of the rules on Monday this bill was ordered to be made the special order in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union every day after the morning hour until disposed of, and it is now the special order.

Mr. SCHENCK. Then I ask that it be postponed until after the morning hour.

Mr. BLAINE. What will be the result of referring the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union? Will it have precedence of the Indian appropriation bill?

The SPEAKER. The Indian appropriation bill was made a special order at an earlier day than the tax bill and must be the first disposed of, unless the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union should lay it aside.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

DECORATIONS OF SOLDIERS' GRAVES.

Mr. FERRY, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and unanimously adopted:

Whereas the 30th day of May instant is designated for the purpose of strewing flowers upon the graves of those who died in defense of their country during the late rebellion; and whereas public and private duties forbid many citizens of the nation from personal participation, and circumstances render it impracticable for many to visit with their offerings the graves of their heroic dead who rest in national burial places distant from home and kindred consecration; Therefore, in behalf of this body and the people represented who unavoidably are deprived of the sacred memorial of personally responding to this patriotic homage:

Be it resolved, That General N. Michler, Superintendent of Public Grounds, be, and he is hereby, instructed to prepare and transmit, so far as practicable, to each of the national Union soldiers' cemeteries, selections of flowers from all the public gardens, to be intermingled with like touchingly beautiful offerings of other citizens who, upon that hallowed occasion, gather to cast floral tributes of grateful devotion to the memory of fallen braves who, in defense of universal liberty, cheerfully and nobly died that the Republic might live.

DOCUMENTS FOR NATIONAL ASYLUM.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution for consideration at this time:

Resolved, That there be placed under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior one copy of each of the following documents, namely, the Journals of each House of Congress at each and every session, the laws of Congress, the annual messages of the President, with accompanying documents, and all other documents or books which may be printed or bound by order of either House of Congress, including the Congressional Globe, to be sent to the national asylum for disabled volunteer soldiers at Dayton, Ohio, for the library connected therewith.

No objection was made.

The question was upon adopting the resolution.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will ask my colleague [Mr. SCHENCK] to modify his resolution so as to include each of the national asylums; that is, to add to the national asylum at Dayton, Ohio, the branches at Augusta, Maine, and at Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHENCK. I wish to submit a single word of explanation. The reason why I submitted the resolution in its present shape is simply this: the national asylum for disabled volunteer soldiers is in fact and by law one institution. It has, however, three establishments, the central asylum, as it is termed, at Dayton, Ohio, and two branches, one at Augusta, Maine, and the other at Milwaukee, Wisconsin. The soldiers at Dayton, Ohio, have established for themselves, with the aid of the contributions of the benevolent, the beginning of a very good library. There are nearly a thousand inmates of that asylum now; there are but some two hundred or thereabouts at each of the other branches. Upon visiting these soldiers I find that they are ready, willing, and desirous to read anything in the shape of information, and political information particularly. I have no objection to the amendment suggested by my colleague, [Mr. GARFIELD,] and will modify the resolution by inserting the words "and branches at Augusta, Maine, and Milwaukee, Wisconsin," after the words "at Dayton, Ohio." There are no other asylums of a national character.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I would inquire of the gentleman whether it was the soldiers at this asylum that the Legislature of his State has recently disfranchised, as reported in the papers?

Mr. SCHENCK. Yes; these very soldiers; and nobody understands it better, or will make stronger comments upon it in due time, than the soldiers themselves.

The resolution, as modified, was then adopted.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORTS FROM NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. BARNES, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 277) calling for reports of national banks; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN SEDGWICK.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order during the morning hour is the consideration of a substitute reported from the Committee of Claims by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MERCUR] for House joint resolution No. 96, for the relief of John Sedgwick, collector of internal revenue in the third district of California.

The question was upon agreeing to the substitute.

The substitute was read. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to John Sedgwick, collector of internal revenue in the third district of California, the sum of $3,500, or so much thereof as the proper accounting officer shall, from satisfactory vouchers, determine to be necessary, to secure to him a salary of that amount for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1864, in addition to the amount he necessarily paid out in currency in the discharge of his official duties for said year.

Mr. MERCUR. So many days have elapsed since the report of the Committee of Claims upon this joint resolution was read that perhaps the facts of the case may have passed out of the recollection of members who may have heard that report.

This joint resolution is for the relief of John Sedgwick, who was the collector of internal revenue in the third collection district of the State of California, and proposes to allow him a compensation of $3,500 for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1864. Prior to that time, under the legislation of Congress, the Secretary of the Treasury was limited to the allowance of the gross sum of $10,000, to be paid to the collector of each district, which sum included not only all the expenditures which are paid to the assistants in the various sub-districts, but also the compensation for his services. This third district in California is one of a very large territory composed of twenty-one counties. And according to the custom of that country the collector paid his assistants in coin, and the $10,000 were substantially absorbed in the payment of the necessary expenses of the district, leaving nothing to be retained for the collector. Since that time the law of Congress has been changed, and the Secretary of the Treasury has been authorized and empowered to make an additional allowance to the collector; and in pursuance of that authority he has, since the fiscal year ending June 30, 1864, allowed and paid the collector for his services the sum of $3,500. This bill proposes to pay him for his services during that year precisely the same amount which he has annually received for his services since that time.

This matter was brought to the attention of the House during the Thirty-Ninth Congress, and a joint resolution intended to give Mr. Sedgwick the relief asked for was then passed. I ask the Clerk to read that resolution:

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to audit and settle the accounts of John Sedgwick, collector of internal revenue for the third collection district of California.

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to audit and settle the accounts of John Sedgwick, collector of internal revenue for the third collection district of California, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1864, as to him may appear just and equitable.

Approved, March 2, 1867.

Mr. MERCUR. I ask the Clerk to read also the letter from the Treasury Department which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 11, 1867.

SIR: I transmit herewith a copy of a private resolution, No. 22, approved March 2, 1867, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to audit and settle the account of John Sedgwick, esq., late internal revenue collector for the third collection district of California.

I will thank you to give the matter your consideration, and advise the Department of your views relative thereto.

Respectfully,

J. F. HARTLEY,
Assistant Secretary.

Hon. E. A. ROLLINS, Commissioner Internal Revenue.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
WASHINGTON, March 12, 1867.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of yours of the 11th instant, transmitting copy of a private resolution No. 22, authorizing the settlement of the account of John Sedgwick, collector of internal revenue for the third district of California, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1864.

When the recommendation was made for an increase in the allowance to collectors on the Pacific coast, it was intended that Mr. Sedgwick should realize a personal salary of $3,500. This, however, he was unable to do, owing to the great expense attending the administration of his office and the provision in the law of 1863 limiting the gross amount to be paid any collector to $10,000.

I now recommend that an order be issued under which the Auditor and Comptroller will be authorized to allow Mr. Sedgwick a personal salary of $3,500 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1864, exclusive of necessary and proper expenses as shown by satisfactory vouchers.

Very respectfully,

THOMAS HARLAN,
Acting Commissioner.

Hon. H. McCulloch,
Secretary of Treasury, Washington, D. C.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, June 20, 1867.

SIR: Your letter of March 12, recommending an allowance of $3,500 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1864, to collector John Sedgwick, of the third district of California, was referred soon after its receipt to the First Comptroller for an estimate of the amount required.

The Comptroller's reply, a copy of which is herewith inclosed, after stating the difficulties in the way of making such an estimate, discusses the question of power in the premises, and reaches the conclusion that the Secretary of the Treasury is not authorized, either by the special act referring to this case or by any other law, to make Mr. Sedgwick an allowance for compensation.

I concur with the Comptroller in the view which he takes of the law, and am, therefore, constrained to decline making the order suggested by you.

I adopt this course with regret, as the case would seem to be a meritorious one.

Very respectfully,

H. McCULLOCH,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. E. A. ROLLINS, Commissioner Internal Revenue.

Mr. MERCUR. In addition to the letters which have been read, I hold in my hand a letter from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, recommending this allowance; but I am unwilling to occupy further the attention of the House.

The substitute was agreed to.

The joint resolution, as amended by the adoption of the substitute, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question was on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HIGBY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that although the collection district of Mr. Sedgwick is not wholly within my congressional district, yet I know that it embraces a large extent of territory, and I know something about the expense of doing business there. During the session of Congress of 1864-65 the California delegation had their attention called to this very subject. On a conference with the Secretary of the Treasury it clearly appeared, from an investigation by that Department, that an allowance of this kind was due to Mr. Sedgwick. There was no question upon that point. The only question was as to the law passed in 1863, which limited the amount allowed for salaries, &c., in each collection district to $10,000. As the expenses in the district of Mr. Sedgwick were great, the $10,000 allowed by law was all expended in the payment of the deputies, and there was nothing left for the salary of the collector himself. The Secretary of the Treasury did not feel authorized to make this payment, and for that reason a joint resolution was passed at the last session of the last Congress. It is found, however, by the Department that the resolution does not go far enough to permit this payment to be made. For that reason this subject has been presented and the bill is now asked to be passed. Mr. Sedgwick should undoubtedly have this money. He has laid out of it from that time to this. He has received no salary for that year.

The bill was passed.

Mr. MERCUR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER stated the next business in order to be the call of the Committee on Commerce for reports.

CLEVELAND INSURANCE COMPANIES.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back the petition of sundry insurance companies and insurance agents in the city of Cleveland, Ohio, asking for the passage of a law making provision for insurance, &c., and moved that the same be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

BENJAMIN MAILLEFERT.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, from the same committee, also reported back the petition of Benjamin Maillefert, for compensation for blasting in Hurlgate, &c., and moved that the same be referred to the Committee of Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, from the same committee, reported adversely on the following, and the same were laid on the table:

Petition of citizens of Clinton, asking that the city of Clinton, Iowa, be created a port of entry;

A bill (H. R. No. 1003) to declare the Iowa river, in the State of Iowa, innavigable above the city of Wappello, Louisa county, Iowa;

Memorial and joint resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, asking that the Iowa river be declared not navigable from the city of Wappello north;

Petition of Dr. J. C. Mackenzie, geologist, in favor of an increased duty on copper;

Petition of Joseph H. Scranton and others, citizens of Pennsylvania, for the repeal of all laws establishing bonded warehouses;

A bill (H. R. No. 297) to remit the duties upon certain goods, wares, and merchandise destroyed by fire; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 89) explanatory of certain acts in relation to the armory and arsenal at Rock Island, in the State of Illinois.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ELIOT. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to report back House bill No. 1046, asking appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works, and for other purposes, and to ask that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole on the second Tuesday of June after the morning hour.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I object.

Mr. ELIOT. Then I suppose the necessary course of the bill will be to have it referred to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The bill appropriating money, if objection be made, must be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. ELIOT. Before that is done, I wish to say that, being referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, I will, on Monday one week from next Monday, ask the House to suspend the rules, so that it may be withdrawn from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and assigned for action as soon as it can conveniently be done.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I ask consent of the House to report a bill from the minority of the committee, to take the same course as the one of my colleague on the committee.

The SPEAKER. The rule declares that when the views of the minority are accompanied by a resolution or a bill such resolution or bill is not thereby brought before the House for action, but must be submitted by some member. The bill will be printed, and the gentleman gives notice he will offer it.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I also desire to submit the views of the minority.

Mr. ELIOT. I wish to say that the majority of the committee having reported this bill but not having submitted any report in writing, the minority of the committee, composed of my excellent friend the chairman of the committee, has reported a bill, and now proposes to submit a written report. I do not remember—unless the committee has sanctioned such a course, which has not been done in this case—that a written report has ever been made by the minority when no written report has been made by the majority. In this case it is a very excellent way of having the speech of my friend printed by the House in the form of a minority report. I have said this much in order to let the House know how this matter stands.

Mr. CHANLER. Excuse me; will the gentleman inform the House what this bill is?

The SPEAKER. It is the river and harbor bill.

Mr. CHANLER. What rivers and harbors? Is it a general bill?

The SPEAKER. Various rivers and harbors. The bill has been printed.

Mr. ELIOT. I do not desire to make any point of order on the chairman of the committee, nor, indeed, do I know that he has not a right to submit his views in writing, although it is a right I have never known to be exercised except by the action of the committee. I have said all I desire. I shall not interpose any objection.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I desire to say, in reply to my colleague, that this is a very common practice. Only a few days ago the minority of the Committee on Appropriations made an adverse report upon two bills reported by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SPALDING,] a member of the Committee on Appropriations, in regard to benevolent institutions in the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The only usage is to allow a committee, when they report a bill, to accompany it with a report in writing, or, if it is considered by the House, to allow the member reporting it to be heard by a speech at the time it is considered by the House. The rule on page 55 of the Digest states that—

"A minority of a committee cannot make a report, a minority not being the committee."—Journal, 1, 24, p. 562. [The common practice, however, is to permit the minority to submit their views in writing, which are usually printed and considered with the majority report.]

Mr. ELIOT. What is the practice when there is no report by the majority? Is it the practice for a minority of one to submit a report in writing?

The SPEAKER. The minority can only do so by the consent of the House, even if the majority do make a report in writing. If the majority do not make a written report, as they have a right to do, that should not preclude the minority from presenting their views in writing. The majority of the Committee of Elections, for instance, can simply report in a contested-election case a resolution, with no written explanation by the chairman or the member reporting it. The question then would be whether the House would preclude the minority from submitting their views, if they should desire to do so.

Mr. MAYNARD. I desire to offer an amendment to this bill in behalf of the delegation from my own State, to be printed.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not now before the House; it is now in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MAYNARD. I understand that; I only introduce the amendment in order that it may be printed.

Mr. CHANLER. I shall ask that the bill be read if any action is taken.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not before the House; the single objection of the gentleman from Illinois refers it to the Committee of the Whole, where it is now.

Mr. CHANLER. I hope no action will be taken ex parte; it appropriates a large amount of money for the improvement of harbors.

The SPEAKER. No action can be taken in the House except by unanimous consent, the gentleman from Illinois having objected to its consideration in the House.

Mr. CHANLER. Unless it is open to all parties I will object.

Mr. ALLISON. I object to the consumption of more time.

Mr. MAYNARD. I give notice that at the proper time I shall offer the following amendment to the first section of the bill:

For the improvement of the Tennessee river, according to the report of the survey made in compliance with the provisions of the act of March 2, 1867, and the recommendation of the chief of engineers, $615,000.

Mr. ELIOT. I yield now to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BAKER] for the same purpose.

Mr. BAKER. I desire to give notice that I will at the proper time offer the following amendment, to come in after line eighty-four:

For the improvement of the harbor at Alton, Illinois, $61,000.

Mr. VAN HORN, of New York. I give notice that at the proper time I will offer the following amendment, to come in after line eighty:

For the improvement of the harbor at Wilson, Niagara county, New York, $10,000.

Mr. CHANLER. Is it necessary to go through this process in order to have amendments offered?

The SPEAKER. It is not. They can be offered in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, but gentlemen desire to give preliminary notice.

REGISTRATION OF FOREIGN VESSELS.

Mr. ELIOT, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1119) for the registration or enrollment of certain foreign vessels; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to issue certificates of registry or enrollment and license to certain vessels built in the British provinces but owned by citizens of the United States, and at all times employed upon the waters of the lakes, provided that there shall be paid upon each of said foreign-built vessels a tax equal to the internal revenue tax upon the materials and construction of similar vessels of American build.

Mr. ELIOT. I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CUSTOMS REGULATIONS.

Mr. ELIOT, from the same committee, reported back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 735) to repeal an act approved March 2, 1867, entitled "An act to regulate the disposition of fines, penalties, and forfeitures received under the laws relating to the customs, and for other purposes."

The bill was read. The first section provides that the seventh section of an act approved March 3, 1863, entitled "An act to prevent and punish frauds upon the revenue, to provide for the more certain and speedy collection of claims in favor of the United States, and for other purposes," and the thirty-ninth section of an act approved July 18, 1866, entitled "An act further to prevent smuggling, and for other purposes," shall be so amended that the warrant or warrants therein required to be issued by the judge of the district courts of the United States shall be directed to the marshal of the district within which the merchandise, in respect to which alleged frauds have been committed or attempted, was imported or entered, or his deputy, instead of the collector of the port, as therein provided. And the warrant so issued, with full report of service and proceedings thereon, shall be returned by the officer serving the same as other warrants are returned, to the court of the district within which such judge resides.

The second section provides that whenever the collector or other chief officer of the customs of any port shall be notified in writing by the owner or consignee of any vessel or vehicle arriving from any port or place of a lien for freight on any merchandise legally imported in such vessel or vehicle and remaining in his custody, such collector or other officer is authorized and empowered to refuse delivery of such merchandise from any public or private bonded warehouse, or other place in which the same shall be deposited, until proof to his satisfaction shall be produced that the freight due thereon has been paid or secured, but the rights of the United States shall not be prejudiced thereby, nor shall the United States nor its officers be liable for losses consequent upon such refusal to deliver. And the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe all needful regulations to carry the provisions of this section into effect.

The third section repeals the seventeenth section of the act approved July 18, 1866, and the act approved March 2, 1867, entitled "An act to regulate the disposition of fines, penalties, and forfeitures received under the laws relating to the customs, and for other purposes."

The Committee on Commerce reported the following amendment to the bill:

In line sixteen of the first section, after the word "entered" insert "or within which the invoices, books, or papers relating to the same may be thought to be."

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee reported the following amendment to the title of the bill:

Amend the title by adding "and to amend certain acts for the prevention and punishment of frauds on the revenue, and for the prevention of smuggling."

The amendment to the title was agreed to.

Mr. ELIOT. I move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHANGING NAMES OF PLEASURE YACHTS.

Mr. ELIOT. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to report for the action of the House the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

A bill (H. R. No. 1120) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to change the names of certain vessels was received, and read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was read at length. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to change the name of the yacht W. W. Abell, owned by James Lloyd Greene, of Norwich, Connecticut, administrator of the estate of Benjamin B. Greene, late of Norwich, deceased, and John Jeffries, jr., of Boston, Massachusetts, to that of Ethel; and also to change the name of the yacht l'Hirondelle, owned by James Gordon Bennett, jr., of New York city, to that of Dauntless; and to grant to said vessels registers in said respective names, the said vessels being pleasure yachts only, and not engaged in commercial business.

Mr. PRUYN. I understand this bill to be one for changing the names of certain vessels. Am I right?

Mr. ELIOT. The gentleman is right as far as he goes.

Mr. PRUYN. Some time ago, when I presented a request from some of the leading merchants of New York, under very peculiar circumstances, for the change of the name of a vessel, I understood that the Committee on Commerce had never reported in favor of such an application, and that there was no chance that they would ever make such a report. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ELIOT] so told me, and I therefore did not press the application. I understand now that the committee have changed their views on the subject. Is that so?

Mr. ELIOT. That is not so. I have heard very distinctly what the gentleman said; but I will state to him what the fact is, and what the course of the committee has been. The fact is that these two vessels are mere pleasure yachts, owned by private individuals for pleasure purposes. They are not engaged in any commercial business, or in the carriage of either freight or passengers; they are pleasure boats exclusively. The committee has not for some six or seven years past, to my knowledge, reported any bill changing the name of any vessel which was engaged in the commerce of the country, or in the carriage of freight or passengers, and so long as I am on that committee they will never do so with my consent, for reasons which I need not speak of now in detail. It was because of that action of the committee, which has been sustained over and over again by the House, and which I hope will be again upon the facts being stated to them, that I said to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PRUYN] what I did in regard to the vessel of which he speaks. The committee have been entirely consistent in their action.

Mr. PRUYN. I desire to say simply that pleasure boats have the advantage over the regular commerce of the country.

Mr. ELIOT. I now call the previous question.

Mr. PRUYN. I have no objection to the bill.

Mr. MAYNARD. What reason is there for encumbering the statute-books of the country with such legislation as this, if there is any reason for it?

Mr. ELIOT. The only reason is that this is entirely a private matter. There are private reasons operating upon the minds of the gentlemen owning these boats, just as other gentlemen are interested in the names of horses, dogs, &c. Now, though it may somewhat cumber the statute-books of the country, yet the committee have been very careful in these matters. I believe this is but the fourth or fifth case within the last five or six years that the committee has reported.

Mr. MAYNARD. I think we had better allow people to name their own private horses, dogs, and boats as they please.

Mr. PIKE. They cannot rename them after having done so once.

Mr. MAYNARD. Let them name them aright in the first place.

The previous question was seconded and the main question was ordered.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COLLECTION DISTRICTS IN MICHIGAN.

Mr. ELIOT, from the Committee on Commerce, also reported back, with amendments, House bill No. 198, to reestablish the boundaries of the collection districts of Michigan and Michilimackinac, and to change the names of the collection districts of Michilimackinac and Port Huron, with a recommendation that the same do pass.

The bill was read at length. The first section provides that the collection district of Michigan shall be extended so as to embrace all the territory and waters of the State of Michigan lying west of the principal meridian, and south of the latitudinal line dividing township No. 43 from township No. 44, north of the base line of said State, including the island of Bois Blanc.

The second section provides that the collection district of Michilimackinac shall hereafter be called the district of Superior, and shall embrace all that part of the upper peninsula of the State of Michigan lying east of the principal meridian; all the islands in and bordering upon the Saint Marie river; and all that part of the State of Michigan lying west of the principal meridian and north of the latitudinal line dividing township No. 43 from township No. 44, north of the base line of the said State, together with all the islands, waters, and shores of Lake Superior and the adjacent territory unto the head-waters of all the rivers and streams tributary thereto, and within the jurisdiction of the United States.

The third section provides that the collection district of Port Huron, in the State of Michigan, shall hereafter be called the district of Huron.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

First amendment:

After the word "State," in the eighth line of the first section, add "including the territory bordering Green bay;" so as to make the section read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the collection district of Michigan shall be extended so as to embrace all the territory and waters of the State of Michigan lying west of the principal meridian, and south of the latitudinal line dividing township No. 43 from township No. 44, north of the base line of said State, excluding the territory bordering Green bay, and including the island of Bois Blanc.

The amendment was adopted.

Second amendment:

After the word "State," in the ninth line of the second section, insert "including the territory bordering Green bay;" so as to make the section read as follows:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the collection district of Michilimackinac shall hereafter be called the district of Superior, and shall embrace all that part of the upper peninsula of the State of Michigan lying east of the principal meridian; all the islands in and bordering upon the Saint Marie river; and all that part of the State of Michigan lying west of the principal meridian, and north of the latitudinal line dividing township No. 43 from township No. 44, north of the baseline of the said State, including the territory bordering Green bay, together with all the islands, waters, and shores of Lake Superior and the adjacent territory unto the head-waters of all the rivers and streams tributary thereto, and within the jurisdiction of the United States.

The amendment was adopted.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE. I would like to propound a question to the chairman of the committee. Does this bill change the boundaries of the districts as created by the law passed two or three years since?

Mr. ELIOT. It changes the boundaries in this respect: that it takes from one district and puts upon another. If the gentleman desires special information upon this point I refer him to his colleague, [Mr. FERRY.]

Mr. FERRY. Mr. Speaker, there was a misapprehension of existing laws when the Huron district was organized, as well as the district of Michigan. By the terms of that statute all the territory east of the principal meridian was included in the district of Huron, by which that district extends into the upper peninsula, as there is Michigan territory east of the meridian north of the straits, and, in fact, takes in the port of entry of the district of Michilimackinac, thus leaving that district without its port of entry and transferring it to the district of Port Huron. The object of this bill is to place that port of entry where it properly belongs, back into the district of Michilimackinac, now proposed by the pending bill to be named Superior, and not changing the boundaries of the Port Huron district, except in that regard. So that south of the upper Peninsula the boundaries of the district of Huron are in no way affected by the proposed bill and amendments. I will also state, with regard to the district of Michigan, that by the same misapprehension the boundaries of Michigan were not fixed by the statute of 1866, as was intended. This bill is designed to correct that error by extending this district west of the principal meridian to the latitudinal line dividing townships forty-three and forty-four north, so as to cover all the territory of Michigan bordering Lake Michigan, and also to change the name of Michilimackinac district into Superior, and that of Port Huron to Huron, to correspond with the name of the other district—Michigan; so that each shall more appropriately be designated by names corresponding with the lakes they border.

Mr. ELIOT. I will only say that the provisions of the bill receive the concurrence of the Treasury Department.

The bill was passed.

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

PROMOTION OF AMERICAN COMMERCE.

Mr. ELIOT. I am authorized by the Committee on Commerce to report back a bill (H. R. No. 929) to promote American commerce, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The Clerk read the substitute, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section four of an act entitled "An act amendatory of certain acts imposing duties upon foreign importations," approved March 3, 1865, and section fifteen of an act entitled "An act increasing temporarily the duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved July 14, 1862, be, and the same are hereby, amended so that the tonnage tax therein imposed shall be collected only from vessels arriving from foreign ports.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That a drawback equal to the duties paid be allowed to shipbuilders on lumber cordage, iron, copper, chains, and anchors actually used and employed by them in the building and rigging of any ship, steamer, or other vessel built within the limits of the United States; the amount of drawback in all cases to be ascertained and paid in such manner and under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That five per cent. on the amount of all drawbacks so allowed shall be retained for the use of the United States by the collectors paying such drawbacks respectively.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the fifth section of an act entitled "An act concerning the registering and recording of ships or vessels," approved December 31, 1792, is hereby repealed.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That hereafter boats or other vessels of the United States less than twenty tons burden shall not be enrolled, and no certificate of registry shall be required of them. Such boats or vessels shall be licensed, and shall, in every other respect, be liable to the rules and regulations and penalties now in force relating to registered and enrolled vessels.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the provisions of the act entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue registers to vessels in certain cases," approved December 23, 1852, are hereby extended to vessels built within the United States, provided the same were not transferred during the rebellion to foreign owners.

Mr. ELIOT. I call for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The substitute will be regarded as adopted; and the question will be on the engrossment and third reading.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. Is it the intention that the bill shall pass without explanation?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I wish to say that I do not give my assent to this bill.

Mr. CHANLER. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts how far this interferes with the former law in regard to licensing vessels under twenty tons; whether that will remain the established law, or is this an innovation of the law?

Mr. ELIOT. It alters no further the existing law than as is contained in the provisions of section four, that vessels less than twenty tons shall not be enrolled. It does not alter the provision in regard to licenses.

Mr. CHANLER. They are now enrolled.

Mr. ELIOT. They are now enrolled. This requires they need not be enrolled if less than twenty tons. No certificate of registry is required, but in regard to the charge for license and in all other respects the laws are left as now in force.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the gentleman in charge of this bill whether he proposes to pass a measure of this importance now?

Mr. ELIOT. I want to do it now.

Mr. ALLISON. I want some little time to examine the bill and make some remarks on it. It is a most extraordinary bill to come from the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ELIOT. This bill comes rightfully from the Committee on Commerce, although it does not come with the authority of the majority of the committee. I will state the manner in which it comes here. I have no objection to discussion, for this is an important bill; the most important bill reported from the Committee on Commerce; the most important bill which will be reported in promotion of the true commercial interests of this country. I do not desire the House should be taken by surprise; but I do expect to satisfy members on the floor of this House that this bill is rightfully here and rightfully ought to be passed. Whether I am compelled to do that in the short morning hour, or the House will assign the time when I can be heard on the bill and when the gentleman from Iowa can make such statements as he desires, I am myself indifferent. If the gentleman from Iowa desires to discuss it I have no objection to its being postponed until—

The SPEAKER. Before the discussion of the question of postponement the Chair will state that if there be an ordinary postponement it might not be reached this session.

Mr. ELIOT. I was going to move that it be made a special order.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I rise to a point of order. I understood the gentleman to say that the Committee on Commerce have not instructed him to report this bill, but that, on the contrary, they have not instructed him to report it.

Mr. ELIOT. The gentleman's understanding is inaccurate, which is rarely the case. I will state how the bill is here.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. My point is that if the gentleman says he is not instructed by the committee to report the bill it is not now before the House.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman makes that point the Chair must submit it to the House. Where objection is made to the reception of a bill the question must be submitted to the House.

Mr. ELIOT. The fact is that the Committee on Commerce have permitted me to report the bill to the House, not intending by this report to commit themselves to the support of the bill. It is brought to the attention of the House as a great many other bills have. It has not had the committee's sanction except so far that I should report it. I hope and expect the chairman will sustain the bill, although he has not yet given his assent to it. But I am here with the united authority of the committee to report the bill and bring it before the House for their action. That is the way it stands.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks, upon that statement, that the bill is properly before the House. The gentleman has authority to report it.

Mr. MAYNARD. I do not understand him to say he reported it from the committee, but for himself.

Mr. ELIOT. No, sir.

Mr. BLAINE. The committee authorized him to report it.

The SPEAKER. The committee can authorize a bill to be reported in two different ways. It can be simply reported to the House, or it can be reported with a recommendation that it do pass. This is reported by the committee.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I have no doubt of the truth of whatever statement my colleague on the committee makes, although I have no recollection of ever having agreed to the reporting of this bill. I do not know but that I gave my consent that it should be reported with a distinct understanding that I should not support it.

Mr. BLAINE. You are not bound by it.

The SPEAKER. That is allowable under parliamentary law.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. The gentleman says the committee authorized him to report the bill to the House, but not with a recommendation that it do pass. I raise the point of order that that is a negative recommendation, and unless there is an affirmative one—and the gentleman informs the House there is not an affirmative recommendation—it is not properly before the House.

The SPEAKER. That is the recollection of the Chair when the gentleman reported the bill; but although a committee should report a bill recommending that it do not pass, the House might still pass the bill if it saw fit. The gentleman from Massachusetts has authority to report the bill.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I do not know but I may vote for the bill, but it is a very important one, and should not be put through under the previous question without allowing any debate.

Mr. ELIOT. Of course, if my friend had asked no explanation, the previous question would have been seconded; but if he asks an explanation I am not only bound to make it, but most desirous that he should have it at length.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. The gentleman was going to have it passed without discussion.

Mr. ELIOT. Of course, if no discussion is wanted I desire to have it acted upon. We have passed one or two important bills where no discussion was asked. Perhaps some gentlemen will be surprised when they come to examine those bills to find that they overlooked them.

Mr. PILE. I desire to make a suggestion that this had better be printed with the substitute and made a special order. I regard it as a very important bill, and I am heartily in favor of it. Whatever will promote the efficiency and increase the commerce of the United States ought certainly to have the support of this House; and unless we have something to revive our declining and dying commerce we shall soon have no foreign commerce at all.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to give way and allow me to move that the bill be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. ELIOT. No, sir; I will not.

Mr. SCOFIELD. That committee has authority to report at any time.

Mr. ELIOT. I decline.

Mr. SCOFIELD. As it is a free-trade bill it strikes me it ought to go before that committee.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I make the point of order that this bill provides for the refunding of duties, which is a subject that properly belongs to the Committee of Ways and Means. It provides that drawbacks shall be allowed on duties, and that is a subject that belongs to the Committee of Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. It belongs to the Committee on Commerce if the House refers it to that committee.

Mr. PIKE. This very bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order on the ground that the House has a right to refer any bill to any committee it thinks has proper charge of the subject. This bill was referred on the 16th of March to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ELIOT. Now I propose that the bill be postponed till—

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the gentleman to withdraw—

The SPEAKER. The morning hour will expire in two minutes.

Mr. ELIOT. I ask unanimous consent to move to postpone the further consideration of the bill till the second Wednesday in June next after the morning hour, and make it the special order from day to day until disposed of, and that it be printed.

Mr. PIKE. I object.

Mr. ELIOT. Well, if the gentleman from Maine takes the responsibility of objecting—

Mr. PIKE. The bill is now before the House for action, and it will go over until the morning hour to-morrow.

Mr. ELIOT. The bill has not been printed as it now stands. There are two sections of the bill which were not contained in the bill as it was referred to the committee. I do not feel disposed after what has been said to press a bill of this importance through the House until the House have had a fair opportunity to examine and discuss it. I make the proposition for postponement again, and I hope the gentleman from Maine will not object.

Mr. PIKE. The important sections of the bill have been printed, and members will find them in House bill printer's number 310. The other two sections added by the committee are of very slight importance, indeed, and for one I should be perfectly willing to have them stricken out. Mean time the bill will go over until to-morrow, and it can be printed to-night, so that gentlemen may examine it.

Mr. ELIOT. The gentleman may have his own views about the importance of portions of the bill. Perhaps I should differ with him. At any rate I make the proposition, and I hope the gentleman will not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HARDING. I object.

Mr. ELIOT. Then I must go on and discuss the bill now. How much is there left of the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. One minute.

Mr. ELIOT. It is hardly worth while to commence its discussion now. I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARDING] will withdraw his objection.

Mr. HARDING. I cannot consent that other business shall be obstructed for the purpose of exempting articles of import from duty.

Mr. ELIOT. It is no exemption. I simply desire to enable the House to transact other public business.

Mr. HARDING. I want to transact other business, and never to transact business of this kind.

Mr. ELIOT. I think the gentleman speaks without sufficient knowledge. The result of his objection will be that the bill will come up to-morrow.

Mr. HARDING. Well, I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. PIKE. What is it?

The SPEAKER. That the bill be assigned as a special order for the second Wednesday in June.

Mr. PIKE. I object to that.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired, and the bill goes over until the next morning hour. If there is no objection, the bill will be ordered to be printed.

There was no objection, and the order was made.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. No. 786) declaring St. George Boothbay, in the State of Maine, and San Antonio, Texas, ports of entry, and authorizing the establishment of bonded warehouses at Bucksport and Vinalhaven, in the State of Maine, with amendments, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 216) to amend an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central Pacific railroad, in California, to Portland, in Oregon;" and a bill (S. No. 183) for the relief of William H. Harman; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BLAINE in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of House bill No. 1073, making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1869.

The CHAIRMAN. The first reading of the bill has been dispensed with, and the House yesterday ordered that all general debate on the bill be limited to thirty minutes.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I was instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report the bill which is now under consideration. It has been prepared by the committee with great labor, which the extreme complication of the bill rendered necessary. The committee labored under very great embarrassments. They could only deal with the appropriations under existing laws; and while they were convinced that many of these appropriations ought not to be made, so far as the propriety of the action of the Government is concerned, yet being required by law they felt themselves constrained to report the appropriations.

I think I speak the unanimous opinion of the committee when I say that the whole system of Indian affairs, as at present administered, is wrong in principle, unjust to the Indian, and a source of the very greatest corruption and fraud by the agents of the Government. At the present day our manner of dealing with the Indian tribes has not advanced upon that established by William Penn. We treat with them as with independent nations, sovereign powers, allowing them all the rights and privileges of the first Powers of Europe, and using all the forms with which we treat with those Powers. It is true that William Penn made a treaty with the Indians. But he made a treaty, not as between Great Britain and an Indian tribe, but between an expedition of colonists and powerful tribes of Indians. We now keep up the same system, except that this great nation of ours makes solemn treaties with tribes that have no written language, and who cannot read the treaties which it is supposed their chiefs signed with their marks. But those treaties bear upon their face the evidence that they are made in the interest of the officers and employes of the United States, and not in the interest of the Indians.

Now, to give the Committee of the Whole an illustration of how this is done, I have only to refer to the whole class of treaties, in which it is stipulated that there shall be wagoners, blacksmiths, tinsmiths, armors, carpenters, mill-wrights, engineers, &c., employed by the Indians. It may be said that that is in favor of the Indians. But what do you think of a provision in a treaty between two great nations, that the houses of these employes shall be kept in repair and that their furniture shall be kept up? Let me illustrate; suppose a treaty was made with Great Britain in which the United States agreed that United States officers should do something, and you expect that Great Britain would put a provision in the treaty that the houses of the employes of the United States should be kept in repair and that their furniture should be kept up.

Now, that shows clearly that these treaties with the Indians are made by the agents of the United States in favor of the employes of the United States. It evidences to any man who will investigate the subject that the whole system of dealing with the Indians is one of fraud and wrong. John Randolph once said, many years ago, in his caustic manner, that to be an Indian agent would corrupt the angel Gabriel. I do not think there has been any improvement since that time, and until Congress shall adopt some method of bringing the Indian tribes into the condition either of wards of the nation or of citizens of the soil with qualified rights, so long our whole Indian system must continue one of wrong, of fraud, and of corruption.

Why, sir, there are estimates for thousands of dollars' worth of goods to be given to these Indians under treaty stipulations; and there are estimates of as many dollars to carry these goods to the Indians as the goods themselves are worth. It is a well-ascertained fact before the committee from many sources, that not more than one half, sometimes, perhaps, not one quarter are ever sent to or received by the Indians. There have been appropriations made year after year for goods for Indians; and those appropriations have been exhausted when the Indians themselves testify that in some cases they have received nothing for years, and in other cases very little. Contracts have been made for goods to be delivered at prices less than the goods can be purchased for in St. Louis. It may be asked how can that be done? It may be done, and it is done, because not one half of the goods are ever delivered to or received by the Indians, but all of them are always paid for. There has been one instance come to the knowledge of the committee where large contracts of hundreds and thousands of dollars' worth of expenditures have been made for feeding the Indians; and the only voucher on which that money has been paid out has been that of the party who was appointed to acknowledge the receipt of the goods; and that party so acknowledging the receipt of the goods was, prior to the time of his appointment, and I have no doubt is now, a clerk in the house of the firm who were to deliver the goods, the delivery of which this clerk was to certify. It is not within the province of the Committee of Appropriations to deal with this matter. I have called the attention of the House to the matter only in order that they may see the difficulties under which we labor; and in the hope that there may be some legislation recommended by which the whole system can be changed.

The Indians now bear to us very much the same relation as nearly a century ago the Highlanders of Scotland bore to the kingdom of Great Britain. They were families having chiefs, and were treated by that Government in some degree as independent tribes. So long as they were so treated the Highlands of Scotland were scenes of unthrift, wrong, devastation, war, and all manner of expense to the Government. But the British ministry of that day broke up substantially the chieftain system of the highlands of Scotland; and from the hour the tribal or chieftain system was substantially broken up the highlands of Scotland, instead of being a source of weakness, a source of expense, a source of wrong and injury and devastation to the rest of the kingdom, have been a nursery of soldiers for the kingdom of Great Britain. Until we break up this tribal system in regard to our Indians; until we abolish this treaty system; until Congress refuses to appropriate any more money for treaties of this description, so long our Indian system will be a disgrace to the Government and a source of the greatest injustice to the people.

Allow me to give another illustration. Our treaties provide that the Indian girls shall be taught domestic economy. How do you suppose that provision of our treaties is carried out? Why, the Indian girls are taken by the Indian agents into their kitchens, where they do the housework; and the Government pays the Indian agents ten dollars a month for employing those girls as servants to do their housework. In that manner the treaty stipulation for teaching Indian girls domestic economy is carried out.

There is one other matter which I propose to suggest to the committee, and if it should meet the approval of the House I hope it will be appended to this bill. Almost all the fraud connected with this Indian system arises substantially out of the purchases and transportation of goods; and I suggest to the committee whether it would not be best to provide that all the purchases for the Indians shall be made by the Commissary General of the Army in open market, as purchases for the Army are made. Mr. GARFIELD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to ask the gentleman whether the committee has considered, or, if not, whether he himself has considered, the propriety of transferring the Indian Bureau entirely to the War Department, as was proposed in a bill which was once passed by this House—a bill which, if I had any encouragement, I would report from the Committee on Military Affairs and try to get passed again.

Mr. BUTLER. In answer to the question of my friend from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] I will say that I think it is the unanimous opinion of the Committee on Appropriations that the management of our Indian affairs should be transferred to the War Department. Certainly the purchase and transportation of goods for the Indian department should be effected through requisition upon the War Department. During the whole of the late war there was, I think, hardly a murmur of wrong or corruption on the part of the commissary department of the Army. Being in a situation where I was likely to have heard it if there had been any such thing, I do not know that I ever heard an intimation that in the purchase of provisions there was any substantial fraud or wrong; and as to the cost of transportation, except in the matter of providing the means, I have never heard of any substantial complaint. I think there could be saved to the Government $1,000,000 a year by requiring by law that purchases shall be made by the Commissary General in open market, under the inspection of competent officers of that department, and transportation furnished by the War Department. Already much of the transportation has to be furnished by that Department. Why, sir, if I were to believe, as I do believe, stories which have been told to me, it has been a not unfrequent thing that the cattle of friendly Indians have been stolen, turned over to a contractor, and then sold back for food, under treaties, at twenty, thirty, and fifty cents a pound, to the very Indians from whom the cattle had been stolen.

Mr. WINDOM. Will the gentleman yield to me for a few moments?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. PRUYN. I should like to have five minutes.

Mr. BUTLER. How much time have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. Fifteen minutes.

Mr. BUTLER. I will yield five minutes to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. Chairman, I am not here to defend any wrongs or frauds which may exist in the Indian department. Some two or three years ago I introduced a bill here and urged its passage which I am entirely satisfied would have prevented these wrongs and frauds; but it was voted down by the gentlemen who desired the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department.

Now, sir, what I rose for was to answer the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] in reference to the cheapness of this War Department. The entire amount appropriated in this bill by the Committee on Appropriations, as stated in the note, is $2,214,283; that is for the entire Indian service of the country. Now, sir, there are in the Territory of Arizona alone less than three regiments of soldiers, which are costing this Government today more than a million dollars each. These three regiments of soldiers alone, in Arizona, cost more to this Government than the entire appropriations for the Indian service. I make no excuse or defense for the wrongs committed in this Indian department; but when gentlemen stand upon this floor and hold up the military as so pure and so cheap I wish to state that these three regiments in Arizona are more expensive than all the Indians in the country. A gentleman in high position in that Territory told me that the people there were more afraid of the soldiers in Arizona than they were of the Indians. Half a dozen soldiers start out on a scout and capture horses which are never again heard of. He told me whenever he travels he "dodges" the soldiers, for the reason that if he has better horses than they have they will take them under the pretense that they are necessary for the purposes of the expedition. I say that it is a known fact that each regiment in that Territory costs more than one million dollars, and you appropriate for these regiments more than all the expense of the country for Indian affairs. That there is a vast amount of fraud and wrong in the Indian department I doubt not; but the gentleman who propose to turn over Indian affairs to the War Department had better take a warning by the facts in Arizona and New Mexico. I am one of those who opposed the transfer before and am still opposed to the argument which looks to it now. I say, if you want to double and treble the expenses of the Indian department, act on the suggestion just now made. I will join with the gentleman in cutting down to the utmost extent we can appropriations for Indian affairs; but I will not join with him or anybody else in the violation of treaties made with the tribes of Indians. A single violation of a treaty whereby you save $10,000 will cost you, Mr. Chairman, more than a million dollars to put down the war caused thereby. And, sir, nine tenths of the wars we have had have originated on this floor and in the Senate by reason of not complying with our agreements with the Indian tribes. The massacre in my own State, eight hundred in my own district having been killed, originated from the fact that Congress was behind hand in making appropriations, and the Indians, who waited upon their reservation for payment and thereby lost their spring hunt, were in a starving condition. The money had reached St. Paul, but they did not know it. They commenced hostilities and murdered our people. Let us keep faith with these Indians and they will keep faith with us. If we do not, we will expend from ten to twenty millions in putting down Indian wars when a few hundred thousands would carry out treaty stipulations.

Mr. PRUYN. I ask the gentleman to yield to me a few minutes.

Mr. BUTLER. I yield five minutes.

Mr. PRUYN. It is not often that I agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts, but I am very glad on this occasion to hear most of the views he enunciated in regard to our Indian policy. It has been my conviction for a long time past that an essential and fundamental change should take place in our Indian policy. We must treat the Indians as our wards, as the gentleman has said; we must treat them justly, fairly, and honestly, as the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] urges; and it is my intention at some future day, if some other disposition is not made by the House of the matter, to move to refer it to some appropriate officer of the Government or to some appropriate committee of the House to devise and report to this Congress at its next session some plan for this purpose. I think it is high time we set about it earnestly and thoroughly. Just before this debate took place this matter was the subject of conversation among several gentlemen on this side of the House, in my neighborhood, in which essentially this view was taken. Now, sir, if no proper amendment can be made to this bill which looks in the direction of some essential and thorough change in regard to the matter, I trust it will be brought about in some other way; that hereafter our good faith with the Indians may be better maintained than it has been heretofore, and that some policy more effective and more beneficial to the Indians will be adopted by this Government.

Mr. WINDOM. If the gentleman will allow me, a policy has been suggested and will probably be presented hereafter to put all the Indians in two reservations, one at the North and the other at the South, destroying their tribal relations and putting them under the control of the Government. The peace commission which was recently appointed have recommended such a policy, and I doubt not it will be eventually adopted, if it is found practicable.

Mr. PRUYN. It is suggested from another quarter that the result might resemble that of the Kilkenny cats if you try to force relations of this kind upon tribes that do not agree with each other in their modes of life. I doubt very much whether you could get along in that way. Still, that is a subject to be discussed hereafter.

Mr. WINDOM. It is very difficult to suggest any plan that is not liable to objection.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I trust none of the House will understand me as asking that we shall break faith with the Indians by not appropriating money where we have made treaties with them. But I shall ask at some time or other that we abolish the whole treaty system, as well in the present as in the past, and bring all of them within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States, under the control of this Government and amenable to our laws, and none other. I trust at some time Congress will take this subject in hand and abolish this idea of treaties between a hundred or a hundred and fifty unclothed, untaught, uncivilized, incoherent families. Putting them by such treaties upon the same ground as we do Russia or Great Britain, treaties which they do not understand, which they cannot comprehend, which are made under the influence of whisky administered by employes, who hope to profit thereby, and treaties, the non-fulfillment of which, either by accident or by design, cause the murders and devastation of which my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, [Mr. WINDOM,] has brought to our notice. But for the present we must deal with the system as it is, and we have endeavored in this appropriation bill to do so, cutting off everything that we could that was not provided for by treaty and endeavoring to carry out treaties wherever they were made.

Now, sir, I have said nothing about the cheapness of the War Department. I think they are a very expensive Department, but I think that they have an element of honesty in carrying out their operations.

Mr. WINDOM. I desire to say that I have been informed that in Arizona the Indians sell their corn for one cent a pound, while the commissary department buys it at twelve cents per pound.

Mr. BUTLER. Very possibly. I do not say that all men in the War Department are honest, but I do not think that all the men are dishonest. I think if the goods were purchased here and were transported there by the War Department more of them would get there; and it could be done with more promptness, more efficiency, and certainly with no greater expense than it is done now.

[Here the hammer fell, the thirty minutes allowed for general debate having expired.]

The Clerk then proceeded to read the bill by paragraphs for amendment.

Mr. CHANLER. Is further debate in order?

The CHAIRMAN. Five minutes' debate on amendments is in order.

Mr. CHANLER. I understand from the general debate which preceded the reading of the bill by clauses that the object is to transfer this Indian Bureau to the military Department of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. No debate is in order except upon amendments.

Mr. CHANLER. Very well; then I move to strike out the words "for current and contingent expenses of the Indian department."

The CHAIRMAN. That part of the bill has been passed.

Mr. CHANLER. I move, then, to strike out the following clause:

Superintendents of Indian affairs:
Three superintendents for the tribes east of the Rocky mountains; one for Oregon; one for Washington Territory; one for the Territory of New Mexico; one for the Territory of Utah; one for California.

It is the same thing. The object is to discuss the bill as it stands. The question is whether the superintendents of Indian affairs shall stand in this bill or not.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment is in order. The gentleman from New York will understand the Chair. General debate was limited by the House to thirty minutes, which have expired. The gentleman can speak five minutes in support of his amendment.

Mr. CHANLER. I am speaking on striking out "superintendents of Indian affairs." I will say this with regard to the treatment of the Indians, that if the angel Gabriel was liable to corruption, it is a very dangerous position to put an officer of the Army in. There are a great many superintendents of Indian affairs who probably never did know and never will know the angel Gabriel, although they may have fulfilled all their duties toward the Indians.

But, sir, the object of this bill is to provide for a wise and just administration of our affairs with the Indians, and not for the purpose of transferring from one set of men to another the patronage of this department. In order to do justice to the Indians we shall have to detail this work in accordance with the characteristics of the different tribes, and any allusion to the Scottish nation has as little parallel with the Indian tribes as if you were to quote the nations of all Europe under the head of Europe. We should treat each Indian tribe just in accordance with established treaties. There is as great a diversity among the different tribes of Indians on this continent as there is between the different nations of Europe. Some live in houses, some live in cities, some engage in manufactures, and are as capable of carrying on their own government as a great many peoples who do carry on independent Governments on the face of the earth. And to sweep them all into one category, in order to transfer the patronage of this department, in the name of protecting the Indians, to the military Department—in other words, giving them military governments instead of civil governments—is a fundamental change in the policy of our Government toward the Indians which ought to be discussed more broadly than could be done in the thirty minutes allowed for general debate upon this bill. If the policy is to strike at the whole system of superintendents of Indian affairs, then the whole subject should be referred and discussed. It is not a mere matter of dollars and cents. It is a question of justice to distinct peoples, as distinct in their national organizations as the people who now govern this country are distinct from the people from whom they took the soil which we now govern.

The past policy of the Government has been to adopt the Indian as a ward. I believe that is no new term in the administration of our Indian affairs. I believe that has been the past policy of this Government, and to say that they shall be hereafter the wards of the Government is merely to say that we intend to continue the policy which has been pursued from the beginning with regard to the Indians.

It is, sir, impossible to meet and discuss this question in all its branches upon the mere matter of superintendents of Indian affairs. There should be left in the hands of the Executive—a civil officer of the Government—as there is now full power, and there should be full responsibility upon him with regard to the administration of Indian affairs. A transfer of it to the military Department is in direct antagonism to the idea that these people are ever to be brought into civilization. It means extermination if it means anything. It means that death and destruction are to be dealt out to the Indians by the commanders of the different posts under military law, and that the shield of the civil law is to be removed from these semi-barbarians. Sir, I look upon it as a cruel policy, unless it is justified by a direct attack of the Indians upon ourselves, and unless that attack by the Indians on white men is unjustifiable. But the history of this country proves that the white man has been the aggressor. From the moment he first put his foot upon the soil he has been attacking and driving the Indian from his home. To give the Indian any home in this country you must leave in him the right and title to the land, and endeavor to civilize him upon the spot. But drive him from his home and you make him a vagabond. Array the armies of this country against him and you make him a pariah and a bandit.

Whatever the policy of the country is to be, I hope the whole system of our Government, so far as the Indians are concerned, will be revised, and their treatment based not upon the idea of the Indians constituting one nation, but distinct nationalities, having peculiar customs dear to themselves.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CHANLER. I withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Superintendents of Indian affairs:
Three superintendents for the tribes east of the Rocky mountains; one for Oregon; one for Washington Territory; one for the Territory of New Mexico; one for the Territory of Utah; one for California.

Mr. WINDOM. I move to amend the paragraph just read by inserting after the words "one for California" the words "one for Nevada, and one for Arizona." I have been requested by the Department of the Interior to present a large number of amendments to this bill, but a small portion of which I shall offer. Those amendments have not been considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs. But I shall present some on my own responsibility, and I think the sense of the House should be tested upon this as one of them.

I would ask the gentlemen of the Committee on Appropriations why they have omitted an appropriation for superintendents for Nevada and Arizona and have made one for Washington Territory? This bill makes appropriations for the Indians of both Nevada and Arizona, and it seems to me there should be some authorized agent of the Government there to make the payments of the money which the bill itself proposes shall be given to the Indians. I therefore move that the superintendents be continued in office and paid in Arizona and Nevada. There are already superintendents there, and I know of no reason why they should not be continued.

Mr. BUTLER. In answer to the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM,] I will say that the Committee on Appropriations examined the law, and where they found a provision of law requiring a superintendent, in every case, unless there has been an omission by accident, the committee have recommended an appropriation for that purpose. But where the only foundation for an Indian agency or an Indian superintendency has been the fact that in some former appropriation bill there had been an appropriation for one, we assumed that that was temporary only, and we struck it out.

Mr. WINDOM. How is the money to be applied? Who is to pay it out if there is no agent for the purpose?

Mr. BUTLER. There are agents. But it will be observed that Oregon, Washington, California, Utah, and New Mexico are so large in territorial extent, and the tribes of Indians are so scattered, that there seems to be a necessity for superintendents. But we thought Indian agents could do all that was necessary in well organized Territories, as they do in Kansas and Minnesota.

Mr. WINDOM. You make no appropriations for Indian agents in these Territories.

Mr. BUTLER. We make appropriations for agents for tribes east of the Rocky mountains. The theory upon which we have gone is this: that wherever we were required by law to appropriate we have appropriated; where ever we could get rid of an appropriation in any way we have not made it; when we could cut down we did; when we could not we did not.

Mr. WINDOM. I have no feeling in this matter; I only present it to the Committee of the Whole for its action.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. My point of order is that these agencies are not authorized by law; this amendment is therefore independent legislation, and not in order to an appropriation bill.

Mr. WINDOM. I think the point of order is made too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would overrule the point of order, even if made in time. But it is made too late.

The question was upon the amendment of Mr. WINDOM; and being taken, it was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following:

Indian agents:
One for the tribes in Oregon; four for the tribes in New Mexico; one additional for Indians in New Mexico; one for the tribes in New Mexico; one for the tribes in Utah; one additional for the Indians in Utah; one for the tribes in the Territory of Utah, (and the pay of the three agents in Utah shall hereafter be $1,000 each per annum;) eleven for the tribes east of the Rocky mountains; two for the tribes east of the Rocky mountains, namely, Sioux and Seminoles, the Omaha, Kickapoo, Kansas, and Neosho agencies; three for the tribes east of the Rocky mountains; one for the Indians in the State of New York; one for the Delaware Indians; one for Green Bay, Wisconsin; one for the tribes in Washington Territory; one for the Wichitas and neighboring tribes west of the Choctaws and Chickasaws; one for the tribes east of the Rocky mountains; one for the Indians in the Territory of New Mexico; one for the Ponca tribe; one for the Pawnees; one for the Yankton Sioux; three for the tribes in the Territory of Washington; one for the Grand River and Uintah bands of Indians in the Territory of Colorado; two for the upper Missouri and the country adjacent thereto; one for the Ottawas, Chippewas of Swan creek and Black river, and Christian Indians in Kansas; four agents for the State of California; one for the Kiowa, Apache, and Comanche Indians; one for the Sisseton and Warpeton bands of Dakota or Sioux Indians; one for the bands of Sac and Foxes of the Mississippi, now in Tama county, Iowa.

Mr. PAINE. I move to amend by striking out in the paragraph just read the words "eleven for the tribes east of the Rocky mountains." I make this motion for the purpose of ascertaining from the gentleman who reports this bill how it happens that so many provisions are reported for Indian agents east of the Rocky mountains. In line twenty-four the bill provides for eleven for the tribes east of the Rocky mountains; then in lines twenty-four and twenty-five, two for the tribes east of the Rocky mountains; in lines twenty-five and twenty-six, four for the tribes east of the Rocky mountains; in line twenty-eight, three for the tribes east of the Rocky mountains; in line thirty-three, one for the tribes east of the Rocky mountains. I am at a loss to understand why such language is used in this paragraph, and why there is no provision for agents west of the Rocky Mountains. If there is really any occasion for five different provisions for agents for tribes east of the Rocky mountains, I should be glad to have the gentleman from Massachusetts explain it.

Mr. BUTLER. I will state the reason why this phraseology was adopted by the committee. These several clauses correspond with the several provisions of law establishing these agencies and follow the language of the law. We have sought to make each particular appropriation correspond with the specific provision authorizing it. Therefore we have said, "eleven for the tribes east of the Rocky mountains." The law establishing that agency will be found in the ninth volume of the Statutes-at-Large, page 586. Each of these clauses corresponds with some special enactment. In line twenty-five we have inserted the clause, "for the Indians east of the Rocky mountains, namely, Sioux and Seminoles, the Omaha, Kickapoo, Kansas, and Neosho agencies." There we cut down the number, because it was unfixed in the estimates. When we provide for the agencies west of the Rocky mountains it will be found that the several tribes are named.

From this explanation the gentleman will, I think, understand why this very cumbersome and apparently illogical language is used. It is that the appropriate salaries may be affixed to each of these agencies. The salaries for the different agencies differ in some cases. By the phraseology adopted we avoid confusion and difficulty.

Mr. MAYNARD. Would it not have been better to refer to the statute under which each appropriation is made, saying, for instance, "eleven for tribes east of the Rocky mountains, as per such a section of such a statute?"

Mr. BUTLER. It might have been convenient, except that it would lumber the statute-book uselessly. If the gentleman will look at the book of estimates, he will find the exact statute specified in each case. For instance, the provision for "eleven for tribes east of the Rocky mountains" is in pursuance of a section of the law to be found on page 586, volume nine, of Statutes-at-Large; the clause providing for "two for tribes east of the Rocky mountains" is in accordance with a provision on page 332, volume ten, Statutes-at-Large. Six for the Indians east of the Rocky mountains, (Statutes-at-Large, vol. 9, p. 586, sec. 4,) and so on, and so on. By this designation it is precisely as accurate, though, I agree, not as elegant.

Mr. PAINE. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I move to strike out these words on page 2, lines nineteen and twenty:

Four for the tribes in New Mexico; one for the tribes in New Mexico.

Mr. Chairman, it will be seen that the section reads as follows:

Indian agents:

One for the tribes in Oregon; four for the tribes in New Mexico; one additional for Indians in New Mexico; one for the tribes in New Mexico.

We have "four for the tribes in New Mexico," and immediately following it "one for the tribes in New Mexico." If there are five why draw it out in this lengthened form; why not say "five for the tribes in New Mexico at once?" I cannot comprehend it. The object, or at least the effect, is to deceive the House.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I am glad my friend from Ohio has called the attention of the House to this. In volume nine Statutes-at-Large, page 587, section five, four Indian agents are provided for the tribes in New Mexico, passed February 27, 1851. Their salary was fixed at $1,550. Then, again, the Statutes-at-Large, volume eleven, page 169, section one, March 3, 1857, provides "one additional for Indians in New Mexico," at $1,500 per annum. If I put in five, which should have the $1,500 and which the $1,550? I have put them, therefore, to conform to the various statutes, so that each set of Indian agents may get their appropriate salaries. The one additional for the Indians in New Mexico is at the rate of $1,500. If gentlemen will take the "estimates" and follow the bill, they will then know why we have had to use this cumbersome language. I agree that it is not the best language to use. It is not as neat and as compact as I hope we could use in drawing a bill, but it is the best we could do with the materials we have. The laws are so arranged, and to meet these laws we have to make the appropriations in this form.

The amendment of Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, was disagreed to.

Mr. CAVANAUGH. I desire to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts who reported this bill as to the salaries of the various Indian agents.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman an amendment to offer?

Mr. CAVANAUGH. I will offer it before I get through. I find in line twenty-three it is provided that the pay of the three agents in Utah shall hereafter be $1,000 per annum. Now, with the permission of the committee, I desire to submit a question to the gentleman who reported this bill. He quoted the language of John Randolph relative to the scoundrelism of Indian agents. His remarks were true for the simple reason that the Indian agents and other employes on the frontier do not receive sufficient compensation to make them honest. I ask any gentleman upon the floor of this House who has ever lived upon the frontier whether he thinks any Indian agent, or any other agent, in the discharge of official duty, can live on $1,500 per annum? I move, therefore, Mr. Chairman, in line twenty-three to strike out "one" and insert "three," so it will read $3,000 per annum; and also to add that this provision shall apply to the agents of the several Indian tribes.

Mr. BUTLER. I raise the point of order that this is new legislation, and is not in order to this bill.

Mr. PILE. These salaries are fixed by law, and they cannot be changed in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The "Digest" says it is in order to move such an amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WINDOM. In line eighteen I move to strike out "one" and insert "three," so it will provide three Indian agents for the tribes in Oregon; and I do it for the purpose of stating the facts with reference to that State. There are in the State of Oregon four agencies and one sub-agency. I do not see how it is possible that these Indians scattered over so large a Territory can be properly attended to by only one agent. There are a large number of Indians in Oregon, and to fairly and honestly make distribution there must be a larger force. Hitherto there have been three in the State of Oregon. I do not know why the committee have decided to strike out three and insert one. It seems to me utterly impossible that the duties should be performed by one agent. I therefore move to insert three.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, the committee in making the appropriation struck out two for Oregon for this reason: we found we were not obliged to have them by existing law, as we understood the law, and we thought that if three Indian agents could do the business for those tribes in Oregon in 1850, eighteen years ago, before the Territory contained hardly any white men, two could do the business now. Therefore we have provided one agent and one sub-agent, and as a measure of economy $3,000 were all we thought we ought to recommend.

Mr. HIGBY. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. Are there not so many reservations in that State, separate and apart, with Indians on each one of them?

Mr. BUTLER. Since this provision was made in 1850, I can say speaking from memory, though this subject has been out of my mind for a short time past, that one third of the reservations have been broken up in Oregon—certainly one fourth.

Mr. WINDOM. I do not know what have been broken up. I know there are four reservations there now. These Indians are very much scattered. I make this amendment as a matter of economy, because I know money will be saved by it.

Mr. BUTLER. We cannot save or lose any more money, because the agents will spend all we appropriate anyhow.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. There is an amendment which should be made in consonance with the theory upon which the committee have acted. In looking back, in lines twenty-two and twenty-three, it will be observed that the words included in the parentheses are as follows:

And the pay of the three agents in Utah shall hereafter be $1,000 each per annum.

Upon looking back at the law referred to we found the old law allowed $1,000 per annum. We found the estimate made for $1,500 per annum, and we could find no law for it; therefore we cut the salaries down to $1,000. Since that time I found tacked to the end of an appropriation bill (Statutes-at-Large, vol. 12, 793) a law which gives these agents $1,500 per annum. That statute was not referred to in the estimates by the Department, and that led to the error on the part of the committee. Therefore I think I shall have to move to amend by striking out the words within the parentheses.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I move to amend the section by adding at the end the following proviso:

Provided, That it shall be the duty of the President to dispense with the services of such Indian agents herein mentioned as may be practicable, and where it is practicable he shall require the same person to perform the duties of two agencies for one salary.

Mr. WINDOM. I rise to a point of order. This proposes new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I hope the gentleman will allow me to be heard.

Mr. WINDOM. The gentleman raises points of order very freely himself, but I will withdraw it.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I hope the gentleman from Minnesota and the gentleman from Massachusetts and other members of the committee will see the propriety of this proviso. It must be apparent that if it be practicable to dispense with the services of any of these Indian agents we ought to do so, and if it be possible for one person to perform the duties of two in the same service it should be done. I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts to say that this bill makes appropriation for more agents than are necessary. We all understand how the number of these officers is increased from time to time while the Indians are dwindling away and the necessity for the same number of agents does not exist now that did years ago. This amendment only proposes to place in the hands of the President power to dispense with such agents as he may deem practicable. I am not able to specify particular cases in which agents may be dispensed with, but I think that this provision will strike the common sense of the House at once as so manifestly just that there will be no objection to it, and I hope it will be unanimously agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada. I move to insert at the end of line forty-five the words "one for the Indians in the State of Nevada."

Mr. Chairman, the State of Nevada is larger than the State of Oregon, and it is more than half as large as the State of California, which has four Indian agents and one Indian superintendent. We have had a superintendent and we have had agents there, and although I have not the law at hand I am quite certain that the Committee on Appropriations must have overlooked some provisions of law, as they make no provision whatever for the Indians of Nevada.

Now, I care very little whether this amendment is adopted or not. I happen to be one of the "sanguinary" border men, and if the Congress of the United States will appropriate money enough for the military forces out our way we care very little for Indian agents and superintendents. I offer the amendment for the benefit of those people who wish to have agents to look out for the Indians. Unless you mean to leave the Indians of Nevada entirely at the mercy of our population, you had better have some one authorized to look out for them there. I have no doubt the law does provide for it. For our population, for our size, we have more Indians relatively than they have in California. I suggest this amendment simply for the benefit of those people who are so careful of the interests of the Indians.

Mr. BUTLER. If the gentleman from Nevada will look at the bill he will find that we provide for a large number of agents for Indians east of the Rocky mountains, and a large number for Indians west.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada. Where are they?

Mr. BUTLER. If you look you will find the various tribes that are provided for.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada. I would like to have the gentleman point out the tribes in Nevada that are provided for. The bill provides for a great many of the Oregon Indians, but I do not see any in Nevada at all.

Mr. BUTLER. To that I answer, first, that I do provide in this bill for every agent and sub-agent authorized by law. The gentleman will find provision for four Indian sub-agents in Oregon at an annual salary of $1,000, and two Indian sub-agents in Washington Territory, referring to the statute authorizing those agents to be appointed. If there is no provision for Nevada—which, I think, cannot be the case—the gentleman must get a law passed establishing an Indian agency there, and then the Committee on Appropriations will put in a clause appropriating for it. But this amendment is not provided for by law, and I call upon the Chair to say whether it is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. It is too late to raise the point of order on the amendment, and debate is exhausted upon it.

The question was put on the amendment; and there were—ayes 28, noes 20; no quorum voting.

Mr. BUTLER. Let the amendment be agreed to. We can have a decision on it in the House.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. I move to insert after line fifty the words "for temporary clerks to superintendents, $5,000." This amount is estimated for by the Indian Bureau. I believe that the superintendents, with the exception of two or three named, have no clerks. They have sometimes half a dozen agencies under their charge, and generally three or four. They are required by law to visit those agencies, and hence must be absent from their offices. I know of no means by which the business of their offices can be attended to during their absence. They have to send in their reports, and they need, as I am informed at the Department, clerks to attend to the business of the offices during their absence and for various purposes in connection with the offices. I think it is important that this amount should be allowed. I offer the amendment at the request of those who know more about the matter than I do, and I leave it to the House to insert it or to leave it out. I have no feeling in the matter whatever.

Mr. BUTLER. By a statute of June 19, 1860, provision was made for temporary clerks, apparently for a particular purpose, and that has gone on ever since. There is no law for these temporary clerks now; the necessity for them has long since ceased, and they ought no longer to be estimated for. I therefore raise the point of order that the amendment of the gentleman is independent legislation, establishing the office of clerk where there was none before.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is made too late.

The question was upon the amendment of Mr. WINDOM; and being taken, it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following clause:

For contingencies of the Indian department, $20,000.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I move to strike out the clause just read; and I desire to say only this: that the expenses of the Government are being swelled enormously by contingent funds, which are expended corruptly, very frequently extravagantly, and, if possible, still more frequently in a manner entirely unnecessary. Here is an appropriation of $20,000 for contingencies of the Indian department. I do not know how this money is to be expended; but I know the Departments have gone systematically to work to print costly books, to be paid out of the appropriation for contingent expenses. I do not know any reason for this appropriation, and I hope it will be stricken out.

Mr. BUTLER. I will state the facts. The estimate for contingencies was $36,500. After very careful examination of the exhibits the committee thought that the Indian department could get along with $20,000 for a contingent fund, and we therefore cut it down from $36,500 to $20,000. The Committee of the Whole can cut it down as much as they please without hurting my feelings at all.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I will withdraw the motion to strike out, and move to reduce the appropriation from $20,000 to $10,000.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

The paragraph was read, ending as follows:

And also for pay of head chief, soldier chiefs, second chief, and Pierre Gavneaux, for his services to the Arickarees, $40,000.

Mr. PAINE. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out the words "and Pierre Gavneaux, for his services to the Arickarees." I am at a loss to understand why Congress should be called upon to legislate for the purpose of settling any dispute between Pierre Gavneaux and a tribe of Indians. Why not appropriate the money to the Indians, and let them settle their own debts, if there are any?

Mr. BUTLER. I can easily explain. When this treaty was made Pierre Gavneaux undertook to act for the Arickarees, and in the treaty provision was made that he should have so much annually.

Mr. PAINE. How much?

Mr. BUTLER. Only two or three hundred dollars. That treaty was solemnly ratified, and the sum has heretofore been paid, and this is the second installment. It is but a small amount, and it is provided for by treaty.

Mr. PAINE. That explanation does not satisfy me. This seems to have been one of the very cases to which the gentleman referred some time since, as a provision for the benefit of a man engaged in negotiating the treaty. Here is a provision that the man who assisted in negotiating the treaty shall be paid out of the fund the United States is to give to this Indian tribe. It seems to me that this is exactly a clause of the treaty which this House should not be very careful to carry out.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. PAINE; and upon a division there were—ayes 17, noes 25; no quorum voting.

Mr. PAINE. If the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] will permit this amendment to be regarded as adopted, or will consent to my offering it in the House, I will not ask for any further division.

Mr. BUTLER. Permit me to state why I cannot consent to the adoption of this amendment. There is no way of preventing the payment of the money to this man, Pierre Gavneaux, that I can see. It is required by a provision of the treaty; it is for but a small amount. If you strike out the words proposed you still appropriate the money, and Pierre Gavneaux will get it. If you strike out the entire $40,000, that embraces the entire appropriation under the treaty for medical stores, agricultural implements, &c. This is only for two or three hundred dollars. There are plenty other instances of the same sort. The difficulty is that such a treaty never should have been ratified. But it has been ratified, and the House of Representatives has approved it by appropriating money under it, and we cannot now go back of it; I wish we could.

Mr. PAINE. I do not desire to hinder gentlemen in their efforts to get this bill into the House to-day, and I will not, therefore, call for a further division upon my amendment. But I wish the amendment to be passed formally, so that we may have a vote upon it in the House, or permission given for it to be moved in the House. This is evidently one of those scandalous frauds which we are not bound to carry out. It has been placed in there by the fraud of this man himself. The Indians have no interest in the matter; the Government has no interest in it. This man himself negotiated the treaty, and the provision is a scandalous fraud upon us, which I hope we shall not carry out.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Does the gentleman know the circumstances under which the treaty was negotiated?

Mr. PAINE. I know nothing about the matter except what appears from the explanation of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] himself.

I withdraw the call for a division.

The amendment was declared not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

Apaches:

For thirty of forty instalments, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, according to the terms of the second article treaty, October 17, 1865, $10,000.

Mr. WINDOM. As I understand, the treaty under which this paragraph is reported requires an appropriation of twenty dollars per head for each of the Indians. I therefore move to amend by striking out "ten" and inserting "sixteen," so as to make the appropriation $16,000. According to the census of that tribe, it comprises eight hundred Indians.

Mr. BUTLER. The difficulty is this: I sent to the Indian Bureau a letter asking for the census which had been taken under these treaties. The bureau declined or neglected to send the statistics until after this bill had been reported. In the absence of that census, I consulted the best sources of information within my reach. I found, in the first place, that we were not obliged to appropriate anything under the conditions of the treaty, because we are only required to appropriate according to a census to be returned by the Indian Bureau, and no such census had been returned. After the best inquiry I could make I came to the conclusion that there are not honestly in that tribe more than five hundred souls.

Mr. WINDOM. The statement which I have made is based upon the statement of the Indian department.

Mr. BUTLER. When was it furnished to you?

Mr. WINDOM. Three days ago.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman has a statement furnished three days ago. The committee have had this bill under consideration since the 1st of December, and I could get no such statement. Besides, I very much doubt the accuracy of the statement. The census is only taken by the Indian agent, and the more souls he can return the more money he can get. [Laughter.] Hence I cannot agree to appropriate more than $10,000 for this tribe. We are not actually bound by treaty to appropriate anything.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on this amendment.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

For insurance, transportation, and necessary cost of delivery of annuities and provisions for Chippewas of Lake Superior, $3,000.

Mr. PAINE. At the request of my colleague, [Mr. WASHBURN,] who is now necessarily absent from the House, I move to amend by adding at the end of the paragraph just read the following:

And also for the purchase of twine for nets and kettles for making sugar, $4,000; for guns and ammunition, $2,000; for provisions and cattle, $2,000; for running saw-mill, $1,500; for blankets, cloth, &c., $5,500.

My colleague placed in my hands Executive Document No. 246 of the present session, containing, among other things, a letter from L. E. Webb, formerly the agent in charge of these Indians, and now, I believe, superintendent of Indian affairs in New Mexico. I ask the Clerk to read this letter, which contains all the information I have on this subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, March 7, 1868.

SIR: I desire, respectfully, to call your attention to the condition of the Chippewa Indians of Lake Superior. They number (exclusive of the Boisé Fort Indians, who made the treaty of 1866) about five thousand three hundred souls, and are scattered over a large extent of country in northwestern Wisconsin and Minnesota.

The treaty of 1842 expired in 1866, and under the provisions of the treaty of 1854 they received annually $5,000 in money and $6,000 in goods, which is about two dollars per capita. Many of them have adopted the habits of civilized life and are endeavoring to subsist themselves by agricultural pursuits, but their country is not well adapted to agriculture, in consequence of the shortness of the seasons; they are compelled, therefore, to subsist chiefly upon fish, of which the supply is very abundant.

These Indians have always been loyal toward the Government, and during the late rebellion large numbers of their young men rendered valuable service in the cause of the Union. They are, therefore, justly entitled to liberal treatment at the hands of Congress.

Seven reservations are set apart for the various bands by the provisions of the treaty of 1854, but they are so poor that they cannot subsist upon them without assistance from the Government. As a consequence, many of them are constantly roaming about the settlements on the St. Croix, Chippewa, and Black rivers, to the annoyance of the settlers, and numerous petitions are yearly presented to the Legislature of Wisconsin asking for their removal to their respective reservations. They would willingly comply with their treaty stipulations, and reside upon the reservations set apart for their use, if sufficient assistance were afforded to them by the Government to enable them to improve their lands and provide themselves with the necessary agricultural implements. They have a saw-mill, but no means have been provided to run it. Their fish nets are worn out, as are also their sugar kettles and guns.

I would, therefore, respectfully ask that you lay this subject before Congress, and, if possible, procure for these Indians such assistance as their necessities imperiously demand. In my judgment the necessary relief could be provided by the judicious expenditure of the following sum for the various objects named below, namely:

For the purchase of twine for nets and kettles for making sugar.....	$4,000
For guns and ammunition.....	2,000
For provisions and cattle.....	2,000
For running saw-mill.....	1,500
For blankets, cloth, &c.....	5,500
Total.....	$15,000

It is perhaps proper that I should here say that I have acted as agent for these Indians during the past seven years, but, as I have recently been appointed to another position, I can have no other interest in this matter than a desire to contribute, as far as I can, to the amelioration of the condition of a worthy tribe of Indians, who are entitled to just and liberal treatment at the hands of the Government.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

L. E. WEBB.

Hon. C. C. WASHBURN,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

Mr. PAINE. I will state that that letter, addressed to my colleague, has been sent to this House by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish simply to call the attention of the House to the fact that for fourteen years we have every year been appropriating for these Chippewas of Lake Superior over thirty-four thousand dollars under these heads:

For fourteenth of twenty installments in coin.

For fourteenth of twenty installments in goods, household furniture, and cooking utensils.

For fourteenth of twenty installments for agricultural implements, cattle, carpenters' and other tools, and building materials.

For fourteenth of twenty installments for moral and educational purposes, $300 of which to be paid to the Grand Portage band to enable them to maintain a school at their village.

For fourteenth of twenty installments for six smiths and assistants.

For fourteenth of twenty installments for support of six smiths' shops.

For twelfth of twenty installments for the seventh smith and assistant and support of shops.

For the support of a smith, assistant, and shop for the Boisé Fort band during the pleasure of the President.

For the support of two farmers for the Boisé Fort band during the pleasure of the President.

For insurance, transportation, and necessary cost of the delivery of annuities and provisions for Chippewas of Lake Superior.

And we have got to do it for six years longer. I do not see why these Indians should have a gratuity of $6,000. Let them go to work. They pay no tax, and are simply paupers upon the Government.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DONNELLY. On page 14, line three hundred and twenty-six, I move to strike out "one" and in lieu thereof to insert "three;" so it will read:

For fourteenth of twenty installments for purposes of education, per third article treaty 22d February, 1855, $3,000.

Mr. Chairman, these Indians are located in my district, and the treaty under which this appropriation is made provides that a sum not exceeding $3,000 shall be appropriated annually for the purposes of education. The committee have reported in the bill only $1,000. Every year since 1855 Congress has appropriated $3,000. It seems to me that it is a false economy to strike down the appropriations for education. If we ever expect to civilize these Indians it must be by the aid of education. It seems to me, therefore, I repeat, a false economy to reduce the educational fund contemplated in the treaty. I make the motion to increase the appropriation to $3,000, the amount that has been appropriated every year since 1855.

Mr. BUTLER. This matter was discussed in the committee in order to get exactly at what should be done, and we came to the conclusion that we had the right to cut this down under this language, "such sum as may be useful" "not to exceed $3,000 in any one year, for the purpose of education." We have the right to cut it down to nothing. On examination we found that there are not as many scholars receiving the benefit of this educational fund as it would have supported in any one of our cities. In other words, we came to the conclusion that the more money the less education.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fourteenth of fifteen installments for support of two smiths and smiths' shops, per third article treaty 22d February, 1855, $1,240.

Mr. DONNELLY. I move to amend by striking out $1,240 and inserting $2,120, being the amount designated in the estimate. I would state in this connection that in all the paragraphs in this bill which relate to these particular Indians a similar reduction of the wages of the employes has been made. I desire to read to the House a portion of a communication on this subject coming from the Bureau of Indian Affairs to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

"Suitable and efficient employes cannot be engaged to go into the Indian country and reside permanently, giving all their time and attention to the Indians, for less than is asked for in the estimate. Men of no character and of little if any knowledge of the business for which they are employed may possibly be had for the prices proposed to be paid in the bill. They will, however, prove injurious rather than beneficial to the service, and it would be far better for all concerned to furnish no employes than to send men among the Indians with no knowledge of their duties and no character to lose. This applies equally well to all cases where reductions have been made in the pay of employes."

I am able to fully confirm the statement made in that communication. These Indians are located at a great distance from our settlements. A man who goes among them must be prepared to lead a life of isolation, almost of exile, and it is difficult to get the proper kind of men—respectable and worthy men—for less than the prices named in the estimates. I therefore trust that the amendment will prevail. In this particular case the provision is for two blacksmiths and their shops. The amount proposed by the committee is $1,240. That would be $620 for each smith and shop. Out of this sum the smith has got to support himself and his family in that country, and furnish all the materials that are required in the work of his shop. Then he has to bring the provision upon which he lives a distance of hundreds of miles. I think the amount contained in the estimate is as little as we should allow.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman is quite right in saying that we have adopted a rule about these wages. We found this remarkable condition of things: some treaties provide how much shall be paid for the blacksmith or the miller or the engineer, and some do not. Wherever the treaty provides for the amount that shall be paid you can always get one for that amount, but wherever the amount is unprovided for there you cannot get one without paying half or two thirds more. So we came to the conclusion that if, wherever the treaty provided for the employment of a blacksmith, miller, or mechanic at a given price, they could readily be had, they might always be had at the same price, provided Congress insisted that no more should be paid. In other words, wherever it is left to discretion the price runs up; wherever it is fixed by treaty there you can always get your blacksmith, miller, or mechanic as you want them. You find that running through all these provisions. Many years ago—I think in 1844—Congress fixed by law what should be paid to these Indian employes. I think it was $600 a year. Now, in every case where it is fixed by Congress an employe can be got for that sum. But if you want another blacksmith right alongside of the one employed at $600 you cannot get him for less than $900 or $1,200 a year.

My friend from Minnesota [Mr. DONNELLY] is mistaken in regard to the blacksmith's shop and materials being included. His shop is built for the blacksmith; his tools, iron, steel, and everything are given to him; and he eats out of the Indian provisions. We thought, therefore, he could afford to work for $620 a year. He pays no taxes. He is away from the temptations of society. He has no servants to provide for; the Indians are always ready to help him. If he had any servant to provide for, if he should take a girl into his family, he would charge ten dollars a month for feeding her. That would be domestic economy. We came to the conclusion that he would be better off at $620 than one here at $1,200. For that reason we have made a uniform scale. Now, if you desire to raise the pay of all these employes do so; if not, let this remain as it is.

Mr. DONNELLY. I move to amend the amendment so as to make the amount $2,220. I would say, in reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts—

Mr. BUTLER. I make the point of order that the gentleman cannot offer two amendments to the same paragraph.

Mr. SCOFIELD. It is a modification of his amendment.

Mr. DONNELLY. I hope the gentleman will not make that point of order until I can reply to his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment to an amendment, and that is in order.

Mr. DONNELLY. I have no doubt that in former treaties, made many years ago, when the commerce and condition of the country were very different from what they are at the present time, very moderate amounts were stipulated for the pay of employes. But we are in the midst of a different condition of things. Now, the gentleman has said that where a small amount of compensation is fixed you can always get an employe ready to perform the work. I have no doubt of that. I have no doubt that you would find men ready to take our seats here in Congress for half or one fourth the pay we receive. I doubt not you could put them up at auction and sell them to the highest bidder, and I am under the impression that in some branches of the Government very large sums would be offered for a place, if we are to be guided by the revelations of the last two or three weeks. That, however, is not the question. We have taken charge of these Indians. We have made ourselves to some extent their custodians. We must see that they are properly taken care of. We must furnish sufficient remuneration to induce good and respectable men to go and settle down in their midst. We must not throw open the door and invite the ruffians of the frontier to come in by offering compensation that no decent man can live upon. Now, as to the facts of the case, this communication from the Indian Bureau to which I have referred says:

"The treaty provides that two blacksmiths, with the necessary shops, iron, steel, and tools, shall be furnished. This certainly cannot be done for $1,240."

Mr. BUTLER. We do not require it to be done for that.

Mr. DONNELLY. It is the understanding of the Indian Bureau, as shown in this statement, that the blacksmiths are to furnish the materials for their shops.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman look at the last item in the estimates, just below that: "For insurance, transportation, and iron and steel for blacksmiths, $10,000." That is for Chippewas of Red Lake and Pembina tribes—the ones we are dealing with.

Mr. DONNELLY. The gentleman is in error. We are dealing with the Pillager and Lake Winnebagoish Chippewas. The Indians to whom he refers are an entirely different set. It is certainly understood by the Indian Bureau that the cost of the materials is to come out of this sum, and I trust my amendment will become an exception to the rule here and be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the amendment to the amendment. Does the gentleman from Minnesota insist upon it?

Mr. DONNELLY. No, sir; I withdraw the amendment to the amendment and ask for a vote on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. DONNELLY. I now move to insert the following as a new paragraph, to come in after line three hundred and sixty-five:

For pay of female employes to teach Indian women habits of domestic economy, $1,000.

I would say that this item is provided for in the treaty.

Mr. BUTLER. Is that in the estimates?

Mr. DONNELLY. I have the treaty before me. Article thirteen of the treaty of May 7, 1864, with the Chippewa Indians, reads as follows:

"The female members of the family of any Government employe residing on a reservation who shall teach Indian girls domestic economy shall be allowed and paid a sum not exceeding ten dollars per month while so engaged; Provided, That not more than $1,000 shall be so expended during any one year; and that the President of the United States may suspend or annul this article whenever he may deem it expedient to do so."

The President has not suspended or annulled this provision of the treaty; and we are under an obligation to those Indians to make an appropriation for that purpose. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is not necessary for me to enlarge upon the important part which the female plays in the civilization, cultivation, and improvement of the race. It is, however, evident that if we are to civilize the Indians, one of the most important points to be secured is to teach the Indian women habits of domestic economy akin to those practiced by civilized beings—to instruct them in the arts of civilized life. I think, therefore, this amendment should be adopted. It is to carry out an existing treaty under which the faith of the nation is pledged.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad that my friend from Minnesota [Mr. DONNELLY] has brought this article of the treaty to the attention of the House. It is a beautiful illustration of the manner in which these treaties are made. Let me read the provision:

"The female members of the family of any Government employe residing on a reservation who shall teach Indian girls domestic economy shall be allowed and paid a sum not exceeding ten dollars per month while so engaged."

Thus the Indian agent or blacksmith or other Government employe not only gets himself employed, but has a treaty stipulation that his wife or his mistress or whoever else he has with him shall also be employed at ten dollars per month. And nobody can teach domestic economy to these Indian girls and get pay for it except "the female members of the family of any Government employe." That is what they call making treaties in this country! Why not throw open to everybody this business of teaching domestic economy to these Indian girls? If the wife of a missionary going upon the Indian reservation undertakes to teach the Indian girls domestic economy she cannot have any pay for it. But the wife or sister of other females belonging to the family of a Government employe can obtain ten dollars a month for such services. Now, sir, what is meant by "teaching Indian girls domestic economy?" It means taking Indian girls into the kitchen of the Indian agent to do the housework, and instead of paying them wages, obtaining from the Government ten dollars a month for exercising the privilege of so employing them. And this is secured by treaty between two independent nations! This illustrates better than anything else can the rotten and infernal character of this whole business of making treaties with the Indians.

This article further provides that "not more than $1,000 shall be so expended during any one year." I do not mean that there shall be any more than $1,000 expended. Therefore we struck out the appropriation for this purpose.

It is further provided that "the President of the United States may suspend or annul this article whenever he may deem it expedient to do so." So he may; and I hold that Congress is not bound to appropriate a single dollar. It is simply provided that no more than $1,000 shall be appropriated. We may cut the appropriation down to one dollar if we choose. The provision does not require that no less than $1,000 shall be appropriated. The whole effect of the article is that the Government pays its employes among the Indians a gratuity for engaging the Indian girls to do their housework.

Mr. DONNELLY. I move to amend the amendment by making the amount $1,500.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts seems to forget that in the Indian country there are not, or are not supposed to be, any females of the white race, except those who are the members of the families of Government employes—their wives and daughters. It is true there are in that country females belonging to the families of missionaries; and I should certainly have had no objection if the treaty had extended to the wives and daughters of missionaries; but I suppose that these were omitted by an oversight.

The truth is the only white females who can properly and fitly be within the limits of an Indian reservation are the wives and daughters of Government employes; and certainly they could not be better employed than in teaching the habits of civilized life to the Indian women around them; and if such instruction be given I see no reason why this great, generous Government should not be willing to pay for it, especially when we have solemnly stipulated under the hand and seal of the nation to make such payment.

Now, sir, my distinguished friend from Massachusetts does not, it seems to me, fairly represent the meaning of this article. It does not contemplate that this House may in its own judgment refuse to appropriate a dollar for this purpose. The language of the treaty clearly requires that those who give this instruction shall be paid for their services; but that not more than $1,000 per annum shall be so paid. It is our duty to provide for the payment of this amount, if services equivalent to this sum are rendered.

Mr. Chairman, there are two classes of subjects which a western man on this floor is very often called upon to touch. One relates to the interests of his constituents as connected with land grants; the other embraces questions concerning Indian affairs. Yet a member cannot touch either of these classes of questions without subjecting himself to suspicion in the estimation of many good and true men on this floor.

I have to-day offered two or three amendments to this bill. The first, which looked to the education of these Indians, was rejected by the House. The second was designed to place among the Indians respectable Government employes, instead of the "scalliwags" who too often resort to those reservations for a living. The third amendment, which I have now offered, provides for carrying out a treaty stipulation that the wives and daughters of Government employes may teach the Indian women habits of civilization and receive pay therefor. The House has voted down both the amendments I have already offered; and I have no doubt that, in the face of the existing treaty stipulation, this amendment will also be rejected. I at least shall have done my duty.

I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

For fifth of fifteen installments to defray the expenses of a board of visitors, to consist of not more than three persons, to attend upon the annuity payments of the said Chippewa Indians, whose pay shall not exceed five dollars per day each, and for not more than twenty days, and ten cents per mile for traveling expenses, and not to exceed three hundred miles, per sixth article treaty October 2, 1863, $250.

Mr. WINDOM. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out "two hundred and fifty" and inserting "four hundred," so as to make the appropriation $400. In a preceding paragraph, lines three hundred and fifty-seven to three hundred and sixty-five, $400 have been appropriated for a similar purpose in connection with another tribe. In that case it is provided that "a board of visitors, to consist of not more than three persons," shall be paid five dollars a day for not more than twenty days' service in any one year, and ten cents per mile for not more than three hundred miles' travel. The paragraph to which I refer is as follows:

For pay of services and traveling expenses of a board of visitors, to consist of not more than three persons, to attend the annuity payments to the Indians, and to inspect the fields, buildings, mills, and other improvements, as stipulated in the seventh article treaty May 7, 1861, not exceeding, any one year, more than twenty days' service, at five dollars per day, or more than three hundred miles' travel, at ten cents per mile, $300.

The provision in the paragraph just read by the Clerk is precisely the same as to business, the number of days, the amount to be paid, &c., but in one case the committee report $400 and in the other $250, the only difference being that in the latter case the board of visitors are further removed from civilization than those for whom they report $100.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. On page 19, line four hundred and forty-three, I move to strike out "four" and insert "six," so it will read:

Confederated tribes and bands of Indians in middle Oregon:
For fourth of five installments, second series, for beneficial objects, at the discretion of the President, per second article treaty 25th June, 1855, $6,000.

I will call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts to the fact that my amendment is strictly in accordance with the treaty, and that the bill is not. The treaty is to be found on page 965 of the twelfth volume of the Statutes-at-Large. Eight thousand dollars per annum is to be paid for five years, commencing the 1st of September, 1856, "or as soon thereafter as practicable." I call attention to those words, "as soon thereafter as practicable." Six thousand dollars per annum for six years next succeeding the first five. For the second series it is $6,000. I turn to another clause, page 9 of the same volume, and I find that the first appropriation made under this treaty was made in 1860, and the second series, therefore, does not terminate until 1870. In 1860, page 9, I find an appropriation for the first of five installments, $8,000, under the treaty. The first five terminated in 1865, and the second series commenced then and have five years to run, that is, according to this treaty. There can be no doubt about that; and the second series is for $6,000. I suppose the matter was overlooked by the committee, because the treaty says it was to commence on the 1st of September, 1856, or as soon thereafter as practicable. It did not commence until 1860, as the treaty was not ratified until 1859.

Mr. BUTLER. If this is four, then the gentleman is right; but the article of the treaty is that it shall commence on the 1st of September, 1856:

Mr. WINDOM. Or as soon thereafter as practicable.

Mr. BUTLER. The third series commenced in ten years, that is 1866. We are now making an appropriation for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1869.

Mr. WINDOM. The treaty was not ratified until 1859, and the payments did not commence until 1860.

Mr. BUTLER. To that I say that I do not know. I have reported here in five or six different instances payments under treaties made last year that have not yet been ratified, for the reason that I was told by the Indian commissioners that the Indians were waiting for the money, and if they did not get it the war would be renewed. Therefore it is no sure ground to go upon that because the treaty was not ratified until 1859 therefore no appropriation was made before that.

Mr. WINDOM. Let me call the gentleman's attention to this fact: that the appropriation in 1860 says it is for the first of five installments.

Mr. BUTLER. Under this treaty?

Mr. WINDOM. Under this treaty. The first began in 1860.

Mr. BUTLER. That being so, the gentleman is right, and they are entitled to the other $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. WINDOM. On page 31, line seven hundred and thirty, I move to strike out "$1,000" and in lieu thereof to insert "$1,200;" so it will read:

Nisqually, Puyallup, and other tribes and bands of Indians:

For fourteenth installment, in part payment for relinquishment of title to lands, to be applied to beneficial objects, per fourth article treaty 26th December, 1854, $1,200.

Mr. Chairman, this appropriation is based on article four, page 1133, tenth volume Statutes-at-Large: "for six years after the ratification shall be $3,200; for the next two years, $3,000 each year; for the next three years, $2,000 each year; for the next four, $1,600." That is ten. For the next five, $1,200. Until fifteen years it is for the last five $1,200. According to the bill itself this is only the fourteenth year, and it should be $1,200 according to the treaty.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For ninth of twenty installments for pay of a physician, per fifth article treaty June, 1855, $1,000.

Mr. HIGBY. I move to amend by adding $400, so as to make the sum $1,400. I do it in order that the gentleman from Massachusetts may give us information why there is a difference in the appropriation between last year and this.

Mr. BUTLER. The reason is this: it was proposed to bring all these physicians down to $1,000. That provision runs through a class of these physicians. There is no pay fixed by treaty, and Congress has a right to fix the pay where it pleases. Now, the physician is provided with his building, his hospital, his furniture, and his medicine. This is mere salary, and we thought $1,000 was enough.

Mr. HIGBY. I withdraw the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

For salary of two subordinate chiefs, as per fifth article treaty of June 9, 1833, $400.

Mr. WINDOM. I move to strike out "$400" and insert "$1,000." This appropriation is made under article five, page 650, Statutes-at-Large, which reads as follows:

"The United States further agree that in addition to a head chief the tribe shall elect two subordinate chiefs, who shall assist him in the performance of his public service, and each subordinate chief shall have the same amount of land plowed and fenced, with comfortable houses and necessary furniture, and to whom the same salary shall be paid as is already provided for the head chief in article five of the treaty of June 11, 1855."

The article of the treaty referred to, which I need not read, provides that the salary shall be $500—

Mr. BUTLER. Can the gentleman turn to the page of the estimate?

Mr. WINDOM. I cannot. The appropriation is made under the fifth article.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection this paragraph will be passed over for the present, with the privilege of returning to it again.

The Clerk read as follows:

Osges:

For interest on $300,000, at five percent per annum to be paid semi-annually, in money or such articles as the Secretary of the Interior may direct, as per first article treaty of September 29, 1855, $15,000.

Mr. WINDOM. I move to insert at the end of the foregoing paragraph the following:

And for interest on $69,120, at five per cent., being value of fifty-four sections of land set apart for educational purposes, $3,456.

By the terms of an article of treaty found in volume seven, page 242, this land is to be sold for the purpose of raising a fund to be applied to the support of schools for said Indians. On the 19th of January, 1838, the Senate passed a resolution in effect that on the relinquishment by the Indians of their interest in said land an amount equal to the value of the land, or two dollars per acre, should be invested for them. Such relinquishment was executed by the Indians on the 7th of March, 1838, and instead of investing the amount in stocks it was placed to their credit and interest at five per cent. paid thereon. The first appropriation of the interest was made by act of July 7, 1838, and it has been appropriated annually since that time. The following is a copy of the Senate resolution:

"Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to disregard altogether the selections made by the agents appointed for that purpose of the Indian school lands under the sixth article of the treaty made at the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, on the 2d of June, 1825, between William Clark, esq., commissioner on the part of the United States, and the chiefs, head men, and warriors of the Great and Little Osage nations of Indians; and also that he disregard all selections of Indian school lands by the commissioners appointed for that purpose for the Delaware Indians, under the provisions of the supplementary treaty concluded on the 24th of September, 1829, and ratified on the 31st of March, 1831; and that he be requested to negotiate through their agents and give them two dollars an acre for the land in money, to be invested in State stocks in the manner aforesaid, to induce them to take other land, in lieu of their reservations, in tracts of one mile square each, to be located on any vacant and unoccupied land of the United States to which the Indian title is extinguished; the said tribe relinquishing on their part all claims under the treaties of 1825 and 1829 to the reservation for education."

I read this as furnished me by the Indian Bureau, and I have examined into the matter and believe it to be correct. I think this sum should be appropriated. If the money is in our hands for lands which we agreed to purchase from the Indians for two dollars an acre, I can see no reason why the appropriation should not be made.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, while the committee agree that the President, by a treaty ratified by the Senate, can bind the United States to pay any sum, the committee do not agree that the Senate, by a resolution, can bind the United States as a law for all time to pay money to anybody. If the gentleman will show me any law that requires this sum to be appropriated I will support the appropriation. But when he shows me a simple Senate resolution, not concurred in by the House, and without the force of law, I cannot, consistently with my duty as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, recommend such an appropriation. The fact that the money has been taken for so many years without law is only a reason why it should stop now.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask to be allowed to make a single remark in reply. I am aware that this has not all the sanction of law; but the proposition was made to the Indians, the lands were purchased, the money went into our pockets, and it seems to me not quite honest to refuse to pay the interest that we promised to pay.

The question was taken on the amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. BURR. I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLAINE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being House bill No. 1073, making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending 30th June, 1869, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McDONALD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 286) to incorporate the National Life Insurance Company of the United States of America; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

PROTECTION OF AMERICAN COMMERCE.

Mr. PIKE. I made an objection this morning when the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ELIOT] asked that a bill which he reported from the Committee on Commerce should be made the special order for the second Wednesday in June. I desire to withdraw that objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will restate the proposition. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ELIOT] asks unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. No. 929) to protect American commerce, reported during the morning hour from the Committee on Commerce, be assigned for the second Wednesday in June after the morning hour and made the special order. Is there objection?

No objection was made, and it was so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence for an indefinite period was granted to Mr. BANKS and Mr. PRYNN.

PAYMENT OF AN APPROPRIATION.

Mr. THOMAS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1121) to prevent an appropriation therein mentioned from lapsing because of delay in adjustment; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BURR. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at four o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. CARY: A memorial of 48 members of the Ohio Legislature, praying that Congress may pass a law to prevent the construction of bridges hereafter across the Ohio river having a less span across the main channel thereof than five hundred feet.

Also, the action of the merchants, manufacturers, and others, citizens of Cincinnati, on the same subject.

Also, the opinion of 58 Ohio river pilots, on the same subject.

Also, the proceedings of the Cincinnati Board of Underwriters, on the same subject.

Also, a memorial of 90 cigar-makers of Cincinnati, protesting against any increase of tax on cigars.

By Mr. DAWES: The remonstrance of Hinsdale Smith and others, against a change in the tax on cigars.

By Mr. GROVER: The petition of Eli Long.

By Mr. HALSEY: The petition of cattle brokers of Hudson county, fifth district New Jersey, asking Congress to reduce the tax on their business.

By Mr. HOTCHKISS: The petition of William H. Coen and others, of Waterbury, Connecticut, in reference to tax on cigars.

By Mr. LAWRENCE, of Pennsylvania: The petition of 25 workers in Brighton paper-mill, in Beaver county, Pennsylvania, setting forth that owing to foreign competition their industry is greatly depressed, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 42 workingmen of New Castle, Pennsylvania, praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of David Beal and 44 others, farmers and mechanics of Hanover township, Beaver county, Pennsylvania, praying for such increase of protective duties as will revive manufactures and restore prosperity to the country.

Also, the petition of Captain Daniel Dawson and 51 others, farmers and mechanics of Ohio township, Beaver county, Pennsylvania, complaining of the depression of industry, and praying for such increase of protective duties as will revive manufactures and restore prosperity to the country.

By Mr. LYNCH: The petition of cigar-makers, relating to the tax on cigars.

By Mr. McCARTHY: The petition of 150 cigar manufacturers, journeymen cigar-makers, and dealers of Syracuse, New York, against an increase of taxation on cigars, and in favor of a revenue stamp instead of the present inspector's stamp.

By Mr. MOORE: The petitions of 114 glass workers, in Millville, New Jersey, setting forth that owing to foreign competition their industry is greatly depressed, and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 39 workers in glassware at Bridgeton, New Jersey, setting forth that owing to foreign competition their industry is greatly depressed, and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 138 workers in Camden iron works, at Camden, New Jersey, setting forth that owing to foreign competition their industry is greatly depressed, and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 49 workers in Clayton glass works, New Jersey, setting forth that owing to foreign competition their industry is greatly depressed, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 28 workers in Gibbsboro white lead works, Camden county, New Jersey, setting forth that owing to foreign competition their industry is greatly depressed, and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 110 workers in Whitney glass works, Glassboro, New Jersey, setting forth that owing to foreign competition their industry is greatly depressed, and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of John J. Githens and 25 others, glass-blowers, of Ateo, New Jersey, setting forth that owing to foreign competition their industry is greatly depressed, and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of John W. Farrell and 31 others, workers in Nesocochague paper-mill, Atlantic county, New Jersey, complaining of the depression of industry, and praying for additional protective duties.

By Mr. MOORHEAD: The petition of 756 iron-workers in eleven iron-mills in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, setting forth that, owing to foreign competition, their industry is greatly depressed, and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of John Winton and 68 others, glass-blowers in Birmingham, Pennsylvania, setting forth that, owing to foreign competition, their industry is greatly depressed, and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 208 glass-workers in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, setting forth that, owing to foreign competition, their industry is greatly depressed, and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 64 citizens of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, praying for such increase of protective duties as will revive manufactures and restore prosperity to the country.

Also, the petition of 65 workers in Fulton machine works and Enterprise foundry, at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of William Adams and 174 others, workingmen of Alleghany county, Pennsylvania, setting forth that owing to foreign competition their industry is greatly depressed, and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 466 workers in iron and steel and brass at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, representing that owing to foreign competition their industry is greatly depressed, and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of John Cleland and 48 others, coal-workers at Braddock's Fields, Pennsylvania, praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 52 brushmakers and others, workers in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, setting forth that owing to foreign competition their industry is greatly depressed, and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of Christopher Deemer and 83 others, workingmen of Alleghany county, Pennsylvania, praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of Samuel Tretheway and 20 others, workers in the Crescent steel works of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 37 workers in queensware and other factories of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of Thomas I. Christian and others, operatives in Hope cotton-mills, at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, complaining of depression of industry, and praying for additional protective duties.

By Mr. MYERS: The petition of cigar manufacturers, journeymen cigar-makers, and dealers in leaf tobacco, of Lehigh county, Pennsylvania, against altering the present system of taxing cigars.

By Mr. NICHOLSON: The petition of Samuel Etchelle and 30 others, workingmen of New Castle, Delaware, praying for additional protective duties.

By Mr. PERHAM: The petition of John W. Harris, for pay as pilot from November, 1862, to April 20, 1863.

By Mr. PRUYN: The remonstrance of M. Strasser and 56 others, of Albany, New York, against any increase in the internal revenue tax on cigars.

By Mr. STARKWEATHER: The petition of John B. Sizer and others, of New London, Connecticut, cigar manufacturers, cigar dealers, &c., against increasing the tax on cigars.

By Mr. STEWART: A memorial of the New York Produce Exchange, for an appropriation for the improvement of the harbor of Buffalo.

Also, a memorial of the American Geographical and Statistical Society, of New York, requesting a scientific expedition to Alaska.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, May 28, 1868.

Prayer by Rev. E. H. GRAY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

IMPEACHMENT OF PRESIDENT—PRIVILEGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed as members of the committee provided for by the resolution of the Senate of yesterday, Mr. BUCKALEW, Mr. MORRILL of Maine, Mr. CHANDLER, Mr. STEWART, and Mr. THAYER.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills received from the House of Representatives yesterday were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A bill (H. R. No. 198) to reestablish the boundaries of the collection districts of Michigan and Mackinac, and to change the names of the collection districts of Michilimackinac and Port Huron;

A bill (H. R. No. 375) to repeal an act approved March 2, 1867, entitled "An act to regulate the disposition of fines, penalties, and forfeitures received under the laws relating to the customs, and for other purposes," and to amend certain acts for the prevention and punishment of frauds in the revenue, and for the prevention of smuggling;

A bill (H. R. No. 1119) for the registration or enrollment of certain foreign vessels; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1120) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to change the names of certain vessels.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 96) for the relief of John Sedgwick, collector of internal revenue third district, California, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President, I have received and been requested to present to the Senate an appeal addressed to the Senate of the United States in behalf of the conservative people of South Carolina, against the adoption by Congress of the new constitution proposed for that State. It is signed by the State Central Executive Committee representing those people in South Carolina. It is a well written paper, and discusses among other things the Constitution in reference to certain statistics and facts on the subject of taxation. The memorial I desire to have referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, who have the matter in charge, and I beg to call the attention of the committee to its statements. It seems to be calmly written and a very able document so far as I can judge. I believe the statement therein contained will be found to be entirely accurate.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. JOHNSON presented the petition of Mrs. Emma M. Moore, widow of Lieutenant John W. Cox, of the United States Navy, and of the late Senior Captain E. W. Moore, of the late Texas navy, praying that her name may be restored to the pension-list; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Cambridge, Maryland, praying that that town may be made a port of entry or delivery; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of Anthony Nagle, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. YATES presented a petition of citizens of Illinois, praying for such an amendment to the Constitution of the United States as will fully acknowledge the obligations of the Christian religion; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. RAMSEY presented the memorial of Edward D. Neill, praying the publication of the records of the Virginia Company of London, now in the Library of Congress; which was referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CAMERON presented a memorial of underwriters and merchants of Philadelphia, against the adoption of any measures that will lessen the efficiency of the Coast Survey; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a memorial of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, praying a reduction of the tax on whisky and tobacco; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of Thomas E. Williams and John Montgomery, praying compensation for the destruction of property by the military forces of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented the petition of Amanda Stackhouse, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented five memorials of the Philadelphia Typographical Union No. 2, remonstrating against the passage of an international copyright law; which were referred to the Committee on the Library.

He also presented a memorial of the sugar refiners of Philadelphia, asking for an increase of the duty on clarified sugar; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of James McMurray, praying an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CAMERON. I also desire to present the petition of John Potts, chief clerk of the War Department, who asks for compensation as disbursing agent of that Department, and I desire to say in presenting it that this office of disbursing agent was created by the Secretary of War in the beginning of the war in 1861. He has disbursed some nine or ten million dollars without any compensation at all. The petition, together with the documents accompanying it, I move to refer to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN presented the petition of James F. Armstrong, Captain United States Navy, praying to be restored to the active list; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. COLE presented a petition of citizens of California, praying an appropriation of $30,000 for turning San Diego river into False bay; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HARLAN presented a memorial of citizens of Iowa, in relation to the erection of a bridge over the Mississippi river at Rock Island; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HARLAN. I present the memorial of Charles A. Nichols and others, asking for the erection of a bridge over the Anacostia or eastern branch of the Potomac river at Washington, with a resolution. I ask that the resolution may be read for information, and I give notice that I will call it up to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds be directed to make a survey of the lower bridge, known as the navy-yard bridge, across the Anacostia, and report a plan for a permanent structure across the same, at or near the present site, capable of sustaining a railway track and cars with a foot way on each side of the carriage track, with an estimate of the cost of the same.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over until to-morrow.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, the Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 658) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1869, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

On motion of Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The President pro tempore appointed Messrs. MORRILL of Maine, Howe, and Wilson.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 867) for the relief of Jonathan Jessup, postmaster at York, Pennsylvania, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Finance, reported a bill (S. No. 490) for the relief of the owners of the brig Ocean Belle; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. HARLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported a bill (S. No. 491) to provide for the appointment of register of deeds in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 246) directing the Secretary of State to present to George Wright, master of the British brig J. and G. Wright, a gold chronometer, in appreciation of his personal services in saving the lives of three American seamen wrecked at sea on board the American schooner Lizzie F. Choate, of Massachusetts, reported it without amendment.

BRIDGE OVER THE DAKOTA RIVER.

Mr. FERRY. The Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 650) to amend the act of 3d March, 1865, providing for the construction of certain wagon-roads in Dakota Territory, have instructed me to report the bill back with a recommendation that it pass; and I am instructed to request that the bill be put on its passage now. It will take but a moment, I think, as it is merely to appropriate the balance of an unexpended appropriation to finish a bridge begun but not completed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks the present consideration of the bill reported by him. It requires unanimous consent. Is there any objection?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, which proposes to apply the unexpended balance of an appropriation made March 3, 1865, for the construction of certain wagon-roads in the Territory of Dakota, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to the completion of the bridge over the Dakota river, on the line of the Government road leading from Sioux City, in the State of Iowa, to the mouth of the Cheyenne river, in Dakota Territory.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much is that balance?

Mr. FERRY. I will state it in a moment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. FERRY. The appropriation made by the act of March 3, 1865, for the construction of certain wagon-roads in Dakota Territory, has, as I am informed by a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, remaining an unexpended balance of $12,157 70. On the road from the mouth of the Big Cheyenne to its intersection with the Niobrara river there is a bridge over the Dakota, the material of which has been collected, but the bridge itself not completed. The Secretary of the Interior informs me in the same letter that the cost of the completion of the bridge will be about one thousand five hundred dollars. The bill appropriates the unexpended balance, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to the completion of this bridge.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much is the unexpended balance?

Mr. FERRY. Twelve thousand one hundred and fifty-seven dollars and seventy cents.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You had better limit it so as not to exceed $2,500, as the Secretary says it will only cost $1,500.

Mr. FERRY. I should have no objection to that amendment except that it would send the bill back to the House, and the completion of the bridge is to be under the charge of a superintendent already appointed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the bill—the Clerk can insert it in the proper place—so as to provide that the amount to be expended in completing this bridge shall not exceed $2,500. That is $1,000 more than the Secretary of the Interior says it will cost. I am altogether opposed to leaving an open appropriation of $15,000 to be expended under the direction of anybody in the Territory of Dakota that I am acquainted with.

Mr. FERRY. I should regret to have this amendment placed on the bill, because the bill passed the House of Representatives some months ago, before the commencement of the impeachment trial, and it is necessary to have the matter acted upon immediately in the Territory in order to the completion of this bridge. It seems to me the expenditure of the appropriation is perfectly controlled by the superintendent who has already in charge the construction of the wagon-roads under the act of March 3, 1865. I prefer that the amendment should not be made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope my friend will not oppose this amendment. It is an objection which ought not to be made to amendments that are proper in themselves that the bill has to go back to the House of Representatives. I think it is not a proper objection at all. And then my friend knows perfectly well that when a bill goes back to the House of Representatives with an amendment it always comes up in a day or two. We are interchanging bills with amendments all the time. It seems to me to be unwise—but of course the gentleman in charge of appropriations and the finances know better—to put $15,000 under the control of some superintendent of roads out in the Territory of Dakota to do what the Secretary of the Interior reports will only cost $1,500, and still say that we will now reappropriate the whole unexpended balance of $15,000, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, and that is left to the superintendent to have the control of to do that small piece of work. It is unsafe and unsound legislation as it appears to me. I have no hostility, of course, to the completion of that bridge; but I submit to the Senate that my friend from Connecticut ought not to oppose an amendment which can only limit within fair and proper bounds the sum of money which is to be applied to that purpose, instead of leaving it to the unlicensed and unbridled discretion of some superintendent out there who may be changed at the will of any Secretary of the Interior or whoever has charge of it. It will not delay the passage of the bill.

Mr. CONNESS. If this bill is to be amended at all with the view suggested by the Senator from Vermont, it is certainly improper to extend the sum, if it is to be limited, beyond what the Secretary declares is enough.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was willing to give a little margin for extras.

Mr. CONNESS. Yes, Mr. President; but it is as much of a crime to expend $1,000 more unnecessarily as it would be to expend the whole amount. If the Secretary says $1,500 is enough, if you are going to amend the bill at all it should be limited to that.

Mr. RAMSEY. The danger further would be that the parties who have the management of this fund might consider this as an instruction to expend $2,500.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then the bill as it stands is an instruction to expend the whole.

Mr. CONNESS. I move to amend the amendment by inserting $1,500 instead of $2,500.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no objection to that if it suits my friend better.

Mr. CONNESS. I was not in favor of amending the bill, but I think if it is to be amended it should be amended in that way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont modifies his amendment so as to provide that the appropriation shall not exceed $1,500.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir; to satisfy my friend from California.

Mr. FERRY. I trust the amendment in this shape will not prevail. The original act provides that the balance remaining after the construction of all these roads and bridges shall be applied to another road from Sioux City, Iowa, to the Big Cheyenne, Dakota Territory, and in the original act the expenditures were under the direction of the superintendent appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, and this balance has remained as yet unexpended. Now, it is desired to complete this bridge, and if of the balance now in hand a portion, as will undoubtedly be the case, shall remain after the completion of the bridge, it is already appropriated by the act of March 3, 1865. It seems to me it would embarrass the bill unnecessarily to insist upon the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CONNESS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 492) to extend the time for the construction of the Southern Pacific railroad in the State of California; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 493) providing for a reduction of the interest on the public debt; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RAMSEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 137) extending the time for the completion of the Northern Pacific railroad; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, and ordered to be printed.

J. ROSS BROWNE'S REPORT.

Mr. STEWART. I ask leave to present an amendment to be offered to the resolution of the Senator from California, [Mr. CONNESS,] with regard to the printing of J. Ross Browne's report. I ask that it be read and referred with the resolution to the Committee on Printing. I am not particular as to its being read, but I wish to have it referred to the committee.

Mr. POMEROY. I want to hear it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

That one thousand additional copies of the said report be furnished to Mr. Browne for distribution, and that he be allowed, for such time as may be necessary, the use of the stereotype plates, after the copies called for by Congress shall have been printed, for the purpose of having printed, at his own expense, any additional number of copies he may desire.

Mr. STEWART. I will state to the committee that Mr. Browne obtained a great deal of the information that is embodied in the report from third parties, who have assisted him in it, and he feels under obligation to give them some copies of the report; and inasmuch as it contains this valuable information, the use of the stereotype plates for a time would be no great detriment to the Government, but would aid in the general object of diffusing information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

THANKS TO SECRETARY STANTON.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That the thanks of Congress are due, and are hereby tendered, to Hon. Edwin M. Stanton, for the great ability, purity, and fidelity to the cause of the country with which he has discharged the duties of Secretary of War, as well amid the open dangers of a great rebellion as at a later period when assailed by the opposition inspired by hostility to the measures of justice and pacification provided by Congress for the restoration of a real and permanent peace.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution at this time. Is there any objection?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Let it be read again. I did not hear it.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I object to the consideration of that, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, it goes over under the rules.

POSTAL TREATY WITH GREAT BRITAIN.

Mr. RAMSEY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested to communicate to the Senate, if in his judgment not inconsistent with the public interest, copies of any correspondence recently had with the authorities of Great Britain in relation to a new postal treaty.

DIPLOMATIC UNIFORM.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested, if in his opinion not incompatible with the public interest, to communicate to the Senate copies of all correspondence with persons in the diplomatic service of the United States relating to the act of Congress approved March 27, 1867, prohibiting them from wearing any uniform or official costume not previously authorized by Congress.

INDEX TO IMPEACHMENT REPORT.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now offer a resolution which I find to be necessary, and which I offered yesterday in a slightly different shape:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing are hereby authorized and directed to provide for a proper index to the official copy of the proceedings of the Senate, sitting for the trial of the President upon articles of impeachment.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. SUMNER. I would make an observation on that. I said last night that it was within my knowledge that a particular effort was made to have a good index to the edition published by the Globe. I was in the way of seeing a portion of that index as far as it has gone, and it promises well. I think it will be a very useful one. The question with me was whether the labor that has been put into the Globe index could not in some way be utilized at the Government Printing Office in the preparation of the index to this other edition of the trial. For instance, the Globe index might be taken and the paging of the Government edition supplied instead of the paging of the Globe edition. I merely make this remark now by way of suggestion to my friend, the chairman of the committee, that he may bear it in mind in any instructions that he may think it advisable to give. On the whole, I think the resolution should pass.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it ought to be left to the Committee on Printing rather than to the Secretary of the Senate, and therefore I have put the resolution in that form.

Mr. ANTHONY. I believe the original resolution directing the publication of an edition of the impeachment trial provided for an index. I am not certain upon that; but whether it did or not, it was so absolutely necessary that the Committee on Printing directed an index to be prepared as the publication went on, but it is as yet incomplete, and as the Senator from Massachusetts suggests that the one prepared at the Globe office is very perfect it may be unnecessary to complete the other.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I desire to make one remark. I understand it has been proposed to have the index published three times; that is, that it be included in each one of the three volumes constituting the proceedings. I hope the committee will only publish it once, at the end of the last volume. This is a book for libraries, and it ought to be published in the usual manner. We ought not to duplicate matter and swell this publication, which is very large anyhow, by publishing three times over the same matter. In libraries, when works consisting of more than one volume are used, the index in the last volume, which is always referred to, is sufficiently convenient. I suppose this idea of having the index in each volume arises from the fact that that is the manner of publishing the Globe, but that is a very different kind of work, and is very bulky. As this is a library publication, and will be in the hands of gentlemen who are careful of books and accustomed to their use, I hope we shall have the index published only once, and in the ordinary manner, at the end of the concluding volume.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the resolution had better be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have drawn the resolution that the Committee on Printing be directed to provide for an index.

Mr. ANTHONY. Very well.

The resolution was agreed to.

SAMUEL N. MILLER.

Mr. WILLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 454) for the relief of Samuel N. Miller, reported from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to authorize Samuel N. Miller, who obtained a patent for an improved compound anchor, dated June 29, 1852, for fourteen years, which expired on the 29th of June, 1866, to apply to the Commissioner of Patents for the extension of the patent for seven years, under the regulations now in force in relation to the extension of patents. The Commissioner of Patents is to investigate and decide the application for extension on the same evidence and in the same manner as other applications for extension are decided; but the application is to be made within sixty days after the approval of the act, and the decision of the Commissioner to be rendered within ninety days from the filing of the application in the Patent Office; no person who may have manufactured or used the improved compound anchor between the expiration of the patent and the approval of the act is to be held responsible in damages.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. McCREERY. I have just received a letter from my colleague, [Hon. GARRETT DAVIS,] informing me that he has been summoned home by a letter informing him of sickness in his family, and requesting me to make an application that the Senate will grant him indefinite leave of absence. I make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky moves that his colleague [Mr. DAVIS] have indefinite leave of absence.

Mr. DRAKE. When I asked leave of absence last year I was informed by the senior Senators here that that was a thing never done in the Senate; that Senators had the right to go and come as they pleased without asking leave of the Senate; and I suppose there is no necessity for formal leave of absence being granted in this case.

Mr. McCREERY. I will remind the Senator from Missouri that indefinite leave of absence was granted to Mr. GRIMES the other day, and I make this application on behalf of Mr. DAVIS at his request.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There is no rule on the subject. It is entirely unnecessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky, that his colleague have indefinite leave of absence from attendance on the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

DISTRICT JAIL.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I ask the Senate to take up for consideration a bill to which I called its attention some time ago, which it is very necessary to pass soon, if it is to pass at all, in reference to the erection of a jail in this city. I think it can be passed in a few minutes. I move to take up House bill No. 784.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 784) to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of a jail in and for the District of Columbia," approved July 25, 1866, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, the unfinished business of yesterday is regularly before the Senate.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I ask the Senator from Illinois [Mr. TRUMBULL] to allow this bill to be disposed of. It has been read through; there are a few amendments reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and there is an amendment agreed upon between that committee and the Committee on the District of Columbia which I think will settle the matter in a few minutes. I think it will occasion no debate, because both committees have agreed on it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I have no objection to the Arkansas bill being laid aside informally for a few minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the unfinished business of yesterday will be laid aside informally. The Chair hears no objection to that course. The amendments reported to House bill No. 784 will be read.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Before the Clerk proceeds to read the amendments, I wish to make a statement which I suppose will be satisfactory to the Senate. This bill was originally passed by the House of Representatives. Certain amendments to it were agreed on by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. Those amendments were submitted to the chairman of the committee on the part of the House. They were not read to him, but it was stated to him what they would be, and he said they would be entirely satisfactory to him. I think they put the bill in better shape. Afterward the bill, when reported to the Senate, was taken up by the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I am informed by the member of that committee who has the subject in charge, so far as that committee are concerned, that they have examined it also, and are perfectly satisfied with it with the exception that they desire to make one or two amendments which have been submitted to me and which I have agreed to. So I think the bill will be in as good a shape as we can put it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be read.

The amendments were read in their order. The first was to strike out the first and second sections of the bill, in these words:

That the act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of a jail in and for the District of Columbia" be, and is hereby, amended so as to read as follows, to wit: that the contracts heretofore attempted to be made under the act of which this is amendatory, by the Secretary of the Interior on behalf of the United States, with W. H. Allen and others, for the building of the new jail for the District of Columbia, be, and hereby are, declared null and void, and shall thenceforth be treated as of no force or effect, and no money shall be paid nor any work done thereunder; and that the plans and specifications made by E. Faxon, and upon which said contracts were attempted to be made, be, and are hereby, rejected and abandoned as unsuitable for the purpose for which they were designed and not in accordance with existing laws.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That Bartholomew Oertly, Sayles J. Bowen, and J. M. Edmunds be, and hereby are, appointed a board of commissioners for the construction of the new jail in the District of Columbia, and they are hereby authorized and directed to immediately select a suitable site on some of the public grounds belonging to the United States in the city of Washington on which to erect said jail, and as soon as said selection shall be made they shall report the same to Congress for approval or disapproval, and whenever Congress shall approve a selection made by said board the ground so selected shall thenceforth be set apart for said jail, and until its completion be under the control of said board. And the said board at the earliest possible period after such approval shall procure plans and specifications of a jail suitable for the accommodation of three hundred persons, or as near that number as practicable, which said plans and specifications shall be in all respects complete and perfected; and if, on examination of the same, they shall be approved and adopted, certificates of such adoption and approval shall be entered thereon, signed by each member of the board, or a majority thereof, and be carefully preserved by them.

And in lieu thereof to insert three sections, in these words:

That the selection of a site for the erection of a jail in the District of Columbia made by the Secretary of the Interior, under and by virtue of laws heretofore enacted, be, and the same is hereby, suspended; and that any plan or plans heretofore approved by the said Secretary for the erection of such jail be, and the same are hereby, rejected; and that any and all contracts heretofore entered into by the said Secretary for the construction of such jail be, and the same are hereby, declared null and void, and not in accordance with the laws authorizing the adoption of plans and the execution of contracts for the purpose aforesaid.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Committees of the Senate and House of Representatives upon Public Buildings and Grounds, acting in conjunction, be, and are hereby, authorized to select a site for the erection of a new jail in the District of Columbia upon some of the public grounds in the city of Washington belonging to the United States, and when said site shall be so selected a certificate of such selection shall be filed in the Department of the Interior, which certificate shall be signed by the chairman of said committees. In case said committees shall be of opinion that no suitable site can be designated upon any of the aforesaid public grounds, they shall so report to the respective Houses, and recommend such further measures in relation thereto as they may judge expedient.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That in case a site should be selected as provided for in the preceding section, the Secretary of the Interior shall forthwith give notice thereof to the architect of the Capitol extension, whose duty it shall be, in conjunction with the architect of the Treasury Department and the officer of engineers in charge of the public buildings and grounds, to prepare suitable plans and specifications for the construction of such jail upon the site so selected, of sufficient dimensions to accommodate not less than two hundred persons, and so designed that said jail may, if necessary, at some future time, be so enlarged as to accommodate not less than three hundred persons without interfering with the harmony of the general design; and the plans and specifications made in pursuance of the foregoing provisions shall be submitted to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the two Houses of Congress, and shall be subject to their approval; and said plans and specifications, when approved by said committees, shall be certified by the chairman of said committees and deposited in the Department of the Interior.

Mr. HARLAN. I have no objection to the amendment proposed, except one. It provides for a selection by this committee of a site for a jail on public grounds. I am satisfied personally that this will be a waste of labor. There are but three spots of ground within the limits of Washington city, and as far as I know within the District of Columbia, that would be at all eligible. Two of these have heretofore been selected, and each rejected by Congress. One was selected near two years ago in the northeast corner of the city plot, and rejected by a joint resolution of Congress. Now we propose to reject the second one, which I am sure, personally, was the only eligible place remaining. I think it would be better to give this committee discretion to make a selection at once without requiring them to report to the two Houses. I make this suggestion, and, if it is acceptable to the Senator who has the bill in charge, I should like to have it adopted; if not, I will make no further objection.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will simply say that on the examination we made of the subject it did not appear to me quite so desperate a case as my friend supposes; and I am satisfied that if we do what he suggests we shall have difficulty in passing the proposition through the other House.

Mr. HARLAN. Very well.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have provided in this amendment that if no site is found that is considered eligible we shall then report to Congress and get an additional act.

Mr. JOHNSON. Can that be done during the session?

Mr. FESSENDEN. It may possibly.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line three of section four, [three,] to strike out the words "said board" and insert "the Secretary of the Interior."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the word "site," in line five of the same section, to insert "under the superintendence and direction of the architect of the Capitol extension, who shall furnish all necessary working plans, but shall not be entitled to receive any additional pay for his services."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the same section, after the word "purpose" in line eight to insert "the board of officers named in the preceding section."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line twenty-two of the same section, to strike strike out "said" and insert "the."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add to the section the words "and said contracts, when completed, shall be filed in the Department of the Interior."

The amendment was agreed to.

The section, as amended, reads:

And be it further enacted, That, as soon as said plans and specifications shall have been adopted and certified as aforesaid, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause a jail, in accordance therewith, to be constructed on said site, under the superintendence and direction of the architect of the Capitol extension, who shall furnish all necessary working plans, but shall not be entitled to receive any additional pay for his services; and for that purpose the board of officers named in the preceding section shall publish a notice for proposals for the construction thereof for at least thirty days in a leading newspaper in the city of Washington, which notice shall specify a place in the said city where the plans and specifications can be seen and a time when the contract shall be let; and said board shall let the whole work in one contract to the lowest and best bidder, who shall give satisfactory bond in the penal sum of $100,000, with sufficient sureties, to be approved in writing by said board, for the faithful completion of the work according to contract and to the satisfaction of said board: Provided, however, That said board may reject all bids if they deem them unreasonably high or unworthy of acceptance, and shall reject all that are above the sum of $200,000; And provided further, That no bid shall be considered unless it be accompanied with a satisfactory bond in the sum of $10,000, conditioned that the bidder shall enter into the contract if it be awarded him, and give the security required by this act for the completion of the work, or pay to the United States the difference between his bid and the one on which the contract shall be finally awarded and let. In the event of the rejection of all the bids new advertisements shall immediately be published as herein directed, and new bids be received by said board. And said contracts, when completed, shall be filed in the Department of the Interior.

The next amendment was in line nine of section five, [four,] to strike out "on the order of said board" and insert "by the Secretary of the Interior;" and in line nineteen, to strike out "they are" and insert "the Secretary of the Interior;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. [4] 5. And be it further enacted, That the unexpended portion of the appropriation heretofore made by the act of July 25, 1866, for the purpose of building a jail in said District of Columbia is hereby continued and renewed for said purpose, and in addition thereto such sum as shall be necessary to make the sum of $200,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be drawn by the Secretary of the Interior; and the contract price shall be paid in monthly installments, according to contract, as the work progresses, upon the certificate of the supervising architect having direction of the work, except that twenty per cent. of all estimates shall be retained as security until the completion of the entire work. It shall be the duty of said board to insert in the contract all such reasonable and usual provisions, conditions, and safeguards as they shall deem necessary for the protection of the United States, without specifying the same in the advertisements for proposals; and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, after the new jail is completed, to sell at public sale, on reasonable notice thereof, the materials of the old jail, now located on Judiciary square, and to pay the proceeds into the Treasury of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the fifth section, in the following words:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That after the contract for said jail shall be let, the said board shall select one of their number to superintend and direct, under the control and supervision of said board, the work of said jail; and the expense of said superintending, and of plans and specifications, shall not exceed the rates that are customary for similar work when done for individuals; and the price of the plans and specifications shall be paid, when they shall be approved, and that of the superintendent, as the work progresses, on the order of said board, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the seventh section, in these words:

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That each member of the board of commissioners shall receive, as full compensation for his services under this act, $1,000; and the sum necessary to pay the said board and the architect is hereby appropriated, to be paid, on the order of said board, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. A majority of the said board shall have power to do anything which is required of said board in this law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. Mr. President, it may be remembered that this subject was committed to a joint sub-committee from the two committees on the District of Columbia of the House of Representatives and of the Senate for examination in the first part of the session. While they were examining the contract for the building of a jail, the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in the House of Representatives introduced a resolution, which was passed, which authorized that committee also to investigate the same subject. After we had completed the work of investigation, I was called away to New Hampshire, and was gone three weeks. When I returned I found that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds had introduced a bill and a report in the House of Representatives upon this subject. The committee of which I am a member—the Committee on the District of Columbia—met and considered that report and bill, and concluded that they were perfectly satisfied with the bill which had been reported by the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Maine, or would be with a few amendments which they authorized me to propose. I therefore move in the second section, third line, after the word "grounds" to insert the words "and the District of Columbia;" so as to read "that the committees of the Senate and House of Representatives upon Public Buildings and Grounds and the District of Columbia," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. I move to substitute the word "committees" for "committee" in line fifteen of section three; and after the word "grounds," in the same line, to insert the words "and District of Columbia."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. In the ninth line of the fourth section, after the word "section," I move to insert "may contract with William H. Allen, whose agreement under the law of July 25, 1866, is hereby set aside, to construct the jail as stipulated in this act, provided he will abandon all claims under the former contract except for materials furnished and work actually done, and will bind himself, as hereinafter set forth, to complete said jail on such terms as the board may deem advantageous to the Government, but failing in this they."

I wish to say just one word in relation to this matter which I deem it my duty to say. In the report which was made to the House of Representatives by the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds there are some pretty severe and serious reflections made in relation to certain parties who were connected with this jail, and among others Mr. Faxon, who was the architect. I feel it my duty to say that the testimony as it was given to the Committee on the District of Columbia will not justify, in my judgment, the severity of the remarks made in regard to Mr. Faxon in this report. The report says:

"One witness, Mr. Gibbon, testifies that Mr. Faxon made corrupt proposals or suggestions to him, in connection with the jail, and talked to him of 'let ups,' &c. It is true Mr. Faxon denies much of what Mr. Gibbon has testified to; but apart from the fact that Mr. Gibbon, who is at present engaged in constructing the agricultural college, is a man of admitted good character, the circumstances detailed by him, as well as other facts in the investigation, go to corroborate his testimony."

Now, sir, I wish to say that the testimony given by Mr. Gibbon I think ought not to weigh very heavily against Mr. Faxon, inasmuch as in the testimony which he gave he stated that he himself had offered $3,000 to Mr. Ewing of this city if he would secure to him this same contract; and a man who himself makes proposals to other parties for a corrupt contract certainly is not the party to reflect upon other persons. I will say, furthermore, that when this gentleman came before the committee he on one occasion was so intoxicated that he interrupted all business in the committee, and we found it necessary to say to him that he must either keep order or leave the committee-room. This is the gentleman who reflects on Mr. Faxon's character as an architect and upon his moral character as a man! Mr. Faxon is dead, and it seems to me it is nothing more than justice to the dead that I should say that this report is not borne out by the testimony which was presented to our committee.

I stated, sir, early in the session, when I introduced a resolution asking that the work upon the jail might be suspended for forty days, that an individual had been before the committee stating that evidence would be placed before the committee of corruption on the part of certain Government officers, and that he intimated pretty strongly that the Secretary of the Interior was mixed up with this matter. Now, sir, I feel that I ought to say that the testimony, when it was given before the committee, did not bear out that statement of this gentleman. There was no evidence whatever that the Secretary of the Interior practiced any corruption or any dishonesty in letting the contract to Mr. Allen. The only point on which the committee could reflect upon the Secretary of the Interior, or even upon Mr. Faxon, was that they threw out the five lowest bids on the ground that they were irregular; and the ground of irregularity was that the parties who made the bids did not state the material of which they would build the jail. In the specification it was provided that the jail should be built either of marble or of granite or of Seneca stone, a kind of red sand stone; and in the contract with Mr. Allen it was stipulated that the jail should be built of Seneca stone, the cheapest of the three kinds of stone. The parties who made those original bids could have been held to either of the kinds of stone if they did not stipulate which they would build the jail of in their bids; so that the committee did not see that their bids were irregular. It was recommended to the Secretary of the Interior by Mr. Faxon, who was the architect of the jail, that these bids should be thrown out, because they were irregular; he acquiesced in that recommendation of Mr. Faxon, and that is the extent of his offending.

There was no evidence before the committee that Mr. Allen was in any way derelict in the securing of this contract, that he did anything wrong or was in any way censurable; and it seems but just that he should not suffer on account of the setting aside of this contract. He will probably come in for damages if he does not secure the contract for the jail which is hereafter to be built, and it will ruin him if he does not receive pay for what he has expended thus far on the jail. It seems, therefore, but just that if the Government can employ him without detriment he should be employed.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have no objection to the amendment now proposed. I accede to the force of the suggestions made by the Senator from New Hampshire in relation to it. I am not satisfied, having read the report, that Mr. Allen is in any particular fault in reference to his work so far as he has gone. I do not know how that is. There was an irregularity undoubtedly in the letting originally, and it has become perfectly manifest that that contract, whatever may be the consequences, must be broken up; that it will not do to build a jail upon the place selected and of the character which the first act provided for. Still Mr. Allen has made all his preparations and has been at some expense. I understand that he is very anxious to secure the contract now for the jail as we propose to build it, for the reason stated by the Senator from New Hampshire, that he will be exceedingly injured, if not ruined, if he does not secure the contract on account of the expense he has been at in his preparations, &c. In addition to that, so far as we are concerned, as we undertake from reasons of necessity to vacate that contract entirely, it is very questionable in my mind whether Mr. Allen might not have a pretty severe claim for damages against the Government for breaking up the contract. Therefore, if a new contract can be made according to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire with Mr. Allen on the terms stated—and I understand that Mr. Allen is perfectly willing to give up all claims for damages if he can have the contract—if it can be made with him upon satisfactory and proper terms, it is evidently very much for the advantage of the Government that it should be made with him, there being no dispute about the fact that he is a competent person; and it should be borne in mind also that the jail is to be built under the direction of a very competent man, Mr. Clark, the architect of the Capitol extension, who will see that it is properly executed. I think, therefore, it is no more than right and proper that this clause should be introduced; that if the gentlemen whom we appoint commissioners for the purpose can make a proper contract with Mr. Allen they shall do so; if not, that they shall put out bids for the completion of the work.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Who are the commissioners?

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will state. The bill originally proposed the erection of a jail capable of containing three hundred people for the sum of $200,000. That was the limit. It became perfectly manifest to the committee that it was impossible to erect a jail of that size for that amount. It cannot be done. It will cost not less probably than $300,000 or $350,000. But a jail which is large enough to accommodate two hundred people can be built for the original sum of $200,000. We therefore thought it better, and we agreed upon that, and the chairman of the House committee agreed to it also, that it was better to erect a jail large enough to accommodate two hundred people for $200,000, on a plan that would admit of extension hereafter, if it should be found necessary to extend it, without impairing the plan and proportions of the whole building. We therefore made that alteration in the House bill.

The House bill provided for a commission of three persons, consisting of Mr. Bowen, Mr. Edmunds, our postmaster, and a gentleman who is a subordinate officer in the office of the architect of the Treasury Department, to select a site and to make contracts and to do the work, and to pay them a salary of $1,000 each for doing it. We thought that that was entirely unnecessary. In the first place, we knew that there would be great difficulty as to the selection of a site, and we thought the only way we could settle that matter, without a quarrel all around, was to have it selected by Congress. We therefore thought that the Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds of the two Houses, to whom the subject has been referred, would be the proper persons to make the selection, and to them have been added, on motion, the Committees on the District of Columbia. I think they are large enough, and any site they agree upon will, no doubt, be approved. If we can agree upon a site on any of the public grounds it will be such as Congress will concur in.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Who, then, lets the contract?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then we provide that the persons to prepare a plan and submit it to the committees shall be the architect of the Capitol extension, (Mr. Clark,) the architect of the Treasury Department—both gentlemen of high reputation and unquestioned integrity, with whom we have had connection—and General Michler, or whoever may have charge of the public buildings and grounds. These three gentlemen are to have the direction. After the plan has been made by them and approved by the committees, then the jail is to be built by the Secretary of the Interior, under the superintendence of the architect of the Capitol extension, Mr. Clark.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the Secretary of the Interior let the contract?

Mr. FESSENDEN. No; this commission are to let the contract. It is provided that the gentleman who is to oversee the building, the architect of the Capitol extension, shall prepare the working plans, but shall receive no additional pay. I took pains to inquire of Mr. Clark, and he said he could do it as well as not. He is already receiving a salary. He will have time enough to attend to it and oversee and direct the erection of the building. Thus we save the expense of the salaries proposed to be paid by the House bill, and we have plans prepared under men of ascertained ability and the building erected under a gentleman in whom we all have confidence.

These are the alterations we have made in the bill. As I said before, I talked with the chairman of the committee on the part of the House and told him what we proposed to do, and he said he thought it was an improvement of the bill. Whether the House of Representatives will approve of this provision in regard to Mr. Allen I do not know, but I think it only just and proper. If agreed to, it may save the Government a considerable claim for damages. I understand that there is another case where a contract was set aside because it was not supposed to be let according to law, and damages to the amount of about forty thousand dollars have been recovered in the Court of Claims against us. I think the honorable Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARLAN] knows something about it; it was in regard to the Library. We wish to avoid that, if possible; but if we cannot avoid it we must meet it. It is evident that the plan hitherto agreed upon and the contract made cannot be carried out.

Mr. HOWE. Let me ask the Senator a question. I wish to know who is to determine whether a proper contract can be let with Mr. Allen or not?

Mr. FESSENDEN. These commissioners.

Mr. HOWE. The architects?

Mr. FESSENDEN. The architects and General Michler.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It ought to be subject to the approval of the committees.

Mr. HOWE. Have they discretionary authority to make such a contract with him as they please?

Mr. FESSENDEN. They have discretionary authority to make a contract with him not exceeding the amount that is appropriated, of course. If they cannot make one that is satisfactory to themselves then they must advertise for proposals.

Mr. HOWE. There is no restriction upon their authority to contract with Mr. Allen.

Mr. FESSENDEN. None at all.

Mr. HOWE. But if they cannot contract with him then they must let it to the lowest bidder.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then they must let it to the lowest bidder. We thought there was no danger about that, because Mr. Allen will know that if he does not submit proposals such as are satisfactory and reasonable he cannot get it and it will be let to others. For myself, I have such entire confidence in the capacity of these men to judge of what the building ought to cost, and in their integrity also, from my knowledge of them, that I suppose it would be perfectly useless to have anybody to review their decision. I think their decision is more likely to be satisfactory than that of anybody else. They are public officers receiving salary, and their own reputation would be at stake, and I think it is perfectly safe to leave it to them. I do not know to whom an appeal could be made from them with any prospect of doing better.

Mr. CORBETT. As I was a member of the committee of investigation on the subject of this jail, I should like to make a brief statement. As I understood it the evidence presented to our committee was that there were thrown out from the bids as informal a bid of D. M. Martin & Co. for $143,000; one from C. H. Merrill for $150,000; one from Samuel Wright for $154,000; one from H. Lamar & Co. for $166,000; one from J. W. Parish & Co. for $178,000; one from Francis A. Gibbon for $193,000, and one from Nicholas Acker, for $195,000, all coming within the limitation of $200,000 prescribed by Congress. The Secretary of the Interior decided to let the work out in detail, while the act of Congress contemplated letting it out in an entire contract to come within $200,000, and in that it would appear that the Secretary of the Interior did not act according to the contemplation of the act.

The fact is, and I think it should be stated in justice to Mr. Gibbon, although perhaps it does not modify the statement of my friend from New Hampshire, that Mr. Gibbon put in his bid for $193,861, and after he ascertained that the contract was to be let in detail he went to some lawyers whom he understood had influence, and whom some others parties had employed to obtain this contract, and offered, provided he could get the contract for his bid of $193,000, to pay them $3,000. That offer was made after he had put in his bid for the work, and not previously. I thought it due to Mr. Gibbon to state this fact.

Mr. JOHNSON. When this subject was before the Senate several weeks since, seeing by the report which was then before us that reflections were cast upon the contractor, Mr. Allen, I thought it proper to state, from my knowledge of him after an acquaintance of some ten or fifteen or twenty years, that I was satisfied injustice had been done him; and I am glad to hear that the examination which has been made since by the committee, of which the honorable member from New Hampshire was chairman, has brought him, at least, if not all of the committee, to the same conclusion.

The policy of this particular amendment would seem to me to be obvious. As the case now stands, no one pretends that Mr. Allen was to blame. The motive, and almost the exclusive motive for abandoning the contract, if I understand it, is because of the site which was selected by the Secretary. There is no reflection now upon the honesty of the contractor. With the selection of that site he had nothing to do; and if we now, as this bill does, put an end to the contract after he has expended a good deal of money in preparing to execute it, and has done a good deal of the work, and has lost what—but for his engaging in this work—he could have had, other employment in the erection of other buildings, he will have, I think, a claim upon the Government, and that claim undoubtedly he will attempt to enforce, and the chances are, if the law is with him, that very heavy damages may be the result of a suit. I concur, therefore, with the honorable member from Maine, as well as the honorable member from New Hampshire, that looking at it as a mere matter of policy, looking at the interest of the Government, it is very desirable that this amendment should be adopted.

Mr. HARLAN. I do not rise to object to this amendment, in fact I shall vote for it; but to say that, from the testimony taken by the Committee on the District of Columbia, I am able to verify the statements that have heretofore been made in relation to Mr. Allen. I have not examined the testimony that may be supposed to bear on other gentlemen whose names have been mentioned, but I have examined that part of the testimony to some extent, and I am satisfied that nothing appears that disparages him as a gentleman and as a capable builder.

The matter referred to by the Senator from Maine is a little overstated by him. A contract for constructing the library had been made and was rescinded, and a new contract let for a considerable sum of money less than the original contract—I think some twenty-five or twenty-six thousand dollars less than the old contract—but I have learned incidentally from the solicitor of the Court of Claims, that the old contractor brought a suit in that court and recovered about the amount of money that was supposed to have been saved on the new contract, about twenty-six thousand dollars, I think; though the solicitor has taken an appeal to the Supreme Court—the question is not finally settled—and I am not of the opinion that the contractor will recover, ultimately, anything, though he may.

I do believe, however, that this contractor, Mr. Allen, would be entitled to just compensation for any losses that he may have sustained on account of the change of the location of this jail. I mentioned this when the subject was up before, and I sustained the motion for the inquiry and now sustain this bill, not on account of anything that appears in relation to the contract or the manner of its execution, but purely because I think the location is not a suitable one. It is too near the Capitol, and I am quite sure that every Senator and member would regret to see a jail erected on those grounds. I therefore sustain this bill and the amendment as proposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time; it was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 448) to change the name of the ship Golconda;

A bill (H. R. No. 538) to extend the boundaries of the collection district of Philadelphia, so as to include the whole consolidated city of Philadelphia; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 278) to supply books and public documents to the national asylum for disabled volunteer soldiers.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. CONKLING. I move that the heirs of Joshua Chamberlain have leave to withdraw from the Senate files papers which are here relating to their case, that they may be used for reference in the House of Representatives. There has been no adverse report.

Leave was granted.

IMPEACHMENT OF PRESIDENT—PRIVILEGE.

Mr. ROSS. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives be requested to furnish to the Senate, for the use of the Senate committee appointed for the investigation of charges of corruption in connection with the trial of the impeachment of the President, all testimony in relation thereto which has been taken by the managers of the impeachment on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CONNESS. It would be manifestly improper to send for a part of that testimony. When the House of Representatives shall have concluded their investigation they will undoubtedly send the testimony to us.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator object?

Mr. CONNESS. Yes, sir.

Mr. SUMNER. I object to its consideration to-day.

Mr. CONNESS. Or to-morrow either.

Mr. SUMNER. I think we should reflect upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the resolution lies over, under the rule.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A bill (H. R. No. 448) to change the name of the ship Golconda; and

A bill (H. R. No. 538) to extend the boundaries of the collection district of Philadelphia so as to include the whole consolidated city of Philadelphia.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 278) to supply books and public documents to the national asylum for disabled volunteer soldiers was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

REPRESENTATION OF ARKANSAS.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I call for the order of the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The order of the day is before the Senate, having been laid aside informally.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1039) to admit the State of Arkansas to representation in Congress.

Mr. DRAKE. Mr. President, the debate on which the Senate entered yesterday satisfied me that the amendment which I had offered to the bill ought to be modified further. The fact brought to the attention of the Senate by the honorable Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING,] that in the act of March 2, 1867, one of the conditions precedent to the admission of any of the rebel States to representation in Congress was that the pending amendment of the Constitution of the United States, known as article fourteen, should first have become a part of the Constitution of the United States, was a fact that had escaped my recollection. The bill having been passed before I came into the Senate, that feature of it was not fresh in my mind. I am satisfied, upon reflection, that not one of those States should be admitted to representation in Congress until that constitutional amendment shall have become a part of the constitution; and, therefore, to present that point distinctly for the consideration of the Senate in connection with the other matter, I ask leave again to modify the amendment of the bill which I presented in the shape in which I now send it to the Clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The modification the Senator proposes will be in order when the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. FERRY] shall have been disposed of. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut. The modification, however, will be read for the information of the Senate, and will be considered at the proper time.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment of Mr. DRAKE as modified, which was to strike out all of the bill after the enacting clause and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That, upon the fundamental condition hereinafter expressed, the State of Arkansas, under and with the constitution thereof adopted in the year 1863, shall be entitled to be admitted to representation in Congress as one of the States of the Union as soon as the amendment of the Constitution of the United States proposed by the Thirty-Ninth Congress, and known as article fourteen, shall have become a part of that constitution: Provided, That the Legislature of said State shall have first passed an act agreeing on behalf of said State to the following fundamental condition of such admission, to wit: that there shall never be in said State any denial or abridgment of the elective franchise or of any other right to any person by reason or on account of race or color, excepting Indians not taxed; and that any such denial or abridgment shall authorize the exclusion, while it continues, of said State from representation in Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is upon the amendment moved by the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. FERRY. I call for the yeas and nays upon that question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORTON. I should like to hear the amendment reported.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, which was to strike out all of the bill after the word "Union" in the fourth line, in the following words:

Upon the following fundamental condition: that the constitution of Arkansas shall never be so amended or changed as to deprive any citizen or class of citizens of the United States of the right to vote who are entitled to vote by the constitution herein recognised, except as a punishment for such crimes as are now felonies at common law, whereof they shall have been duly convicted.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the State of Arkansas is entitled and admitted to representation in Congress as one of the States of the Union.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope most earnestly that the proposed amendment will not be adopted. I think that the bill, if that amendment is adopted, would be worse than nothing, and a source of peril to this Republic.

Mr. FERRY. Mr. President, the bill as proposed to be amended by the amendment now under consideration is in exact accordance with the reconstruction laws passed by Congress during the last year and a half, and is in fulfillment of the pledge given over and over again by this Congress that upon compliance with certain conditions these States should be admitted to representation in Congress and to all Federal functions; and it is because, among other things, I do not wish to see the plighted faith of Congress, the plighted faith of the great party to which I belong, and connected and bound up with which I believe are all the interests of this country, broken by this same Congress, that I wish to have the bill passed without imposing further conditions than our former legislation had imposed.

In addition, I cannot but regard the condition as it came to us from the House of Representatives as violative, not simply of the spirit of the Constitution of the United States, but violative of the fundamental principles upon which republican governments rest everywhere; for it is a binding of all posterity, or an attempting to bind all posterity, in the State of Arkansas from altering, amending, or abolishing their constitution, even within the limitations and restrictions imposed by the Constitution of the United States; and, as I said yesterday, I believe that not even the people of Arkansas, in convention assembled, can make a compact with the Government of the United States to prevent the future change of the constitution of that State by the people thereof in the prescribed mode and within the limitations and restrictions of the Constitution of the United States. Because, then, I am of opinion that the imposition of this condition at the present time is a breach of the faith which Congress has given not only to those States, but to the people of the entire United States; and because I believe the condition sent to us is violative of the spirit of the Constitution and of the fundamental principles of republican government, I desire to see this amendment adopted.

Mr. DRAKE. Mr. President, I am very much surprised at the evident mistake of fact into which the honorable Senator from Connecticut has fallen with regard to these States. I confess that I do not understand how it is that the Senator has overlooked the fact that in the act of March 2, 1867, which was the initial point of all this work of reconstruction under the authority of Congress, there were several facts required to exist before any of these States could be admitted into the Union, and that among these facts was, that the pending constitutional amendment, known as article fourteen, should have become a part of the Constitution.

Mr. FERRY. Arkansas has ratified that amendment.

Mr. DRAKE. Yes, sir; and the law required that each of these States should have ratified it; and it required further that it should have become a part of the Constitution; and so it is that we are invoked now, at the very time of all others when, in my judgment, we should not be invoked to do it, to let in these States one by one before that fundamental condition precedent has been complied with, to wit: the adoption of the constitutional amendment and its becoming a part of the Constitution of the country. Twenty-eight States are needed to ratify that amendment in order to make it a part of the Constitution. Twenty-one only, including Arkansas, have ratified it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Do you hold that to be so?

Mr. DRAKE. I hold it to be so, that but twenty-one have ratified it.

Mr. FOWLER. Does it require twenty-eight?

Mr. DRAKE. It does require twenty-eight, in my judgment. At any rate, you never can get it declared in any such way as to give satisfaction and peace to the people of this country, and the conviction that it is rightfully done, until twenty-eight have ratified it. If Ohio and New Jersey had let their ratifications stand, twenty-three would be the number now; but they have revoked their ratifications, as, in my judgment, they had the undoubted right to do at any moment before the requisite number had been obtained. Therefore, we are standing here now with the ratifications of only twenty-one States. Suppose that others may differ with me about the right of those States to withdraw their ratification, at any rate it is a question, and we ought not to proceed one step in this case leaving any debatable ground behind us. Seven more States have to ratify this constitutional amendment before it becomes a part of the Constitution; and now the proposition of the Senator from Connecticut is to ignore and throw away utterly that particular condition of the admission of these States and to let them in, one by one, before that great amendment has been adopted. Mr. President, I will not vote to admit one of them, under any circumstances whatever, until that amendment is a part of the Constitution. It is to incorporate that feature in the admission of this State that I have modified my amendment so as to allow the admission when that amendment shall have become a part of the Constitution, and not before.

Sir, I do not understand this precipitancy about this matter. We have done without representation from these States in Congress for seven years, and certainly we can do without them for seven months to come; ay, sir, we can do just as well without them for seven years to come; and in my opinion it would be better for the interests of the whole country that they should not be admitted until loyal supremacy in every one of them and over every foot of every one of them shall have been reasserted and reestablished. What are we to gain, what is the country to gain, by pushing these States back into the places that they pushed themselves out of by war and bloodshed? Where is the benefit? Where is the benefit in a national point of view? Where is the benefit in a party point of view, if you choose to speak of it in that respect? You are hastening back States here where rebelism is pervading them from end to end; and what kind of men are you going to have in Congress when you do get them back here? Sir, you had better look at that. What do you know about the Senators and Representatives that are to come here? What do you know about the men that are to come here from States all steeped as they have been for years in treachery and treason? Do you think they will all send men here who do not know how to be treacherous, too? Why this haste? Other Senators have stuck here for months past upon the conditions of the reconstruction acts, and now you want to rush these States in in violation of those conditions.

Sir, I stand by those acts. I oppose with all my might the admission of a single one of these States until that fourteenth article is a part of the Constitution. I will not vote for the admission of one of them till that event occurs.

Mr. MORTON. I shall say but a few words, Mr. President. I should like to inquire what is to be gained by keeping the State of Arkansas out until all the other States are prepared to come in with her, and to come in, as intimated by the Senator from Missouri, in an omnibus bill, all at once? What is to be gained by keeping the State of Arkansas under a non-descript government which is principally rebel, with rebel State officers, with rebel county officers, and with no protection to Union men except that which is furnished by the military, and which is very slight and only goes to protection against the principal outrages that may be committed?

Mr. President, is it not better for the interest of the Government, the interest of the Union men of these several States, to admit them as fast as they are prepared to come in under a loyal State government, with loyal officers, under constitutions guarantying equal rights to all men, to receive them one by one as they are ready to come? Can any benefit be suggested by keeping Arkansas under her present form of government and in her present condition until, if you please, Virginia, which is perhaps in the worst condition of any of these States, is prepared to come in along with her? No, sir; I say bring them in, one at a time, just as fast as they are prepared and qualified to come in. It is due to the Union men of those States to admit them, and the Union party in the whole land will be strengthened.

The Senator from Missouri refers to the reconstruction act of March 2, 1867, which I believe contains the following language:

"And when they shall have adopted the amendment of the Constitution of the United States proposed by the Thirty-Ninth Congress, and known as article fourteen, and when said article shall have become a part of the Constitution of the United States."

When it shall have become a part of the Constitution of the United States, then these States may be admitted. I should like to ask the Senator how it can become a part of the Constitution of the United States unless these States are first admitted, because their vote of ratification cannot be counted until after the admission of the State. Therefore, in order to give effect to it they must first be admitted, because their votes of ratification go for nothing while they occupy their present condition. Do not all admit that? Therefore, to construe this provision literally, it is impracticable—except upon the doctrine of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. SUMNER,] that these States are not to be counted as States in determining the question of ratification, and that we shall simply look to two thirds of those that were in an organized condition at the time of the passage of the constitutional amendment, according to which proposition it is already ratified.

But, sir, to give it a liberal construction, and to suppose that it means until enough of these States shall have ratified the constitutional amendment in advance, so that when admitted afterward the number will be sufficient to make it a part of the Constitution, and thus the amendment becoming a part of the Constitution after their admission and by effect of it, giving it that liberal construction, I still ask what is to be gained? If South Carolina, North Carolina, Georgia, and Arkansas are ready to come in, have organized their new State governments, shall we keep them out one, two, three, or seven years, as the Senator says, until Virginia is ready to come in? Shall we keep these States under their present unfortunate governments, in their present disorganized and disorderly condition, instead of giving the people the benefit of a regularly organized loyal State government? If Arkansas has organized that kind of government, let us give her the benefit of it at once. If Georgia has done the same thing, give her the benefit of it; first, of course, requiring the State Legislature to ratify the constitutional amendment, so far as Georgia is concerned, and so on.

Now, sir, how are we to construe this provision? Giving it a literal construction, it is inoperative altogether. To give it a liberal construction in the way I suggest, which is not the one given to it by the Senator from Missouri, still we have a right to waive it. The same Congress that made the law can waive it; and when there is no possible advantage to be gained, but every disadvantage may be suffered by delay, let us take these States by the hand, one at a time, as they shall come to us. Sir, the loyal State government of Arkansas has been organized under great difficulties. The Union men there have made great sacrifices and have incurred great labor. Shall they keep up the present organized condition of the Union party there from year to year until such time as we choose to admit them and all the rest are prepared to come in at the same time? Sir, they cannot sustain themselves. The State government is in the hands of their enemies. It would be a matter of gross, of criminal injustice to them, in my opinion, to say, "You must wait until Old Virginia"—a State over which the people of Arkansas have no power—"shall be ready to come in along with you." No, sir, let us take these States by the hand, one by one, when they shall be prepared to come in.

Mr. McCREERY. Mr. President, as one of the representatives of the State of Kentucky, I am unwilling to cast a vote upon the measure now under consideration without attempting to assign some of the reasons for my opposition.

When I entered the Senate I expected that many months would elapse before I would take an active part in its deliberations. But the public servant who does not raise his voice in the present crisis may find himself and his constituents as voiceless as the tomb before the expiration of a single year. The current of events is deep and turbid, and sweeps on rapidly to destruction. The glorious past, with its sunshine and its safety, fades from the mind, and the dread future, with its darkness and its danger, rises before us. In less time than it took our ancestors to achieve their independence the Republican party have uprooted the fundamental principles of our system. The safeguards which were thrown around the rights of the citizen, as well as the landmarks which were erected to protect the different departments in the exercise of their delegated powers, have been obliterated and destroyed; and, instead of the symmetry and simplicity of our old republican institutions, the nation this day groans under the weight of a compound Radical iniquity, which may be denominated a civil, circumspect, military, despotic, represented, and unrepresented confederation of States, principalities, and powers.

The wise and good men who framed our Constitution were careful to mark the lines of power and to place limitations upon its arbitrary exercise. The controlling purpose of their minds was to promote the general welfare, to place every citizen and every State on a footing of perfect equality of right and privilege with every other citizen and every other State. Taxation, representation, and, in fact, all the burdens and blessings of civil government, were arranged, as far as it was practicable and possible, upon this basis of equality. If I may be pardoned for the utterance of an unwelcome truth, the rights and privileges of citizenship were confined, and were intended to be confined, to the white people of the United States; and negroes and Indians were excluded, and intended to be excluded, from their exercise. The negro was the subject of taxation as well as of representation, but the white man paid for him and voted for him; and, as far as my reading has gone, I do not remember that any statesman of that day made any claim of social and political equality in his behalf. The Constitution recognized him as property, and that recognition has been repeatedly confirmed by judicial sanction. Our Constitution, then, was made by white men, and established a perfect equality of right among white men.

Its general provisions and its positive declarations were designed to preserve and maintain this sacred principle of equality intact and inviolate. The basis of representation was settled, uniformity of taxation established, and to avoid the possibility of undue advantage it was solemnly affirmed that exclusive privileges should never be granted to any man or set of men. Such is the true intent and meaning of the Constitution; and I submit the question whether or not the present revenue laws of the United States are in accordance with these wise, salutary, and just provisions? For by that ordeal, in my humble judgment, they must stand or fall. I would also inquire whether or not a contract entered into between the Government and individuals exempting the latter from their obligation to pay their just and equal proportion of taxation has any binding force? whether the taxation is present or prospective, is or is not such a contract unconstitutional, null, and void? Can a loyal man bargain with his Government for such an advantage over his fellow-citizens? Can the Government itself divide our people into two distinct classes, informing one class that they are to pay all taxes and the other that they are to pay none? If the Government has such powers, the limitations and restrictions of the Constitution are the idlest and emptiest vanities that ever deluded or amused mankind.

The Constitution is and must remain the supreme law of this land until revolution, civil or military, shall establish a higher law in its stead. With me there is no law higher than the Constitution. I admire its precepts; I desire to live in obedience to its requirements and to die under its protection, leaving it in full force and vigor as an inheritance to my children and to posterity. We have been free, happy, and prosperous under its influence, and we turn with pleasure from the rash and reckless radicalism of the present hour to the cherished memories of the patriots who spent their lives in its defense. The mortal remains of Daniel Webster have passed to the grave, but he has left a fame which passeth not away. By common consent in intellectual majesty he stood peerless and alone. In Senate and in Cabinet, at home and abroad, by land and by sea, he received the homage of the literate and the illiterate of every country and of every clime. Tyrants respected him as their most powerful foe, and the friends of civil and religious liberty throughout the world acknowledged him as their champion. Although he was five thousand miles from the scene, his tongue was as potent in the cause of Greece as the sword of Bozzaris. His patriotism was not sectional and confined to certain degrees of latitude and longitude, but it embraced the United States of America and received the Constitution as the bond, and the sole bond, of their Union.

The ardor of youth, the strength of manhood, and the maturity of age were industriously employed in studying and unfolding the harmony and beauty of our complex system. His mission was a success, and he won a crown more honorable than the laurel worn by the Roman conqueror. When the African race shall have become extinct on this continent; when all the Radicals here and elsewhere shall be dead and forgotten; when the stones which mark their resting-places shall have crumbled into sand, even then, and for ages afterward, the granite hills and the green valleys of Massachusetts and New Hampshire will be associated in grateful hearts with the name and the fame of Daniel Webster, the great expounder of the American Constitution. Would that Massachusetts and New Hampshire, or all New England combined, could furnish another Webster; that Clay could rise from the shades of Ashland, or that Jackson could emerge from the solitudes of the Hermitage—one or all—for an effort such as they, and they only, could make to save the Constitution.

But the subjects of discussion have greatly changed of late. Constitutional issues are no longer in vogue, but questions of finance are the engrossing topics of the day. The Government requires a vast amount of finance, and from the present scale of taxation it appears to be seeking the precise point at which the laborer can subsist, intending to appropriate the balance of his means to its own purpose. That point is not only reached, but it is passed already. During the last fiscal year more than five hundred million dollars were expended. This entire sum has to be raised by taxation. The tax collected by State governments for State purposes, and to pay interest on State bonds, is about half as much, or $250,000,000, and the county and city taxes collected for county and city purposes, and to pay interest on county and city bonds, is probably equal to the last sum of $250,000,000. Casting these three amounts together, it is clear that $1,000,000,000 is drawn yearly from the pockets of the people in the shape of taxation; and a hundred millions more may be added for the cost of assessment and collection. It then rises to the grand total of $1,100,000,000.

Now, it is a question well worthy of the calm and sober reflection of the farming and laboring classes of community, whether their industry can thrive and prosper under the influence of such a drain upon their resources. For, I suppose, by this time, it will be admitted by most men that productive labor pays all taxation, and the laboring man who is of opinion that he pays no taxes is making a great mistake and practicing a gross deception upon himself. Is it not manifest that the policy of the Government will compel the association of capital, and the formation of huge monopolies, whose interest and inclination will prompt them to drive every man of slender means from the trade? The cash capital of the country will be concentrated in the hands of chartered companies and monopolies. What chance, then, will labor have in the struggle, crushed to earth by an annual tax of more than a thousand million dollars? Fettered and powerless, it will become the slave of capital, with every avenue to wealth, to independence, to comfort closed in its face. The lapse of a dozen years under the present policy will develop an amount of ruin and destitution without a parallel in history. A man will not work when his labor enriches not himself but another. The swarms of beggars who infested this city during the last winter, obstructing your passage at every corner, and intercepting you at every crossing, were only the pioneers of the hungry hordes who will marshal themselves on your highways to win a support from voluntary or involuntary contribution.

The plea of necessity is sometimes urged even by a Government as a justification of the exercise of unauthorized power, and famine will put the same plea in the mouth of a wretch impelled by despair to the commission of crime. Instances of this description will multiply with fearful rapidity. Your jails and your prisons will be insufficient to accommodate the throng who will actually seek them for shelter and for food. The gentleman who has charge of the Kentucky penitentiary is growing prematurely gray from anxiety and apprehension. [Laughter.] The idle herd of vagabonds consigned by the law to his keeping are eating out his substance, and poverty and bankruptcy are before him. Every county in the State is a recruiting station for his forces, and the same causes which swell his numbers are reducing his sales and enhancing his losses. But why do I refer to the keeper, when keeper and convict are alike the victims of a policy, the inevitable tendency of which is to strike down all labor of every character and place it at the feet of a few favored capitalists of the country?

But this process of centralization is not confined to wealth; it extends also to the powers of government. The rights of the sovereign States have been disregarded and trampled upon, until derision is the only reply that is made to their assertion. My own district in Kentucky, which sent several regiments of white soldiers and a brigade or so of negroes to the Union Army, has been disfranchised, and is to-day unrepresented in the other end of the Capitol. That vacant seat is even more eloquent than the gifted Representative who was elected to fill it. It speaks of the past, and recalls the time when every sentinel from our noble State stood at his post. It points to the ballot-box which has been spurned, to the principles of representative government which have been outraged, and to a heartless affront to a friendly sovereign through an accredited ambassador. But we are left to form our own opinion as to the merits or demerits of the transaction. The chief importance of the matter arises from the fact that such proceedings are relied on as precedents, and, taken in connection with other assumptions, it seems to be the settled purpose of the legislative to absorb the executive and judicial departments, as well as to assail the elective franchise, which is the source of power in a republican government.

If the Radical party can concentrate the capital of the country in a few hands, and centralize the powers of government in Congress, where will be the guarantees of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness?

The bill under consideration is a novelty in American legislation. From what article or clause in the Constitution is the power derived to establish a government over a sovereign State, and to maintain it against the wishes of the people, by military force? When did Arkansas get out of the Union? Has she been out of the Union at all, and can such laws be rightfully imposed upon her if she has never been out; and whether in or out where is the warrant? If she is out, when and how did she get out?

From the action of Congress, and from the action of each and every department of this Government, it is clearly deducible that she never was out. We look in vain for a recognition of her separate existence, unless it may be found in the hostile legislation of Congress, which seems to be designed for her degradation and oppression. In common with the other southern States, by an ordinance of secession, she attempted to withdraw her allegiance from the flag and the Government of the United States; but was that attempt successful? Was the right of secession admitted or denied? After an effort for negotiation and peaceful settlement on the part of the South which was refused, the question was adjourned from the council to the field, and in characters red as blood and hot as fire the award has been rendered.

During the progress of the war that ensued, and speaking directly of the point at issue in the contest, the Supreme Court use the following language:

"Several of these States have combined to form a new confederacy, claiming to be acknowledged by the world as a sovereign state. Their right to do so is now being decided by wager of battle."

The question in dispute, the point in controversy, cannot be stated with greater clearness and precision, and no statement can have a superior weight of authority. It was not whether the southern people should be shorn of all rights; but whether they had the right to form a new confederacy. The obstinate struggle, the sacrifices, privations, and hardships endured on either side will be regarded by candid men as some evidence that both parties were satisfied of the justice of their cause. The integrity of the Government, the life of the nation, the union of the States, were the rallying cries on one side, and independence and resistance to oppression on the other. While such a purpose was never openly avowed by either at the beginning, still many reflecting men entertained a suspicion that slavery would be abolished or established, as the one or the other should prevail in the contest. Whether that suspicion was true or untrue is a matter of little practical consequence now, and the information would poorly compensate the labor of the investigation.

However that may be, the blast of the bugle fell upon willing ears, and strong arms and brave hearts responded to the call. The chivalry of America stood forth in proud array, and never since creation's dawn did such hosts assemble to desolate a Christian or a heathen land. Never did the demon of war hold high carnival amid such a scene of pomp and slaughter, feast and famine, revel and wretchedness. The sulphurous smoke darkened the sky and the bosom of the earth was marked with deep lines and furrows. She still wears the scars as the sad mementoes of civil strife. Midnight echoed the wail of the widow, and sun and stars were the silent witnesses of the tears and cries of her orphan children. I was opposed to that war. Its terrible consequences rest not at my door, and my soul is free alike from its glory or its guilt. I would not exchange this consciousness of innocence for the tall plume and the gilded spurs of the knight of Appomattox.

I was opposed to the war because I believed then, as I do now, that the difficulties might have been adjusted without the loss of a life or the shedding of one drop of blood; that our Union and our Constitution, blended in the affections of the people, might have been transmitted to future ages, gathering strength and vigor as experience should demonstrate their mutual dependence upon each other. The relation between them is so intimate and so delicate, that when you inflict a mortal wound upon one you slay the other.

Having called your attention to the view expressed by the Supreme Court, let us pursue the inquiry, and ascertain the purpose of Congress in making war upon the southern States. In 1861 Congress, by a vote almost unanimous, passed a resolution solemnly affirming—

"That the war then existing was not waged on the part of the Government in any spirit of oppression, nor for any purpose of conquest or subjugation, nor purpose of overthrowing or interfering with the rights or established institutions of the States, but to defend and maintain the supremacy of the Constitution, and to preserve the Union with all the dignity, equality, and rights of the several States unimpaired, and that as soon as these objects should be accomplished the war ought to cease."

Such Congress declared to be the purpose and the sole purpose of the war; but now when it is over, and peace is restored, the monstrous doctrine is advanced that by the laws of war the conqueror holds by conquest, and may extend his own terms to the vanquished. Was the union of these States established upon the laws and usages of war, or was it founded upon the guarantees of a written Constitution? Did the framers of that instrument ever contemplate that the larger States might wage war upon the weaker, and make lawful prize of the people and their territory?

One of the ablest defenders of this doctrine admits that, owing to the relations between the belligerents in this instance, no treaty can be formed as a basis of settlement; and hence the conclusion is unavoidable that the arbitrary edicts of military governors are the only measures to be known to the South as long as the North may desire the infliction. Is this "maintaining the supremacy of the Constitution?" Is this "preserving the Union with all the rights of the several States unimpaired?" Were such the views of the great Senator from Kentucky when he penned the resolution which bears his name? No, sir. Crittenden was the soul of honor and of truth, and had a lofty scorn for trickery, deception, and fraud. The laws of war cannot be relied on, for in this case, to use a phrase which has been much revived of late, Congress has made a law unto itself. I appeal to Senators not to repudiate their own action in a matter which involves the rights and privileges of seven or eight million citizens, not to wage a warfare more cruel, vexatious, and intolerable than an invading army upon men born to the same heritage with ourselves, not to stifle in their breasts the last hope of liberty and leave them to the sullen gloom of despair.

We will now proceed to examine the conduct of the President of the United States. On the 8th day of December, 1863, Abraham Lincoln issued a proclamation offering amnesty and pardon to certain persons who had been engaged in rebellion. Within less than four months afterward, on the 26th day of March, 1864, he issued another proclamation more liberal than the first, making exception of certain classes who were excluded from the benefits of its provisions, but clearly intimating that the excepted classes were still within contemplation of special clemency. In the last annual message which he ever sent to Congress he says that "special pardons have been granted to individuals of the excepted classes, and no voluntary application has been denied."

After the death of Mr. Lincoln Andrew Johnson was qualified as his successor, and among his early official acts was a note to the Attorney General calling for a legal construction of the proclamations of his predecessor. The reply of the Attorney General bears date May 1, 1865, and is of importance because, from his intimate relations and great admiration of President Lincoln, it may be considered as a reflection of his views upon the subject now under consideration. The Attorney General condemns reconstruction, urges restoration, and says emphatically that "mercy must be largely extended."

On the 29th day of the same month, and in accordance with the suggestions of his law adviser, Andrew Johnson issued his first proclamation of amnesty and pardon, excepting fourteen classes of persons from its benefits, providing, however, that special applications might be made in their behalf, and that clemency would be liberally extended according to the facts of the case.

Finally, on the 7th day of last September, Andrew Johnson, in order that full and beneficial pardon might be extended to a large number of persons excluded by former exceptions, issued a proclamation with only three classes embraced in the exceptions. The liberality, the justice, and the ability of this State paper are so conspicuous that I shall quote a few sentences that the country may mark the satisfactory reasons assigned for the general pardon it proclaims:

"And whereas there no longer exists any reasonable ground to apprehend, within the States which were involved in the late rebellion, any renewal thereof, or any unlawful resistance by the people of said States to the Constitution and laws of the United States; and whereas large standing armies, military occupation, martial-law, military tribunals, and the suspension of the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus and the right of trial by jury, are, in time of peace, dangerous to public liberty, incompatible with the individual rights of the citizen, contrary to the genius and spirit of our free institutions, and exhaustive of the national resources, and ought not, therefore, to be sanctioned or allowed, except in cases of actual necessity for repelling invasion or suppressing insurrection or rebellion; and whereas a retaliatory or vindictive policy, attended by unnecessary disqualifications, pains, penalties, confiscations, and disfranchisements, now, as always, could only tend to hinder reconciliation among the people and national restoration, while it must seriously embarrass, obstruct, and repress popular energies and national industry and enterprise."

After adducing the above and other considerations, the proclamation proceeds to pronounce full pardon to the southern people, excluding—

First. The president, vice president, heads of departments of the confederate government, its agents in foreign countries, and such as held military rank above brigadier general or naval rank above captain, and also Governors of States.

Second. Those who treated otherwise than as prisoners of war persons employed in the military or naval service of the United States.

Third. Persons confined or held to bail before or after conviction, and every one engaged, directly or indirectly, in the assassination of President Lincoln.

The number included in these exceptions is so inconsiderable that the pardon and amnesty may be considered as general, especially when it is remembered that not one in a hundred of the excepted classes has been indicted and prosecuted before the courts, which is the only means of punishing crime known to our Constitution and laws.

A question may arise in some minds as to the force and effect of these pardon and amnesty proclamations. I shall attempt to show that the President had ample authority to issue them, and that they operated as a positive absolution from guilt and an undertaking on the part of the Government that it should be forgotten and remembered no more. This pardoning power belongs to the executive branch of every well regulated Government upon earth. It is a power which is derived from the government and attributes of the Eternal God himself, and the man who has never been the subject of its influence is fit food for the worm that never dies.

The late Governor of my own State has been much censured for his liberal exercise of the pardoning power, but his slumbers will be as sweet and his carriage as erect as though his heart and his hand had never moved to the supplications of mercy. This gentle disposition is not confined to the good, the wise, and the great, but it pervades all classes and conditions of men. The savage thirsting for slaughter, with his victim writhing at the stake, has caught the inspiration from Divinity, and rushed, at the peril of his own life, to the rescue. Even the lower animals furnish us abundant proof that they are not insensible to the emotions of pity and compassion—a principle which the Creator, for beneficent purposes, has thus infused into all his creatures, was well worthy of an incorporation into the organic law of the land. The Constitution clothes the President with the "power to grant reprieves and pardons for offenses against the United States, except in cases of impeachment."

Radicalism itself has acknowledged the humanity and the justice of this wise provision. By an act of Congress passed and approved in July, 1862—

"The President is authorized, at any time hereafter, by proclamation to extend to persons who may have participated, in the existing rebellion, in any State or part thereof, pardon and amnesty, with such exceptions, and at such time and on such conditions as he may deem expedient for the public welfare."

This section of the law is simply a reenactment of the Constitution. It conferred no additional powers upon the President, nor did the supplemental act of the 19th of last July strip him of his pardoning power. That power is delegated to him by the Constitution, and Congress can neither enlarge nor restrict its exercise. These laws are, therefore, wholly unimportant, except as they furnish evidence of the change which peace has wrought in the radical sentiment of the country. While the war was raging proclamations of amnesty and pardon were freely offered, but in a time of profound peace the fountain of mercy and justice is closed. We could offer pardon to the rebel who stood with arms in his hand, but for the harmless civilian we have no commiseration.

The clause cited from the Constitution empowers the President to grant reprieves and pardons, except in cases of impeachment, and the act of 1862 was, at least, a popular indorsement of its exercise in this instance, without limitation as to time, exception, or condition. A proclamation under such circumstances has the very highest sanction, and all the authority, the force, and vitality of positive law. What effect has it, then, upon those who may have been accused or convicted of public offenses? Without the aid of a law dictionary I undertake to say that it expunges the guilt, restores rights and privileges, and hides the crime forever under the mantle of oblivion. The Government says, in effect, to the rebel: "We wash you of every stain; we restore you to your country and to society without a blemish upon your character; we not only forgive, but we forget the past." Proclamations of pardon and amnesty are as old as the world's history. Their purpose has been the same in all countries. At all times and everywhere it would have been a shameful breach of faith to have violated their provisions. The world is to be deluged with waters no more, and as often as the bright and beautiful colors of the rainbow encircle the sky we read the proclamation. The clouds were dark and the storm was long, but the loveliest hues of heaven and earth were blended into a sign of its termination.

One of the properties of a proclamation of pardon and amnesty is that it is irrevocable, and may be relied on in any court as a bar to any criminal prosecution. The fettered captive may languish in a dungeon where no light greets his eyes and no sound save the clank of his chain breaks the solemn silence around him; the halter may be prepared for his neck and the scaffold for his execution, but there is a power which can open his prison doors, knock off his irons, and restore him to light and to liberty.

The rebellion through which we have passed is not the first plot or conspiracy that ever was set on foot against the Federal authority. There have been a whisky insurrection, a Hartford convention, a South Carolina nullification, and a Dorr rebellion. But neither Washington nor Madison nor Jackson nor Tyler ever thought of inflicting the pains and the penalties, the confiscations and disfranchisements which follow in the train of modern reconstruction. Reconstruction, like some men of great prominence, was a very common word before the war; but it is now one of the most stupendous and terrible phrases of the English language. It has arraigned a President at the bar of the Senate; it has suspended the writ of habeas corpus; it has abolished trial by jury; it has subjected ten sovereign States to military domination; it has impoverished communities, depopulated districts, disfranchised an entire section, and now sweeps the South like the poisonous wind of the African desert, smiting and destroying everything that is good or valuable in the land. War, pestilence, and famine are calamities which have been endured, but the problem is yet to be solved whether the southern people can survive the horrors of reconstruction. Well may they pray for strength and fortitude to support them in the hour of their trial.

Why was it that the Presidents of former times treated rebellion and treason so mildly? Perhaps they were not inclined to persecute and oppress their fellow-citizens; perhaps they regarded kindness and forbearance as the best means of reconciliation; and perhaps they were of opinion that the Constitution gave the General Government no authority to disfranchise a State or an individual in a State. From the foundation of the Government to the end of the war the question of suffrage was a matter of State control, placed there by the Constitution and held there without controversy for three quarters of a century. Never was the contrary doctrine asserted until negro suffrage became necessary to sustain Radical supremacy. To secure ten States in the interest of Radicalism it was essential to franchise all the blacks and to disfranchise a large proportion of the white population. This revolution in our social and political system has been intrusted to a dictator at Washington, who is making rapid progress through the instrumentality of his subalterns in the southern States. Military boards and not civil officers are enrolling and registering the voters, deciding all points touching their qualifications. The dictator doubtless has the troops at his disposal to enforce the arbitrary judgments of his subordinates; but we are not discussing a question of force, but a question of right.

From what provision of the Constitution does this military board derive its existence or its extraordinary powers? What right has that board or any other military tribunal to bestow suffrage or to withhold suffrage from any man? Have the people become weary of attending to their own affairs and desirous of transferring their best interests to the safe keeping of a dictator? The theory of our governments, State and Federal, has been that the military should be subordinate to the civil; but a Radical Congress, composed of the representatives of a single section, and a standing army of sixty thousand men, have reversed the rule. The well settled usages of the country and the authority of four presidential proclamations, each of which was a pledge of the national faith, have been disregarded. Every man embraced by the terms of these proclamations is in law as completely restored to his rights as though he had never committed an offense, and nothing but a conviction of crime can deprive him of such rights. If the people of Kentucky are more unanimous in any one sentiment than any other, it is in the wish that the animosities and hostilities of the war may be buried and forgotten, and that a proclamation of general pardon and amnesty may be issued without delay restoring rights to all the citizens and peace to the whole country.

If I have been correctly understood, my position is: that the proclamations of Lincoln and Johnson placed the southern people not excluded by the exceptions in precisely the same attitude with respect to franchises and immunities that they occupied before the war; and while they do not recognize slavery they leave all other rights of property untouched and unimpaired. This is the fair construction and the legal operation of the papers themselves. Pains, penalties, disqualifications, and disfranchisements are wholly removed by pardon and amnesty. Transgressions red as scarlet are cleansed of their guilt, and the robe of innocence obliterates them from the memory.

My own attainments in the law are too slight and too superficial to claim any weight for my opinions, however thorough my convictions may be of their justice. But there are Senators in this body who have devoted their lives and their energies to legal pursuits, and honors and eminence have been the rewards of their toils and perseverance. They are the high priests of the profession, who have gone within the veil, and made their sacrifices in the holy of holies. Let these oracles declare the law, and say if my positions are not fairly deducible from the precepts engraven upon the Ark of the Covenant. If pardon and amnesty may be followed by pains, penalties, and disqualifications, let them so declare.

If I am wrong, I have the satisfaction of knowing that some of the ablest and truest men of the country concur in the opinions expressed; and that, while I have not adopted the language of the Supreme Court, I have at least presented an outline of their views. If I am right, pardon and amnesty restored the people of the southern States to the enjoyment of every civil right possessed by them anterior to the war. If they were entitled to trial by jury before the war, they are entitled to trial by jury now; if they could vote then, they can vote now; if they had the right of representation then, they have it now; and if, in fine, they lived in a sovereign State at that time they live in a sovereign State to-day; and no department of this Government can legitimately treat them otherwise than as the equals of the other citizens of the Republic. If Congress can hold the rights of the people of ten States in suspense may it not by war or by legislation increase the number until all the powers of Government are centralized in a single State or district, which may sit, like Rome, the arbitrary mistress of a hemisphere, with prætors and proconsuls governing and plundering the subject provinces?

It is difficult to conceive anything more unjust, unconstitutional, and impolitic than the exclusion of a State or a part of a State from its rights of representation. Such a power, in Congress or elsewhere, is subversive of every principle of representative republican government, and must precipitate the overthrow of our system. If you exclude now, does it not become a precedent for your own exclusion hereafter? Will not every repetition of the outrage produce alienation, dissension, anarchy, and strife, and hasten the day when laws shall issue from camps, and when grape and canister shall expound and enforce them?

Men change their political views, and, for reasons satisfactory to themselves, denounce and condemn the very measures which have met their sanction and approval. The Radical party, which was omnipotent a few years ago, is rapidly losing its strength, and in a short time will find itself in a hopeless minority. Neither the ingenuity of demagogues, nor the craft of wire-workers can prevent this inevitable result. Their doom is fixed, and military prestige cannot even grant them a respite. They may franchise the blacks and disfranchise the whites, they may strike down the Supreme Court, that great bulwark which was erected as a sure defense against usurpation; they may consolidate all the powers of Government, State and Federal, in a single department, or in the hands of a single person; they may maintain the present military establishment of sixty thousand men, with no enemy to encounter, to intimidate the people and compel their acquiescence. But all these contrivances, and twice as many more, are only calculated to swell the sum of their enormities and hasten the hour of their final overthrow.

In the brief space of time which is yet allotted to them let them employ themselves sedulously and prayerfully in efforts to restore the Constitution, to lessen the burdens and to build up the prosperity of the people, under the pious hope that retributive justice may fall less heavily upon themselves. If they continue to persecute others they may expect one day to become the subjects of persecution; if they inflict pains and penalties without authority of law, pains and penalties may be visited upon them; if they sow the wind, a voice from above declares that they will reap the whirlwind.

In view of the mutations and changes constantly transpiring in the country, it is morally impossible for any party long to retain the reins of power. Let those who now hold them reflect seriously upon these things and act as though there was at least a possibility that soon or late other hands may direct the helm of state. The worst fate that could befall the country would be that parties should become so intensified in their hostility that the true interests of the people would be overlooked until retribution and revenge should glut their insatiate appetites. At every change proscription would be rendered more ruthless and bloody, until force and fraud would usurp the management of our affairs and the control of our destinies. It is the province of patriotism to interpose its good offices at this crisis, to remove all cause or occasion for crimination and recrimination, and to establish peace and confidence in the place of distrust and discord. If the attainment of these objects is worthy of effort, let oblivion rest upon the past, and let a restored Constitution recognize and enforce that equality of right and of privilege which is the common inheritance of the freemen of this land.

Why are the people of ten States debarred from their rights under the Constitution? Is this ostracism in the interests of the Radical party, or is it designed to promote the welfare of the country? In abundant charity, let us admit that apprehended danger is the true ground of exclusion. But is it not a fact that three fourths of the alarms which convulse society are purely fanciful? The mind of the Know-nothing was kept in continual agitation by his fears of the Pope. At night the dread specter invaded his chamber, driving sleep from his pillow, and filling his heated imagination with phantoms of danger and despair. At early morning he sallied forth, appealing to the people to come to the rescue, and exhorting them to make a dying struggle to save the country from Papal machinations. In order to do this we were assured that it was necessary to disfranchise a large number of our citizens. Whenever an outrageous wrong is to be perpetrated, military necessity or the perils of the hour afford a convenient plea in justification.

Now, I never was afraid of the Pope, for I never believed that he had any designs against our institutions; and I am not afraid to admit the southern States to their constitutional right of representation. I will never consent to admit them under the conditions and limitations of reconstruction acts, but will always contend that they have the same rights upon this floor that belong to the other States of this Union.

If any man will seriously contend that our institutions would be imperiled by the admission of their representatives, that they are still plotting the destruction of the Government, I would refer him to the civil pursuits of the leaders of the rebellion and to the destitute and ruined condition of the country. Jefferson Davis, after being indicted by a grand jury, chained and imprisoned for months, is now at large upon a bond signed by northern and by southern men, undertaking that he will abide by and perform the judgment of the court. Stephens lives quietly and peaceably at his home in Georgia, Breckinridge wanders a voluntary exile in foreign lands, Lee has charge of a college, Hill of a newspaper, Johnston of a railroad, and a plain marble slab at Lexington, Virginia, with no inscription but his name, marks the resting-place of Stonewall Jackson. Such is the situation of the men who led the councils and the armies of the rebellious States. If there is a single circumstance connected with the conduct of one of them which indicates even a disposition to raise further disturbances I have neither seen it nor heard it. Besides, they are men of sense, and fully comprehend the hopeless character of an enterprise undertaken with no resources to support it, when it is assailed by the wealth and power of the United States. Without men, without money, without the means of subsistence, with their recent experience before their eyes, no honest man can charge them with the folly and the madness of attempting another revolution. If they have been guilty of crime and have not been pardoned, prosecute them before the courts, convict and punish them; but in the name of justice and mercy, do not yourselves become the law-makers, the judges, and the executioners. There are three departments in the Government; let not the legislative usurp all the powers of the other two.

The facts connected with the formation and submission of the Arkansas constitution have been so ably presented in speeches and reports at the other end of the Capitol, and the fraud and injustice of the measure so thoroughly exposed by the honorable member from the Ashland district and by others, that a repetition by myself would be almost entirely useless.

There is a condition-precedent and a condition-subsequent to the admission of the southern States. The first requires the performance of an act concerning which the other States have been left to their own discretion, and the second ordains the omission of an act which the other States may omit or not at will. The condition-precedent requires the southern States before admission to adopt the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution; and in case of their failure or refusal to do so their exclusion would be certain. They are not left to deliberate upon the propriety and expediency of the measure, and to adopt or reject it as their judgments may approve or condemn; but Congress, by the exercise of power wholly unauthorized by the Constitution, has established this new test of admission to the Union.

The condition-subsequent is incorporated into the act to admit the State of Arkansas to representation in Congress; and provides that the constitution shall never be so amended or changed as to deprive any citizen or class of citizens of the United States of the right to vote who are entitled to vote by the constitution herein recognized except as a punishment for crime.

This last condition was inserted to perpetuate negro suffrage and Radical rule, and is probably the most flagrant example of unconstitutional and partisan legislation to be found upon our records. A negro cannot be deprived of the right of suffrage unless he is convicted of a crime which is a felony at common law; and yet there are thousands of white men who are stripped of this privilege who have never been convicted of any offense whatever. Those who favor impartial suffrage cannot support this bill.

Negro suffrage is an experiment, and there is a great diversity of opinion as to the propriety of conferring such a privilege upon a large class who have been unaccustomed to and who are deemed unfit for its exercise. Many of the northern States in their recent elections have refused to accord this right to the negroes in their own borders, but still they do not hesitate to place the southern States under their control. If experience shall demonstrate the fact that the negro is unworthy of the trust reposed in him by this constitution; if the white people are to pay an annual tax of twenty millions to support him in idleness; if, instead of progress, ignorance and superstition should cast their dark shadows over his feeble understanding; if, spurning our religion and our laws, he should erect the standard of revolt and inaugurate another rebellion, still you could not deprive him of his right of suffrage under the "fundamental condition" of this bill until you had convicted him of a crime which amounts to a felony at common law.

Though your Constitution, your laws, and your liberties must perish in the storm, negro suffrage must be saved from the wreck. The other articles of the Arkansas constitution may be amended as time and experience may demonstrate the propriety or necessity; but negro suffrage, being the highest achievement of Radical philosophy, must stand pure, unchanged, and immaculate. Our ancestors, who were at least as wise as ourselves, chose to withhold suffrage from the negro; and if you shall change their practice and bestow it, upon what principle will you fasten your judgment upon posterity in the shape of an irrepealable law?

Congress may admit new States, but I deny any authority to readmit the old States into the Union, especially when, by a fair computation, as in this instance, it appears that a decided majority of the people voted against the constitution.

A reference to the report of the officer appointed to investigate the frauds clearly shows that the election was conducted in violation of the express orders of the general commanding the district and in conflict with the registration law of Congress.

The majority for the constitution was 1,316 votes. In Pulaski county the vote exceeds the registration by 1,195. In this county few oaths were administered and no questions were asked concerning the residence of the voters. The negroes seem to have voted as often as they desired in the same or in different precincts. In Jefferson county seven hundred and thirty persons were allowed to vote who were registered elsewhere, and the election was conducted on the same liberal principles as in Pulaski, and even more so, as voting by proxy was permitted. A negro woman, whose husband was in jail, cast a vote for the constitution. The registrar neglected to forward the polls and carried them to Little Rock, where he spent several days in a state of intoxication; and it may have been that during that period the vote of his county swelled to such enormous proportions. The revision of the registration was continued until the close of the polls, which enabled the judges to make and unmake votes as the necessities of the case might require. The general commanding the district, to secure a fair and impartial expression of public sentiment, ordered that no registrar should be a candidate for office; but a subaltern reversed the order, and the registrars were generally candidates in their respective counties.

In Spadra precinct, in Johnson county, one hundred and fifty registered voters made oath that they individually voted against the constitution, while by the official returns only ninety-nine votes were cast against the constitution. This discrepancy, however, was explained by the testimony of two witnesses, that the votes were changed in the ballot-box during the night between the two days of election. If votes were surreptitiously taken out on one side, a very slight suspicion might arise that others were put in at the same time. One of the judges of election voted twice, but stated, when the spurious vote was afterward withdrawn from the ballot-box by his associate, that he was in fun. How far the sportive disposition of the judge may have been imitated by his friends and admirers does not appear.

These are only a few of the most prominent facts elicited by the investigation which lasted only four days, when it should have been, at least, twice as many weeks, if the whole truth were at all desirable. Respectable men pledged themselves to establish frauds in every county in the State, and, considering the amount of evidence arrayed in four days, it is difficult to conceive what the proof would have been if time had been allowed. From the evidence adduced grave doubts are justly entertained as to the justice, the fairness, and the impartiality of the election. I hope that Senators, under the circumstances, will feel disposed to afford ample opportunity for taking proof in order that our action may be based upon a knowledge of all the facts. A constitution framed and adopted as this was, by congressional dictation and under military orders and in disregard of law, can hardly be said to reflect the wishes or to protect the true interests of the people of Arkansas.

If the new constitution of Arkansas is republican in form, it is republican in nothing else. The first principles of republicanism have been violated in its formation and submission, and truth itself has been put to shame by the pretense of its adoption. It is neither the child nor the adopted child of Arkansas. She spurns it from her presence and appeals to the Government and the world to save her character from the stigma of having given birth to such a monster. She is willing to submit to any rule, to bow to any despotism, to suffer any humiliation that malice can invent or that tyranny can inflict; but in the wreck of all else she desires to guard the sanctuary of her innocence; and if she must fall, like the Roman matron, she is resolved that nothing short of a combination of treachery and violence shall accomplish her ruin.

The people of Arkansas are innocent of this constitution. They have had little, if any, agency in its formation. Those who framed and fashioned it were born and educated beyond the borders of that State. The conditions and qualifications were imposed by men whose homes were remote and whose feelings were unfriendly to the most cultivated and intelligent classes of southern society. It was the deliberate purpose of those who had charge of the business to place the whites under the domination and control of the blacks. But with all the aid of partisan legislation and fraudulent registration, supported by the strong arm of the military, this contrivance against the peace and happiness of a prostrate and powerless people, frauds deducted, has been frustrated and defeated by the action of the very agents who had been chosen and selected to ratify and confirm it. Condemned by the tribunal to which it was referred, literally slaughtered in the house of its friends, an act of Congress is invoked to give it vitality, and the General of our armies, at the head of his troops, sword in hand, is to enforce it. The present and past condition of Arkansas will not be materially changed by the Government sought to be established under this constitution. Chained to the chariot wheels of the victor, a captive and a slave, she swells his triumph, but speaks, moves, and breathes only by his permission.

Will some member of the Senate be kind enough to point his finger to some clause in the Constitution which authorizes the overthrow of ten State governments, the registration of their votes by military officers, and the transfer of all their powers to the despotic will of a single man? Will he be good enough to indicate some provision which gives sanction, or even the semblance of sanction, to the extraordinary pretensions of General Grant, who governs without any civil restraint eight millions of our people? It may be asserted without fear of contradiction that a more absolute monarch never despoiled a nation of its liberties. He is the Warwick of America, and kings, satraps, and military governors rise and fall at his bidding.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 788) to regulate the appraisement and inspection of imports in certain cases, and for other purposes;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 215) relative to the Louisville Bridge Company; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 279) in relation to the breakwater at Portland, Maine.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. WILSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and, after two hours spent in executive session, the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 28, 1868.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PENSION LAWS.

Mr. PAINE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1122) to construe certain laws relating to pensions; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

BOUNTIES.

Mr. PAINE also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1123) to construe the law granting additional bounties; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REMOVAL OF SUITS.

Mr. POLSLEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1124) to provide for the removal of certain suits from the State courts to the circuit court of the United States; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

JAMES M. WARREN.

Mr. RAUM, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1125) to authorize James M. Warren to transfer or locate a certain military land warrant therein named; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

DOCUMENTS FOR NATIONAL ASYLUMS.

Mr. SCHENCK. I offered a resolution yesterday, which was adopted, to supply public documents to the national asylum for disabled soldiers. The resolution was drawn in the Clerk's office, and I find that it was not made a joint resolution, as it should have been. I ask leave to offer a joint resolution in substance the same as the resolution adopted.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read; after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The joint resolution was read at length. It provides that there shall be placed under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in addition to the number of public documents now distributed by him, to be sent to the national asylum for disabled volunteer soldiers at Dayton, Ohio, and the two branches at Augusta, Maine, and Milwaukee, Wisconsin, each, one copy each of the following documents, namely: the Journals of each House of Congress at each and every session, all laws of Congress, the annual messages of the President, with accompanying documents, and all other documents or books which may be printed or bound by order of either House of Congress, including the Congressional Globe.

The question was upon granting leave to introduce the joint resolution.

Mr. SCHENCK. I have just learned that the Clerk's office has again made a mistake; the second mistake of the Clerk's office; that these documents should be placed under the control of the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House, instead of the Secretary of the Interior. I will, therefore, modify the joint resolution accordingly.

Mr. UPSON. Is the Congressional Globe to be supplied from its commencement?

Mr. SCHENCK. Oh, no.

Mr. UPSON. I think as the joint resolution now reads it covers the whole of them.

Mr. ALLISON. As I understand the effect of this joint resolution it provides for furnishing to each of these three asylums one copy of each public document that has been printed by order of Congress.

Mr. SCHENCK. If these documents are to be spared, I think they should be sent. But the joint resolution is not so drawn.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to that.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. To save all question, let it apply to those to be published hereafter.

Mr. SCHENCK. I would suggest that it go back to the commencement of the war.

Mr. UPSON. Say beginning of the Thirty-Seventh Congress.

Mr. SCHENCK. Very well; I will modify the resolution so as to cover the documents published since the commencement of the Thirty-Seventh Congress. These books are for men who would take a special interest in reading every document published by Congress since the commencement of the war.

No objection being made, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 278) to supply books and public documents to the national asylums for disabled soldiers was received and read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the joint resolution to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. COBURN. We have a soldiers' home in the State of Indiana, with one hundred and twenty inmates, erected at large expense, and now just finished. I would like to have this resolution amended so as to include the soldiers' home in Indiana.

Mr. UPSON. That is unnecessary. The members from that State can supply all the documents needed there.

Mr. SCHENCK. These soldiers' homes have been established in a number of States. I have confined this joint resolution to the national asylum and its branches chartered by Congress. I hope no gentleman will attempt to introduce these State local asylums or homes, for there is a large number of them. Now I call the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] that, as he is informed, some of these documents can be procured only at the book stores at a high price, having been all distributed by members.

Mr. SCHENCK. Then I will modify it so as to apply only to such documents as can be procured otherwise than by purchase, and now call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The joint resolution was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HEIRS OF GEORGE FISHER.

Mr. SCHENCK, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1126) for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of George Fisher, deceased; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to reconsider the various votes by which bills have been referred to committees this morning; and I also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has commenced, and the first business in order is the presentation of reports from the Committee on Commerce.

BREAKWATER AT PORTLAND, MAINE.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, from the Committee on Commerce, reported a joint resolution (H. R. No. 279) in relation to the breakwater at Portland, Maine; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution, which was read, provides that so much of the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the breakwater in Portland harbor, Maine, as the chief engineer shall deem proper, may be expended under his direction in excavating the "middle ground" near said breakwater and in otherwise protecting the channel from injury by filling and improving the same.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT OVER ON FRIDAY.

Mr. BROMWELL. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That Saturday, the 30th instant, being the day set apart for decorating the graves of Union soldiers in the national cemeteries, this House, when it adjourns on Friday next, will adjourn until Monday following at twelve o'clock m.

The SPEAKER. To adopt this resolution now would require unanimous consent, as it proposes to fix the order of business for a future day.

Several members objected.

COLLECTION DISTRICT OF PHILADELPHIA.

Mr. O'NEILL, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 538) to extend the boundaries of the collection district of Philadelphia, so as to include the whole consolidated city of Philadelphia.

The bill, which was read, provides that the collection district of Philadelphia be so extended as to include within its boundaries the whole consolidated city of Philadelphia.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. O'NEILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SHIP GOLCONDA.

Mr. O'NEILL, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back adversely a bill (H. R. No. 448) to change the name of the ship Golconda; which was laid on the table.

APPRAISEMENT, ETC., OF IMPORTS.

Mr. GGGLESTON, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back, with amendments, a bill (H. R. No. 788) to regulate the appraisement and inspection of imports in certain cases, and for other purposes.

The bill, which was read, provides in the first section that whenever any merchandise shall be imported into any port of entry of the United States, and it shall appear by the invoice and bill of lading, or either of them, and the manifest that such merchandise is consigned to and destined for another port of entry, it shall be lawful for the collector at the port of arrival to permit the owner, agent, or consignee of such merchandise to make entry for warehouse and transportation, and on the execution of a bond, as in case of withdrawal for transportation, in a sum equal to double the amount of the invoice value of such merchandise, the same is to be delivered to the owner or consignee to be transported to the port of its destination, and such merchandise is not to be subject to appraisement at the port in which it was landed; but the same examination and appraisement is to be required and had at the port of destination as if such merchandise had been entered for consumption, and the duties paid at the port in which it first arrived and was landed.

The second section provides that such merchandise shall only be forwarded by established transporting companies who shall become responsible to the United States as common carriers for the delivery of such merchandise to the collector at the port of its destination, and any person who shall interfere to prevent or delay the delivery of such merchandise or any part thereof shall be liable to a fine equivalent to double the value of such merchandise, and imprisonment at hard labor for not less than one year or more than five years.

The third section provides that the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and instructed to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary (not inconsistent with law) to carry into effect this act.

The fourth section provides that the State of Missouri shall be one collection district, to be called the district of Missouri, of which the city of St. Louis shall be the sole port of entry, and a collector shall be appointed to reside at said port of entry.

The fifth section provides that all that portion of the State of Ohio bordering on the waters and shores of the Ohio river shall be one collection district, to be called the district of Ohio, of which the city of Cincinnati shall be the sole port of entry, and a collector shall be appointed to reside at said port of entry.

The sixth section provides that an appraiser of imported merchandise shall be appointed, to reside at each of said ports of St. Louis and Cincinnati, who shall be paid a salary of $2,000 per annum.

The seventh section provides that the salary of each of the collectors for the ports aforesaid shall be $2,000 per annum, and fees and commissions not exceeding in all a maximum yearly compensation of $4,000; and that all fees and commissions, from whatever source collected, exceeding the compensation of said collectors aforesaid, shall be paid into the Treasury for the use of the United States.

The amendments of the committee were then reported as follows, and agreed to:

First amendment:

After the word "entry" in section one, line seven, insert "in the interior;" so it will read "ports of entry in the interior."

Second amendment:

In section one, line eight, strike out the word "to" and insert "shall," so it will read "collector of the port of arrival shall permit," &c.

Third amendment:

Section one, line fourteen, after the word "to" insert "examination or;" so it will read "shall not be subject to examination or appraisement."

Fourth amendment:

Section three, line one, after the word "that" insert the following:

The transportation bonds required by the first section of this act may be executed at the port of destination before the collector of customs thereat, who shall certify to the sufficiency of the sureties for the amount of the penalty named therein, and who shall transmit the said bond and justification to the collector of the port of original importation; and that said bond shall be executed by two or more sureties who shall justify by affidavit to be attached to said bond in at least double the amount of the penalty of the bond.

Fifth amendment:

Section six, line three, after word "said" insert "the."

Sixth amendment:

Section six, line three, after word "of" insert "Chicago," so it will read "ports of Chicago, St. Louis, and Cincinnati."

Seventh amendment:

Section seven, line two, after the word "ports" insert "of Chicago, St. Louis, and Cincinnati."

Eighth amendment:

At the end of section six add the following:
And also at any other port of entry wherein the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury such appraisers shall be needed, with such salary not exceeding $1,000 per annum as may be established.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I call for the previous question.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. EGGLESTON. What is it?

Mr. ALLISON. I will state the substance of it. It is for another port of entry and another collection district.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I must object to that, because this provides for all the smaller ports.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to understand this bill. As I understand it, the bill provides for three ports of entry at Chicago, St. Louis, and Cincinnati.

Mr. EGGLESTON. They are already ports of entry.

Mr. ALLISON. Missouri is established as one collection district, with St. Louis as the sole port of entry for that district. The State of Illinois is made one collection district, with Chicago as the sole port of entry. I think there will be no objection to my amendment.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. If we are going to extend these ports, we shall have to do so indefinitely, and include such towns as Burlington and St. Paul.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I demand the previous question.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I hope the gentleman will give me the floor a few minutes.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I will yield five minutes.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I have not had an opportunity to examine this bill, but I think I see it is but a repetition of a feature in the internal revenue system which has been the source of immense frauds—a system of transportation of goods through the country in bond, the duties not being paid. I have not had an opportunity to inform myself so as to explain to the House the way in which these frauds will be accomplished, but I have not the least doubt that it is a plan which will result in great frauds.

Mr. EGGLESTON. In reply to the gentleman, I will say that the committee have considered this bill deliberately, and it has the entire sanction of the Treasury Department. All that part of the bill which relates to the transportation of goods has been duly considered, and the object of the bill is to give to the people of the West an equal chance with those in the East to get their goods by paying the duties at home.

Mr. BOUTWELL. One moment more. My objection is not that the bill has not received the consideration of the committee. Perhaps it may have been approved by the Treasury Department, but this experiment in this country under the internal revenue system has been tried of allowing the transportation of goods in bond, the duties to be paid elsewhere. Under that system worthless bonds have been taken over and over again in the internal revenue department. Public officers have been corrupted, have received bonds that were entirely worthless, and have knowingly consented to misrepresentation as to the character and value of the goods transported. I do not see why the same evil should not grow up under this system.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. JUDD.]

Mr. JUDD. I think my friend from Massachusetts has entirely mistaken the character of this bill. The only purpose of the bill is, as stated by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. EGGLESTON,] to prevent the examination, appraisement, and handling of goods imported from abroad intended for interior cities at the port of arrival, and thus avoid all the loss, injury, and damage that accrues to goods that are so imported. Now, if the gentleman from Massachusetts had paid attention to the law he would see that to-day goods arriving at Boston go through the State of Massachusetts to Canada and other portions of the country under the provisions of similar law. So also with goods that go to the western States and pass through Canada, and it is intended to prevent the monopoly that exists at the port of arrival and the wrong that is done to the importer residing and doing business in the interior. I would say to the members of the House that there is no civilized country on the globe, no country where commerce is carried on and protected, that has not provisions for transportation and intercommunication between different States and kingdoms. I know from my own experience that through all the nations of Europe goods are transported over and through territories to their places of destination in the interior subject to the payment of duties at the place of their destination. I have had occasion to send goods in that form through two or three kingdoms. The Government prescribes the arrangements under which this transportation takes place, and this bill requires the Secretary of the Treasury to make all necessary regulations. There is no sort of analogy to the system that the gentleman from Massachusetts speaks of. And I am informed by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE,] in corroboration of what I have said, that three fourths of the imports of Portland go through that State under bond in the same form that is proposed in this bill. There is no opportunity for fraud any more than there is in the ports of arrival. It is one of those necessities that the business of the interior cities absolutely demand, and it is about time that our interior commercial cities should cease to be treated as colonies. It is simply a system to prevent the paying of cartage and storage and avoiding the examination, repackaging, destruction, and loss of goods. The revenue of the Government is not placed by this action in any sort of danger. All of our interior cities now are becoming large importing cities, and there is no reason in the world why, when their goods arrive on board the vessels, they should be stored in New York, carted to warehouses, stored for awhile, and then carted back again, examined, packed, and repacked, and reshipped to their port of destination, with all this addition of costs, fees, and charges, and, more than all, the delays attendant upon the present system. No reason can be given except the privilege of feeding at the ports of arrival a few officials at the expense of the interior cities.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I yield now for five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. PILE.]

Mr. PILE. Mr. Speaker, at present goods are transported from any original port of entry on the Atlantic sea-board to St. Louis, Cincinnati, or Chicago, they being ports of delivery, without the payment of duties. The only difference upon that point between the provisions of this bill and the present law is that the goods are now examined and appraised and the duties assessed at the ports of original entry and bonds given for the payment of the duties on the arrival of the goods at the place of destination. The provisions of this bill, as stated by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. JUDD,] are that this examination and appraisement, instead of being made at New York, or at New Orleans, or at Boston, or at the place where the goods arrive originally, shall be made at St. Louis, Cincinnati, or Chicago, and that the same bonds shall be given at the port of original entry for the safe transportation of the goods to the city of Chicago, Cincinnati, or St. Louis, and for the payment of the duties when they arrive there, as is now required by law. This will save the importing merchants at those cities the expense of cartage to the bonded warehouse at the original port of entry and from the warehouse to the transportation company. It will save the delay in forwarding goods that now embarrass the importers in these cities. I wish to say that this measure is essential for the importing business of those cities. When I was at the city of St. Louis during the holidays one of the leading firms of that city showed me a shipment of goods worth between twelve and fifteen thousand dollars—holiday goods, intended for holiday purposes. Early in the fall the goods were shipped and arrived in New York, and went into a bonded warehouse. They wrote to their commission merchant in New York, sent telegrams, and finally sent on a man, and yet, after all their efforts, those goods had been mixed up with other goods and their shipment delayed so that they did not arrive at the city of St. Louis until four days after the season for which they were intended was over. Those goods have got to be kept till next winter; styles change, and there is the loss of interest and the decline of prices. This is only one instance of many, and unless the importing merchants of these cities get this relief they cannot compete, in these days of decline of prices, small margins, and great competition, with the importing merchants of the sea-board.

I think there can be no reasonable objection to the passage of this bill. The revenue of the country will not be imperiled any more than at present. There will be no more opportunities for fraud than there are at present, and I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I will now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. O'NEILL.]

Mr. O'NEILL. I do not think I shall require five minutes to explain the bill as I understand it, and to explain its necessity. It may not be known to gentlemen of the House that for years past there have been great complaints at ports of delivery at the delay of the officers of the customs in forwarding goods from the port of entry. The ports of New Orleans, Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, and Boston, being the principal ports of entry on the sea-board, are crowded with goods which are arriving daily, and there has been a great want of facilities for transmitting them to their places of destination. This bill seeks to afford those facilities, and we have been solicited to grant them from all parts of the country where the delays have been experienced. During the last Congress the Board of Trade of Philadelphia sent a petition here asking for the passage of such a bill as this. Upon the presentation of that petition my colleague from the third district [Mr. MYERS] introduced a bill on the subject. Immediately after that the Board of Trade of Boston took action on it, and recommended the passage of a bill to secure the facilities needed; following in the wake of Philadelphia and Boston the boards of trade of other cities took up the question and asked for legislation in which the principles running through the proposed measure might be adopted. There is scarcely any detail in the bill, excepting for the protection of the revenue to the Government; but hereafter we hope to perfect a system which we are confident will work to the benefit of the customs and the great interests of commerce. The only object now sought to be accomplished is a more rapid passage of merchandise from the port of entry to the warehouses of our merchants, and while we have had many memorials from commercial organizations and business people, both inland and sea-board, no remonstrance against the passage of so just a proposition has ever reached us, although the subject has been before Congress several sessions, and ample opportunity given in all our business communities for discussion and objection. Importations, as is well known, are made to comparatively few of our ports, and the custom-houses of some of them are so overcrowded with goods that the importer at a distance must wait months before he can get them to his storehouse. This bill provides, under certain regulations, and with proper security to the Government, for their immediate transmission to the locality of the merchant to whom they belong, whose losses, under existing laws, have been heavy and ruinous. The Committee on Commerce has examined the subject thoroughly, and with the favorable opinion of the officers of the Treasury Department interested in the collection of the customs urge the House to pass the bill. I hope it will pass.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. Hooper.]

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I think that the general principle embraced in this bill may be a very good one. But I see that in the details, while provision is made for facilities to the merchant to get possession of his goods, the precautions for the security of the revenue have been entirely disregarded. I hope the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EGGLESTON] will permit this bill to be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, postponing action upon it at the present time.

There is one point to which I would particularly call attention. Perhaps the gentleman in charge of this bill will allow an amendment which would remove one objection to the bill as it now stands. In the early part of this session we found it necessary, in consequence of the monstrous frauds on the revenue, to put a stop to the transportation of distilled spirits of domestic manufacture. This bill now opens the whole subject for the transportation in bond of distilled spirits of foreign manufacture, and allows the transportation in any direction. I think that at least distilled spirits and wines should be excepted, by inserting after the word "merchandise" the words "other than distilled spirits or wines."

Another great objection I have to the bill is, that on the arrival of goods at a port of entry in the United States they are to be delivered to the person claiming to be the owner or consignee for transportation by him without any examination of the packages or verification of the invoices. There is no provision to verify the contents of packages or the correctness of the invoice, nothing by which the goods can be afterward identified, nothing to prevent other packages from being substituted. Under the present law all goods, on arrival, are subject to inspection and appraisement.

Mr. PILE. Does not this bill provide for the same examination on the arrival of goods at St. Louis, Cincinnati, and Chicago that there is now at the place of entry? Are not the officers as competent and as honest to approve and assess this duty at those ports as at the city of New York or New Orleans?

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. My objection is that this examination does not take place on the arrival of the goods at the port of entry.

Mr. PILE. I think it does.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Not on their arrival at the port of entry, but after being transported to their place of delivery; whereas under the present system everything on arrival is examined at the custom-house.

Mr. PILE. What is the peril under this bill?

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I think there is a great deal of peril to the customs revenues. There is one other amendment which I think should be made. In the last section it is provided that the compensation of the officers shall be deducted before payment into the Treasury. That is entirely opposed to our present system, which requires all duties collected to be paid into the Treasury of the United States, and the compensation of the officers to be withdrawn from the Treasury by an appropriation made by Congress.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MYERS.]

Mr. MYERS. I believe I first introduced a bill embodying the principles contained in the one before the House. The mercantile interests all over the country demand the passage of such a bill. Boards of trade and chambers of commerce in many of the States have petitioned for the relief which it proposes, and merchants all over the country have asked for it. The Philadelphia Board of Trade first presented petitions for this purpose, and in pursuance of its suggestion I proposed the measure after a full examination of its merits.

I think the principle involved commends itself at once to the common sense of the House. What is the object of the bill? Simply this: that when goods arrive at a port of entry they shall be forwarded to the port of destination as rapidly as possible. The chief objection to the present plan is this: when goods arrive at a port not that of destination, and are detained there, as happens constantly, through the immense amount of importations, very frequently the whole business season is lost to the importer, besides the expenses of cartage and loss by breakage for want of care, before the merchant can get his goods. The proposed law, however, is not only for the interest of those who are to receive the goods at a different port, but of those residing at or near the port of entry, because their goods, also, are detained there by reason of the great amount of merchandise collected there preventing prompt delivery in any case. It is for the accommodation of those who are importing or receiving imported goods in New York, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, New Orleans, and elsewhere. And the reasons for this bill have been stated so plainly that no words of mine can add any force to them.

There may be objection to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Hooper] excepting the transportation of distilled spirits, yet I hope the gentleman from Cincinnati [Mr. EGGLESTON] will consent to it. This bill is to facilitate the delivery of goods arriving from abroad and aid the purposes of commerce. We do not wish to interfere with the internal revenue laws in relation to distilled spirits; and I do not think there is any fear of such a result even if this bill should pass as reported; but, as delays are not so likely to create loss in this particular, I would rather accept the amendment than endanger the passage of the bill.

Mr. EGGLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry that the article of distilled spirits has entered into the discussion of this bill. I will say to my distinguished friend from Massachusetts, [Mr. Hooper], who has been upon the Committee of Ways and Means ever since I have been in Congress, that if this bill is to have no more success than the legislation of his committee has had with regard to distilled spirits it will come out very badly before we get through. If I thought there were the least chance that the Government would be defrauded by the passage of this bill I would not advocate it; but when a committee, which ought to stand at least half as well as the Committee of Ways and Means, has thoroughly investigated the subject; when we have received memorials and letters from boards of trade and business men generally urging the passage of such a measure as this; when the entire western country demands some such legislation, I cannot understand why gentlemen should undertake to oppose the measure by lugging in the article of ardent spirits. Why, sir, as matters stand at present, the people of the West have to pay an expert at the city of New York three per cent. to get their goods passed through the custom-house there. More than that, they have to pay in gold or its equivalent the entire invoice of the goods before they can remove one package. The object of this bill is that on the giving of a proper transportation bond the goods may be sent to any point in the western country for which they may be destined. When they arrive there, the merchant can pay the duty on his sample package, and when he finds a purchaser he can pay the duty upon the whole invoice. Thus he will be placed on an equal footing with merchants in the city of New York. We find the city of Philadelphia pleading for the passage of this bill; we find Buffalo, we find every city in the West anxious that a bill of this kind should pass.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Will the gentleman yield to me that I may ask him two or three questions?

Mr. EGGLESTON. Certainly.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. If this is a good bill for Cincinnati, Chicago, and St. Louis, why not extend it to every port of entry around the lakes and all along the Mississippi river?

Mr. EGGLESTON. The provisions of this bill extend to every port in the United States. Certain cities are named because they are among the larger cities, and the salaries of the revenue officers there will have to be somewhat increased.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Then comes the next question: when the provisions of this bill have been extended to every port in the United States, how much will the salaries of our revenue officers be increased? It will be necessary to have at all these smaller ports all the different grades of officers employed in New York or Boston. Appraisers, storekeepers, weighers, measurers, examiners, &c., will be required at every one of these small ports just as though it were a first-class seaport. The salaries of the collectors will have to be increased, because they will have more duties to perform. When all these increased expenses are incurred, what will be the additional outlay from the Treasury?

Mr. EGGLESTON. I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, that so much ignorance on this subject should be displayed by my friend from Illinois, [Mr. FARNSWORTH.] Living, as he does, in the neighborhood of the great city of Chicago, let him make inquiry of the Chamber of Commerce of that city. Let him go to the city of Milwaukee and make the same inquiry which he has put to me this morning.

In answer to the gentleman's question, I will say that just as we increase the force in the West we diminish the force required in New York city. Under the system proposed in this bill we shall get rid of hundreds of men who now make their living in New York by exacting bribes of experts for passing through the custom-house goods destined for the West. Besides, it is in only such cities as are ports of delivery or entry that any officer is appointed; and these officers are paid in proportion to the business done—the Secretary of the Treasury regulating such matters.

Mr. COVODE. I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether this bill does not give permission to transport foreign spirits through the country in bond, and whether the legislation we have been inaugurating this session does not prevent domestic spirits being transported in bond? And I should like to know what excuse western men will give their constituents for tolerating the transportation of foreign spirits while they deny them the right to transport domestic spirits in bond?

Mr. Speaker, I am certainly astonished that gentlemen from the West should be found to oppose a bill of this kind. I am also astonished that they should try to "ring in" this thing of distilled spirits. We will have that up in a few days, and I wish to hear the explanations of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Hooper] and the Ways and Means Committee I wish to know how they have been managing this matter of spirits. But so far as that matter is concerned it never entered into the minds of the Committee on Commerce; that is, the transportation of foreign spirits. Certainly there is no doubt if there is any imported it will go over the country as any other kind of merchandise. I see no objection to it, but I will consent to have it struck out of the bill. I will accept the gentleman's amendment.

The SPEAKER. That cannot be done, as the bill comes from the committee.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move after the word "merchandise" to insert the words "other than distilled spirits and wines."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I call for the previous question.

Mr. SCHENCK. I hope that the previous question will not be seconded, as this bill ought to be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 60, noes 41.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BOUTWELL demanded the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 66, nays 64, not voting 56; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James M. Ashley, Beatty, Blaine, Brownell, Burr, Cary, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Cullom, Dawes, Dixon, Donnelly, Eggleston, Eliot, Ferry, Harding, Hill, Hopkins, Chester D. Hubbard, Johnson, Jones, Judd, Julian, Koontz, George V. Lawrence, Loan, Loughridge, Mallory, Marshall, McClurg, McCormick, Miller, Moore, Moorhead, Morgan, Morrill, Myers, Newcomb, Nicholson, Nunn, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Pike, Pile, Plants, Poland, Polsley, Robertson, Ross, Sawyer, Seofield, Shellabarger, Aaron F. Stevens, Taffe, Taylor, Trowbridge, Robert T. Van Horn, Van Trump, Elihu B. Washburne, Weiker, William Williams, and Windom—66.

NAYS—Messrs. Ames, Archer, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Barnes, Beaman, Beck, Benton, Blair, Boutwell, Boyer, Brooks, Broomall, Churchill, Covode, Briggs, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Ferriss, Fields, Getz, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Grover, Haight, Higby, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Hunter, Jenckes, Kerr, Ketcham, Knott, Lallin, William Lawrence, Lynch, Marvin, McCarthy, McCullough, Mercer, Niblack, Perham, Phelps, Price, Randall, Raum, Schenck, Selye, Sitgreaves, Starkweather, Stewart, Stokes, Taber, Thomas, John Trimble, Lawrence S. Trimble, Upton, Van Auken, Burt Van Horn, Ward, William B. Washburne, and Wood—64.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Allison, Anderson, Axtell, Bailey, Banks, Barnum, Benjamin, Bingham, Buckland, Butler, Cake, Cook, Cornell, Dodge, Eckley, Ella, Finney, Fox, Garfield, Gravelly, Griswold, Halsey, Hawkins, Holman, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hulburt, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Kelley, Kelsey, Kitchen, Lincoln, Logan, Maynard, Morrissey, Mullins, Mungen, Peters, Pomeroy, Pruyn, Robinson, Shanks, Smith, Spalding, Thaddeus Stevens, Stone, Twichell, Van Aernam, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Henry D. Washburn, Thomas Williams, James F. Wilson, John T. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Woodbridge, and Woodward—59.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. EGGLESTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LOUISVILLE BRIDGE COMPANY.

Mr. EGGLESTON, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back House joint resolution No. 215, relative to the Louisville Bridge Company, with an amendment.

The joint resolution authorizes and directs the Secretary of War to cause an inquiry and examination to be made by a competent and impartial officer of engineers to ascertain whether the Louisville Bridge Company has located and is constructing a bridge across the Ohio river at the head of the falls of said river in accordance with the provisions of acts of Congress approved July 14, 1862, and February 17, 1865, and to have the same done and reported to Congress at as early a period as practicable, to the end that the interests of the public may be protected and no injustice done by delay or otherwise to said company.

The amendment reported by the committee was to insert the following:

And the Secretary of War is hereby instructed to cause an examination by a competent engineer of all other bridges erected, or in progress of erection, across any of the navigable waters of the United States, and report to Congress any and all violations of the law under which said bridge or bridges are being or have been erected.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I will state that this joint resolution was introduced by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. KERR.] I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment was agreed to, and the joint resolution, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. EGGLESTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. HAMLIN, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 454) for the relief of Samuel N. Miller.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed House bill of the following title, with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (H. R. No. 650) to amend an act of 3d March, 1865, providing for the construction of certain wagon-roads in Dakota Territory.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ELIOT. I move to proceed to business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the appropriation bills.

Mr. SCHENCK. Which bill has precedence?

The SPEAKER. The Indian appropriation bill, unless it is laid aside by a majority of the committee.

Mr. ELIOT. The object of my motion is to take up a bill from the Senate and refer it.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Let us first get through with the Indian appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The motion to suspend the rules precludes the motion to proceed to business on the Speaker's table; because it suspends that rule.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Let us clear off the Speaker's table. There is not a great deal there.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. There are several bills on the table that will cause a good deal of debate. When we get out of committee I will then make no objection.

The motion of Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, was agreed to—ayes seventy, noes not counted.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BLAINE in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of House bill No. 1073, making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1869.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move that the Indian appropriation bill be laid aside, and that the internal tax bill be taken up.

Mr. BUTLER. I trust not.

The motion of Mr. SCHENCK was disagreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

Onk-pah-pah band:

For third of twenty installments, being thirty dollars for each lodge or family, (three hundred lodges,) to be paid in such articles as the Secretary of the Interior may direct, as per fourth article of treaty of October 20, 1865, $9,000.

Mr. TAFTE. I move to amend the foregoing paragraph by adding the following proviso:

Provided, That said payment shall not be made unless the Secretary of the Interior shall be satisfied that said tribe has observed its treaty stipulations; or in case a portion of said tribe shall have observed their obligations, payment shall be made to such individuals pro rata.

The reason I offer the amendment is this: I notice by the Yankton papers, and learn from parties directly from the upper Missouri, that these Onk-pah-pah Indians have recently made a raid upon a camp of Yankton Sioux near Fort Randall, and also upon the stock of that post. They captured several head of horses and made warlike demonstrations generally. The garrison was out in line of battle—too weak to assume the offensive—and the officers, as I learn, complimented and congratulated themselves upon the fact that the post was not taken. These Indians walked leisurely away with their booty, and complained that the Government kept such poor stock. I wish the attention of the Secretary of the Interior directed to these facts, and, as the terms of the treaty and bill are peremptory, there should be a discretion lodged somewhere, so that payment may not be made to those parties who have been guilty of these flagrant acts of war.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not rise to oppose the amendment; or rather, I rise to oppose it in a technical sense, but not actually. The committee thought of putting in such a proviso, to extend to all these bands of Indians; and, if the gentleman will withdraw the amendment and modify it so as to include two or three more tribes which, since we reported the bill, have gone into raids and spoiliations in defiance of treaties, I shall be very glad.

Mr. TAFTE. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. PAINE. I renew the amendment for the purpose of expressing the hope that the amendment may be put in such general terms as to cover all the bands mentioned in the bill which may have violated their treaty stipulations, and exclude them from the right to appropriations under this bill. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. HIGBY. I move to strike out "$5,000," in line thirteen hundred and forty four, and to insert "$7,500" in lieu thereof; so that the paragraph will read: "For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in California, including traveling expenses of the superintending agents, $7,500." I find that the appropriation for last year was $7,500. I know something in regard to these expenditures. There are four reservations in the State, and it is necessary, for their proper administration, that the superintendent should visit them at least twice a year, and the distance between the two extreme reservations is at least five hundred miles. I know that these estimates for last year and the year before were made by a man whose integrity no man can impeach, and of whom one whose voice is now hushed, but whose name this whole nation honors—no other than Abraham Lincoln—said that no purer or honest man lived upon the earth than Charles Maltby; he used those words in my presence. The estimates made for the two last years are $7,500, and I know that these traveling expenses and the other incidental expenses mentioned here are great.

I do not know but that the committee may have some information within their own reach that can enlighten us on the question why the expenses should be reduced $2,500. I find by looking at the close of the bill that the whole amount appropriated in it is $2,214,283 01, and I think that nearly or quite two millions of that is appropriated by these treaties which the member who has charge of this bill has, in my estimation, so justly denounced. I fully agree with him that the amount fastened on the country by our treaty system is an outrage upon it. But, sir, with relation to California, the matter is entirely within the grasp of the Government, and every dollar that is expended can be known. It is subject to the closest investigation, and we find that only the small amount of $64,000, I believe, is appropriated by this bill for the Pacific coast, and especially for the State of California, with some four or five thousand Indians that are under the jurisdiction of the Government upon these reservations.

Now, I say that the estimate of last year was made by as pure a man as ever lived, and that was Charles Maltby, and $7,500 was only considered sufficient for this purpose. I wish to understand whether the committee have any information within their knowledge which induces them to reduce the amount, or is it cut down on the general economical system on which the committee have entered?

Mr. BUTLER. The original estimate, I grant, was $7,500. I do not mean to say anything, nor am I instructed to say anything, against the purity or the propriety of conduct of the superintendent of Indian affairs in California.

Mr. HIGBY. I do not mean the present superintendent, but the one who made the estimate for last year, not this year.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir; and I wish to assure him that we mean no imputation upon his friend, if he is so, by reducing his estimates. But what was controlling upon the minds of the committee was this: in examining what was to be done after the salaries were paid, and seeing what was necessary for incidental expenses, we came to the conclusion that $5,000 was enough; and we made like reductions all through the bill in these incidental expenses. For instance, in the general Indian department there was a call by estimates for $30,000. Upon examination we cut it down to $20,000. In various other divisions of this service we have cut down the incidental expenses. And from what examination we could make we concluded that the Indian service in California could get along with $5,000 for traveling expenses and rent for the superintendent. He has an extra clerk more than others have, and he has a large salary.

Mr. HIGBY. Not very large.

Mr. BUTLER. In comparison with others.

Mr. HIGBY. No, sir.

Mr. BUTLER. We thought that $5,000 for traveling expenses and office rent quite as much as the country could afford, and we can try the experiment for one year at least with $5,000.

Mr. HIGBY. I will say to the member from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] that I am not so strenuous upon this point as I shall be upon some other points that are more vital. But I wanted to know why this reduction was made.

Mr. BUTLER. I have stated the reasons.

The question was then taken on the amendment of Mr. HIGBY, and it was not agreed to. The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in Montana Territory, presents of goods, agricultural implements, and other useful articles, and to assist them to locate in permanent abodes and sustain themselves by the pursuits of civilized life, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $15,000.

Mr. CAVANAUGH. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out "$15,000" and inserting "$20,000." I find by reference to the bill that for Colorado Territory there is an appropriation of $20,000; for Dakota, $15,000; for Idaho, $15,000; for Nevada, $20,000. Now, there are three times as many Indians in Montana Territory as there are in any other Territory in the United States; at least three times as many as there are in Colorado. I have lived in both Territories, and know that of which I am speaking. I do not think there ought to be any discrimination made between these Territories; but there is. I do not charge that the discrimination is for party purposes. But I find that for the Republican State of Nevada and for the Republican Territory of Colorado the sum of $20,000 is appropriated; while for the Democratic Territories of Dakota, Idaho, and Montana only $15,000 is appropriated. Now, I would say, with all respect to the gentleman from Massachusetts and to other gentlemen who represent eastern and middle States, that they cannot know as much about these Indians as the two Representatives from Minnesota, the Representative from Colorado, and the Representative from Utah, men who have lived among these Indians for the last ten or fifteen years. Now, I sincerely wish that the Indian policy of the Government at the present day was entirely abolished, was taken entirely from the civil service, taken out of politics, and placed where it legitimately belongs, in charge of the War Department.

I hope the gentleman who has charge of this bill will consent to my amendment; I think it is but right and proper. We have in Montana the largest Indian population of any Territory in the United States; and yet this bill proposes to give that Territory less than is given to Colorado or Nevada.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman from Montana [Mr. CAVANAUGH] has so well and properly put his case that he almost persuaded me to consent to his amendment. But the only ground I can see for consenting to the amendment is the very proper and able manner in which it has been presented; its merits I cannot see. The gentleman claims for Montana Territory a larger Indian population than any other Territory. I have the statistics here, showing that in Montana there are 18,683 Indians; in New Mexico, 19,979; in Utah, 17,600; and in Dakota, 24,440 Indians. These figures come from the report of the Indian Bureau made last year, and unless the Indians in Montana Territory have been exceedingly fruitful within the last year, I do not think that Territory can have as many Indians as these other Territories.

Mr. CAVANAUGH. Ignorance prevails in all the Departments relative to the far West; and I take it the Indian department is not an exception. Now, I know that there are more Indians in Montana than in any other Territory, the official statements of the Indian department to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. BUTLER. It is claimed that in Dakota Territory alone there are 24,440 Indians; yet only $15,000 is appropriated for that Territory, the same that is given to Montana Territory.

Mr. CAVANAUGH. How many Indians are there in Colorado?

Mr. BUTLER. I am informed by one gentleman that there are 24,000 Indians there; the official report says there are only 7,000. That shows how difficult it is to get anything from an official report. In the estimates of the Interior Department is a note that $25,000 is not too much to take care of the Indians in Colorado. The ground upon which that large sum is put for Colorado is that the mining interests there are very much scattered, and this is necessary for their protection. It will be observed that all this is for presents and civilization. I think it would be better for them to have fewer presents and less civilization. True, I cannot know as much about this matter, I do not pretend to know as much about it, as gentlemen who live out there; but I ask the gentleman from Montana [Mr. CAVANAUGH] himself whether he does not think that this whole Indian system, outside of the Territory of Montana, (for I will not ask him to say a word about his own Territory,) is a system of corruption and wrong?

Mr. CAVANAUGH. If the gentleman will give me five minutes I will answer him.

Mr. BUTLER. I have no time to give.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted upon the amendment.

Mr. CAVANAUGH. I move to amend the amendment so as to make the amount $25,000. Now, sir, I will answer the inquiry of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] although I did not expect this discussion to come up. I will say frankly that, in my judgment, the entire Indian policy of the country is wrong from its very inception. In the first place, you offer a premium for rascality by paying a beggarly pittance to your Indian agents. The gentleman from Massachusetts may denounce the sentiment as atrocious, but I will say that I like an Indian better dead than living. I have never in my life seen a good Indian (and I have seen thousands) except when I have seen a dead Indian. I believe in the Indian policy pursued by New England in years long gone. I believe in the Indian policy which was taught by the great chieftain of Massachusetts, Miles Standish. I believe in the policy that exterminates the Indians, drives them outside the boundaries of civilization, because you cannot civilize them. Gentlemen may call this very harsh language; but perhaps they would not think so if they had had my experience in Minnesota and Colorado. In Minnesota the almost living babe has been torn from its mother's womb; and I have seen the child, with its young heart palpitating, nailed to the window-sill. I have seen women who were scalped, disfigured, outraged. In Denver, Colorado Territory, I have seen women and children brought in scalped. Scalped why? Simply because the Indian was "upon the war-path," to satisfy his devilish and barbarous propensities. You have made your treaties with the Indians, but they have not been observed. General Sherman went out a year ago to Colorado Territory. He made a treaty; and in less than twenty-four hours after the treaty was made the Indians were again "upon the war-path." The Indian will make a treaty in the fall, and in the spring he is again "upon the war-path." The torch, the scalping-knife, plunder, and desolation follow wherever the Indian goes.

But, Mr. Chairman, I will answer the gentleman's question more directly. My friend from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] has never passed the barrier of the frontier. All he knows about Indians (the gentleman will pardon me for saying it) may have been gathered, I presume, from the brilliant pages of the author of "The Last of the Mohicans," or from the lines of the poet Longfellow in "Hiawatha." The gentleman has never yet seen the Indian upon the war-path. He has never been chased, as I have been, by these red devils—who seem to be the pets of eastern philanthropists.

Mr. Chairman, I regret that I have not prepared myself with statistics as to Indian atrocities. I desire to answer the gentleman from Massachusetts fairly. I repeat that the Indian policy of the Government from beginning to end is wrong. If the management of the Indians is to continue as a part of the civil service, then there ought to be a bureau of Indian affairs, under the charge of a Cabinet officer, who should be responsible for all matters connected with the management of the Indians.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CAVANAUGH. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment of Mr. CAVANAUGH was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

California:

For the purchase of cattle for beef and milk, together with clothing and food, teams, and farming tools for Indians in California, $30,000.

Mr. HIGBY. I move to amend by striking out in the clause just read "$30,000" and inserting "$75,000," so as to make the appropriation $75,000.

Mr. Chairman, I find that the amount appro-appropriated last year for this item is $55,000. As I understand from the Indian department the sum of $75,000 is asked to be appropriated this year. In offering this amendment I do not wish to be understood as approving the present system of conducting Indian affairs; and I may as well say that before the expiration of the Fortieth Congress I will, unless some other member should do so, bring in a bill to revolutionize entirely our present Indian system. I think we should have nothing to do with the Indians except upon the stipulation that they shall be placed upon reservations; shall be no longer wild and roaming. When put upon reservations and made in a great measure dependent upon the Government they become disarmed of the war power which they otherwise possess; the tribes are broken up, and the Indians become harmless. In California, in 1864, more than a million dollars were expended in making prisoners of some three hundred Indians. Those Indians are now upon one of our reservations, and cost us but a small annual appropriation. We had better make these appropriations for fifty years than have even a small band like that roaming about and marauding upon the community. The department has asked that there shall be appropriated for this item $75,000. I do not know but the committee may have some information showing the propriety of some reduction of this amount; but I am sure that they have no information justifying the cutting down of the appropriation to $30,000, as is proposed in the bill. It can only be done under the system of the cleaver or the guillotine by which every appropriation proposed, however necessary or just it may be, must be cut down. That is the only rule that can possibly justify such a reduction. If the committee have any information justifying a reduction below $75,000, I shall be glad to hear it; but I give the committee warning that, unless the means be provided for keeping the Indians upon those reservations, they will break away and we shall be obliged to exert the military power of the Government to subdue them, involving, perhaps, an expense of one or two million dollars. When wild Indians are placed on these reservations they are in process of time rendered peaceable and industrious. The parsimony of the Government in withholding twenty or thirty thousand dollars necessary for these Indians on reservations may involve us hereafter in an expenditure of one or two millions.

Mr. Chairman, I shall not stickle for an appropriation for the full amount asked, $75,000; but I shall insist that we ought to make a larger appropriation than $30,000. The latter amount will not, I am confident, meet the requirements of the department. I yield the floor that we may hear any information that the committee may have upon this subject.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I want the committee to observe exactly the object for which this appropriation is made. It is "for the purchase of cattle for beef and milk, together with clothing and food, teams and farming tools for Indians in California." How many of these Digger Indians of California ever had milk till the Government provided it for them? That is a question I would like the committee to think of for a moment. Then these Indians have "farming tools." Let us see what they do with the farming tools. I hold in my hand the report made by a commissioner sent out in 1866, now our clerk of the Committee on Appropriations, and he says:

"It is true that the women of almost all of these Indians do, at the proper season, dig the edible bulbs and roots of which certain portions of the State are so prolific. It is true, also, that the men hunt the grizzly, the puma, the deer, elk, and antelope, and that, until recently, with no other weapon than those of their own manufacture, ash bows, the backs of which are strengthened by a veneering made of the sinews of the deer, and arrows headed with obsidian."

Now, then, sir, that is the description of the general character of the Indians of California. In addition we have been asked to appropriate as follows:

For the purchase of cattle for beef and milk, together with clothing and food, teams and farming tools for Indians in California, $75,000.

For pay of one physician, one blacksmith, one assistant blacksmith, one farmer, one carpenter, and one teacher upon each of the four reservations in California, and one herdsman, one miller, and one clerk upon each of the Round Valley and Hoopa Valley reservations, $25,920.

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to purchase a saw and grist mill for the Round Valley reservation, $5,000.

For amount to pay the settlers of Hoopa Valley for their personal property, $4,367 25.

For amount necessary for the purchase of the Tule river Indian farm, containing twelve hundred and eighty acres of land, with all improvements, at the rate of ten dollars per acre, in United States gold coin, $12,800.

We are asked to pay all this to the Indians of California. Last year we found they got along with $55,000 worth of milk and beef; and they got along so well with $55,000 we propose now to try $30,000. If that does well we will then try $20,000 next year as an experiment. We see nothing in what has been stated to raise this to $75,000, but, on the contrary, it should be cut down to $25,000. It is all voluntary, it is all a gift; and I want to say here once for all that I do not understand why it is that the Indian alone, of all the people on the globe, should be exempted from the penalty of the primeval curse of man to earn his bread by the sweat of his brow. We have to tax our constituents to feed lazy Indians; and that would not be so bad, but we have to feed still lazier Indian employes. Where we have made treaties we cannot help it; but where it is voluntary I am going to ask the committee how many gentlemen will put their hands into the pockets of their constituents and take out money for the purpose of supplying with milk and beef the Digger Indians of California. Thirty thousand dollars is as far as I am willing to go.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HIGBY. I move to amend by inserting $70,000, for I do not intend to let this go on only a five-minutes debate.

Mr. Chairman, I have been on all these reservations and seen these Indians, and the gentleman from Massachusetts need not bring any such report as that he has read from, for I know better. And, sir, I will say more, that before I get through I will show a letter from the gentleman of whom I have spoken, of whom Abraham Lincoln said he was "one of the purest men who lives," and it will show how much it is in conflict with the report which the gentleman from Massachusetts has read to the committee. I know, sir, that they have to have subsistence; and, whether they get it or not, I say it is within the power and reach of Congress to know whether these appropriations are carried out in good faith or not, while there is a difficulty in reference to these very treaties against which the gentleman so ably and so truthfully, in my judgment, has inveighed. I know that they have beef cattle. I know that the Indians labor. I saw them laboring on each one of these reservations. The testimony was that they labored well and faithfully, although they could not do the labor of white men. I saw them laboring; and when the gentleman from Massachusetts reads a report that these Indians use bows and arrows for the purpose of procuring their living, I say that report falsifies what is the truth in reference to the Indians in that State. I will not allow this matter to go off with such an imputation, standing, as I do here, as a Representative of the State of California.

I was on the committee in 1865 for the purpose of examining into the condition of these reservations. I visited every one of them and stayed several days on each and made critical examinations there. I could ascertain near the number of the Indians on each reservation, for they were gathered that they might be seen. I went to the fields where they were working. I saw them harvesting and using the various implements of husbandry. They do it upon every one of these reservations. It is true, they are simple and rude. They do not understand doing things like white men; if they did they could be entirely self-supporting. In time I think they can be made so, but it will take a term of years to do it. I think it is the only system upon which we can enter with reference to the Indians. The policy of wholesale slaughter that the delegate from Montana [Mr. CAVANAUGH] talks about is one which will never do in this country.

Mr. RAUM. I desire to ask the gentleman what obligation this Government is under to appropriate money for the support of these Indians?

Mr. HIGBY. None; only they have been taken on to these reservations with the understanding that the Government will do it, and they stay there with that expectation, and when the Government refuses they leave the reservation and go out and prey upon the population, and human slaughter is the consequence. That is the condition of things now. In the northern portion of the State they are now importuning Congress on this subject. Those who suffered in 1864 think that the Government should make reparation to them for the depredation of Indians at the time the military had to be used at an expense of more than a million dollars, though there were only three hundred men employed. The Indians are now on the reservations submitting to that understanding. Refuse this appropriation, and I tell you you will have millions to pay in consequence of their depredations. As I said before, I do not pretend to say that $75,000 is the exact sum required, but I want some information from the committee, more than has been given by the gentleman from Massachusetts, for this reduction to $30,000. I shall name the amount before I get through. I have moved to make it $70,000, in order that I might have an opportunity to debate this question.

Again, the proposition to turn over the Indians to the control of the War Department is as great a mistake as the present system of management.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I have only to use such sources of information as I have. I cannot say anything from my own knowledge, therefore I give to the gentleman, in reply, the evidence which came before the committee. I by no means mean to impugn any gentleman from California, either his authority or his character or his judgment; but I desire to read for a moment from the financial statement of this report of 1866:

"In my letter of instructions the commissioner says:

"It is the policy of this department to make the Indians self-sustaining. Those in California have reservations that are represented as being very fertile and producing abundant crops, and it is thought that with proper management and due economy the expense to the Government of sustaining them would not be considerable; that nothing but clothing and agricultural implements need be purchased."

"After a pretty thorough investigation I must acknowledge concurrence in the above opinion."

"All the improvements, repairs, fencing, and materials used on the reservation are mainly the product thereof and the labor, that of the employes and Indians, with the horses, mules, oxen, and teams of the Government, so that very little expense would seem to accrue on this head."

"The subsistence is in large excess. The property returns from July 1, 1866, to the close of the year show the produce of wheat to be 1,605,156 pounds; this, at three cents per pound, would be $48,154 65. About the time of my visit to the Tule river farm 100,000 pounds of wheat were sold to Mr. D. R. Douglas, a merchant of Visalia, deliverable at the farm, for $2,500. This was a portion of the surplus products of that farm from the last harvest."

Then, in speaking of the expenditures, he says:

By this it would seem that the entire amount available for the year's service is $100,000 currency. Of this is expended for salaries of superintendent and clerk, agents and employes—omitting pay of physicians where none are employed—exact—$23,400 00

For the purchase of cattle for beef and milk, supposing a considerable natural increase and considering the quantity of fish and other food, the apparently small amount of beef killed and the few Indians to eat—estimated—10,000 00

For clothing, in view of the naked condition of the Indians generally and the character of that worn by those who were tolerably dressed (cast-off white)—estimated 10,000 00

The amendment of Mr. HIGBY was then disagreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I now move to amend the same paragraph by striking out $30,000 and inserting $60,000. I make the proposition in good faith, hoping that the House will agree to the amendment. I hold in my hand the report of the superintendent of the State of California to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in which he insists that an appropriation of $128,620 is absolutely necessary to enable him to carry on that department. And he itemizes the sums required, showing where every dollar will go. In addition to that amount, which will be laid out in absolutely necessary expenditures, he foots up $17,000 for other appropriations which he says will be necessary, $4,000 of which is for the purchase of farms in Hoopa Valley, which the committee have recommended. Now, I undertake to say that the Commissioner, in cutting down this sum, was guided by strict economy and put it as low as in his belief the service could be rendered. In fact I have seen the Commissioner, and he has informed me that in his opinion the Indians of California could not be taken care of upon these reservations for a quarter of a dollar less than $75,000. That report he has sent to the House, and it is the evidence and the only evidence that the gentlemen of the committee base their report upon. Now, I say to the gentleman from Massachusetts, and I wish him to understand me, when he speaks of the evidence upon which they base their report, that their report to this House is based upon the report of the superintendent for California, recommending $120,000, and report of the Commissioner recommending only $75,000. If that justifies the committee in saying that the appropriation shall be $30,000 then let the House so vote, but I do not think that justifies the report.

Again, there is $20,000 absolutely necessary, as the superintendent says, in addition to the appropriation of last year, for the purpose of enabling him to furnish materials, agricultural implements, beef cattle, &c., at these reservations. Now, it may be that we can get along without that $20,000. That is the view the Commissioner takes. And then there was another item of $13,000 which the Commissioner thought we could get along without. So he leaves off both of these items, bringing the sum down to $75,000. The balance of the report of the superintendent he takes literally and he reports to the committee, and upon that they base their report to the House. He reports that every one of these items is correct, and that every one of these appropriations must be made, and $30,000 would be of no more account in carrying on this service than thirty cents. The committee must evidently know that. The offices are all established by law and the salaries fixed, the provisions for the support of these Indians are all provisions of law. And how can this service be performed without appropriations? It cannot be performed at all. And the committee might as well ask the House to make no appropriation for California as ask them to appropriate $30,000. I hope the amendment will prevail.

The question was taken on the amendment; and there were—ayes 22, noes 33; no quorum voting.

Mr. JOHNSON. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. HIGBY. I move to amend so as to make the amount $55,000.

Mr. Chairman, I have placed the amount now where it was last year. My object is to have some opportunity to debate this question before the committee, as there is no other opportunity to say anything in regard to it. I call the attention of the committee who have charge of this bill to another branch of the subject. There are a great many Indians in the State of California who were on the Catholic missions in the southern portion of the State. There are several thousands of them. They are harmless Indians. I do not apprehend any danger of hostilities from them as I do from those that are now upon the reservations. They have been considerably educated, but the lands that they had when we first took possession of the State they do not now possess. They are a landless people, although they were accustomed to agriculture when we became possessors of that country. Why, sir, in years gone by, portions of this very amount here specified have been used by the Indian department to make some provision for these Indians. I know there was distributed by Mr. Maltby, the former superintendent, quite a large amount, I do not now remember how much; but I recollect receiving a letter from him in which he said that he had then just returned from the southern part of the State, and that is a part of the incidental expenses of the superintendent and his agents. We have nearly one thousand miles of coast from San Diego to Crescent City, and the duties of the superintendent carry him not only upon these reservations, but also among these Indians. Either the General Government or the State of California has to make some provision for that class of Indians. They are not upon reservations. They do not desire to go upon reservations. I am inclined to the opinion that if they could have a portion of lands given to them for homesteads by the Government, as is given to others, they would go upon those lands and cultivate them and live in the manner of civilized people. But they are in no such condition. They are dependent in great measure, more or less, upon the Government, and a portion of this very sum that is asked to be appropriated—how much I cannot say, but more or less of it—will be used in that way at the discretion of the Indian department.

Now, sir, I am not to be driven from the position which I take upon this question. I say that it is the duty of this Government and that it is economy to keep these Indians upon reservations and even at what seem to be large expenditures, but which are nothing in comparison with what we are expending every year upon the wild Indians throughout the wilderness portion of the country. I say it is policy, I say it is economy, for this Government to make these expenditures. I think that this Committee of the Whole should place this appropriation where it was last year, and that is $20,000 less than what the department asks. I have no doubt that the requisition for an appropriation of $75,000 was made not only in good faith, but in all honesty.

Mr. BUTLER. Do I understand the gentleman to say that he believes a requisition has gone forward for this amount?

Mr. HIGBY. No, sir; I am only speaking of what the department asks. I do not mean to be understood that that amount of money has been called for from the Treasury.

Mr. BUTLER. I simply want to repeat that we are under no treaty obligation, no legal obligation, no obligation whatever, except our own good-will and discretion, to appropriate one dollar here. Now, to show how things have changed, I will state that in 1864, in this same Hoopa Valley, wheat was purchased costing four dollars in coin per bushel, or twelve cents per pound, and the Indians were fed on wheat at that price. But things have so changed in California since 1864 that California wheat is now feeding the people of Genesee Valley, from whence, thirty years ago, we got all our flour for the East. With this immense fertility it cannot cost as much to keep these Indians in California now as it did a few years ago.

Again, let me repeat that I can see no reason why, if these Indians will work as well as my friend says they will, they cannot and should not earn their own living in a State where everything grows almost spontaneously and where everybody else earns a living. Why must we be taxed to take care of these Indians after having stocked their farms, given them physicians, blacksmiths, superintendents, and everything else men need have?

Mr. HIGBY. I move to amend the amendment, so as to make the sum appropriated $56,000. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] has cited a portion of a report which, I think, is correct in regard to the amount paid for a certain quantity of wheat in the Hoopa Valley in 1864. From an investigation I made there I am inclined to the opinion that it was worth that amount. Any man who will take the traveled route to that valley, the only one by which one can get to that reservation, and consider the time when the wheat was sold and the expense of getting it there, I think would be satisfied that the price paid for the wheat at that time was not more than a fair price for that locality. There are forty miles of travel over two ranges of mountains three thousand feet high, and I supposed that was charged for. It is two days' travel on a good animal to get over there; and you must ride an animal, for you cannot go there with a carriage. I know there was some question in the department about that transaction; and I gave it as my opinion that the wheat was probably worth that much at the time and under the circumstances.

As to the Indians supporting themselves, I have this to say: the gentleman, with his brains, which are of the highest order, may be able to get a good living anywhere; but I think he knows very little about handiwork. What the Indians can raise from the soil is not all they want or all they must have. The gentleman tells us that California is furnishing bread to the Genesee valley. But to put that bread on this reservation would cost more for transportation across the mountains than it would to bring the wheat from California to the Genesee valley. If they raise an abundance of wheat on the reservation, then they are secure and safe; but if they do not, then it would cost more to transport it to them from the region in California where it is raised than it would to bring it around Cape Horn, sixteen thousand miles by water, to the Genesee valley. I know there is a report that the Hoopa Valley extends for sixteen miles on each side of the Trinity river. But the truth is that it does not extend more than a rifle-shot's space, and in some places not more than a good stone's throw. All the good arable land of the Hoopa reservation amounts to not more than twelve or fifteen hundred acres. Yet it is reported here that the reservation extends for six or eight miles along the Trinity river. I know better from personal examination and observation. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

On agreeing to the amendment of Mr. HIGBY there were—ayes 18, noes 34; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HIGBY and BUTLER were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 37, noes 59.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move to amend the pending paragraph, by striking out "thirty" and inserting "fifty-four;" so as to make the paragraph read as follows:

For the purchase of cattle for beef and milk, together with clothing and food, teams and farming tools for Indians in California, $54,000.

Mr. Chairman, I am aware of the fact that the United States has no treaty obligations to fulfill with the California Indians. We have heard that very often from the gentleman who manages this bill; and it is a fact. The gentleman has asserted nothing but what is true in telling the House that treaties with the Indians are frequently made in fraud of the rights of the people. I know that such treaties are often conceived and executed in fraud. I know, also, that the gentleman from Massachusetts on the committee has filled this bill from the first page to the last with appropriations for the purpose of carrying out these Indian treaties in good faith. I know that he has reported upon the concluding page of the bill a recommendation that nearly two million dollars be taken out of the Treasury to fulfill treaty obligations with a handful of Choc-taws and Chickasaws. I have no objection to that if it is really necessary to carry out treaty obligations.

But some years ago the Government of the United States saw the difficulty in which it was constantly involving itself by means of these treaties. It was seen that the Indians upon the border were depredating upon the property of the laboring people of the country; and when the Government took possession of California as American territory, finding that these treaties with the Indians had been a sham and a fraud upon the people, resolved to have none of them with the Indians there. It took away from the Indians their hunting grounds that the white people might settle there in peace and till the soil. The Indians were driven upon reservations, not for their own good particularly—although it was hoped that they might be benefited—but mainly for the good of the settlers.

Now, fifty-five or sixty thousand dollars is necessary to be appropriated to keep those Indians upon the four reservations in the State of California; otherwise they will be turned loose upon the community, and do precisely what they always do when the Government fails to provide for them. They will roam over the country, depredating upon property, and murdering women and children.

I know gentlemen are in the habit of speaking with contempt about the Digger Indians of California; but, sir, of the sixty thousand Indians in that State there are not two thousand Digger Indians. There are nine tribes at the head of the Sacramento river not located upon any reservation; and they are committing depredations every day upon the property of our people. Ever since I have been in Congress I have been trying to get some legislative action which would provide reservations for these nine tribes, all of whom are warlike people.

Mr. Chairman, shall the Indians now upon reservations, after we have expended so much money to make them self-sustaining, be turned loose that they may prey upon the property of our people and murder our women and children? I ask gentlemen whether they will inflict this great wrong upon the people of California. If the Government of the United States had not assumed the charge of these Indians, the people of California would long since, on their own motion, have taken care of this business. But as the Government has taken the matter in hand, and as these reservations have so nearly reached the point when they will be self-sustaining, is it not bad policy to refuse this appropriation, and allow those reservations to be broken up, subjecting the Government to an annual expense of millions of dollars for the subjugation of these Indians until they shall all be killed off? Humanity rebels against such a thing. I appeal to the gentleman to give us this appropriation or else make no appropriation at all, for I tell you in all frankness that your appropriation of $30,000 is an insult to the people of the State of California, an insult to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, an insult to the superintendent of Indian affairs in California, all of whom ask for $128,000. It is foolish, it is nonsense, to appropriate $30,000. If we do not get any more than that there is no use in getting anything.

Mr. WARD. I ask the gentleman from California, if we appropriate this money, what assurance we will have that the Indians will ever get any of it?

Mr. JOHNSON. I can give the gentleman no assurance except that contained in the force of the law under which the appropriation is asked. If our officials in the State of California, none of whom I helped to get into place, are honest men, it will go to the proper persons.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 32, noes 35; no quorum voting.

The Chairman ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. JOHNSON and Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 36, noes 60.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HIGBY. I move to strike out "$30,000" and insert "$50,000."

The gentleman from New York [Mr. WARD] asked my colleague, a few moments ago, what assurance he had that the Indians would ever get any of this appropriation, and I wish he would listen to what I have to say. There is not an appropriation made by this Government where any fraud upon it is more easily detected than the appropriation for the keeping of Indians upon a reservation. I make the distinction between the Indians placed there, because they are under perfect and absolute surveillance of the Government. They are located in certain places and the appropriation has to go through certain channels. There is no difficulty in making an investigation and finding out whether there is any fraud.

I will say to the gentleman from New York that I know several of the agents upon these reservations, and I know them to be good, upright men. If these funds are appropriated there will be no difficulty in making the investigation as to how they have been expended and ascertaining whether frauds have been committed or not. I hope that the House will allow us a little something more than the Committee on Appropriations have reported. I know one thing, that if this is not done we will have deficiencies for the next session of Congress. If that be so, I tell the Committee on Appropriations that they can neither have my vote now nor hereafter. I know if the ratio upon which they are disposed to deal with this matter is such as we have here indicated in this bill, then we are going to have a deficiency bill.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Is it not for the purpose of "bridging over" the coming election that this is done? [Laughter.]

Mr. HIGBY. I am not on the gentleman's side, and this is a little talk we are having among ourselves.

Mr. NIBLACK. I will suggest to the gentleman that the difficulty about this appropriation is that it is for Indians. They are not dark enough. If their complexions were a little darker the gentleman could get all the money he wanted for them. [Laughter.] But they are too light in color.

Mr. HIGBY. I will not yield further. That is not a part of my argument. It belongs to the convention which is to meet in New York in a few days, and will, perhaps, be a "motley crew." [Laughter.] I do not wish to weary the patience of the House. That is not my object. I hope we shall be able to get more than the committee allow us, for if the appropriation is to be limited to that in this bill then nothing at all might as well be voted. The committee divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 28; no quorum voting.

Mr. HIGBY. Let us have the vote in the House.

Mr. BUTLER. I cannot agree to that.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ELDRIDGE and Mr. PERHAM were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 36, noes 60.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HIGBY. I move to make it "$45,000," instead of "$30,000."

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 36, noes 33; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. NIBLACK and Mr. FERRY were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 30, noes 63.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HIGBY. I move another amendment. I do not wish to weary the patience of the House, if the member from Massachusetts will allow a vote in the House on an amendment to strike out $30,000 and insert $40,000.

Mr. BUTLER. I will agree to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be considered as adopted, to be voted upon in the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of one physician, one blacksmith, one assistant blacksmith, one farmer, one carpenter, upon each of the four reservations of California, at the rate of fifty dollars per month, $12,000.

Mr. HIGBY. I move to amend by inserting after the word "carpenter" "one school teacher," and also by striking out $12,000 and inserting $15,600. This is allowing $900 each to the teachers. I ask the Clerk to read a portion of a letter received from the agent of one of these reservations.

The Clerk read as follows:

"I have endeavored since my connection with the department to pursue that course which would be to the interest of the Government and for the benefit and amelioration of the condition of the Indians under my charge. I look upon them as a helpless, dependent portion of humanity, entitled to our sympathies, and think that the efforts of those placed in charge over them should be directed to their improvement and education. That much can be done for them in that direction I am fully persuaded, and the more I become acquainted with the condition and the peculiarities of the Indians the more I am convinced it is for the interest of the Government, the citizens of our State, and the Indians that a portion of the means appropriated by the Government should be applied for their moral and intellectual improvement and elevation. Mrs. Maltby has continued her school, and with more success than anticipated. She has on an average twenty-five scholars, all Indian girls, very regular in their attendance, attentive, and interested, and in their appearance and deportment much improved. An appropriation for the pay of teachers on this reservation should be made for a male and female teacher—say $1,800, and for other reservations in the State the same, and a school for the boys and girls established. Seventy-five dollars per month would be a fair compensation, and the services of a competent person for that amount could be obtained. I would like to have the school continued and that provision be made for the pay of the teacher."

Mr. HIGBY. This letter is from Mr. Maltby, a gentleman of whom I have spoken, who was formerly superintendent, and whom the immortal Lincoln recommended so highly, being an old acquaintance. Every word he says here is true. Now, sir, there is already a school there, the wife of Mr. Maltby is teaching it, and without any compensation. If this Government never pays her I do not know but she may continue to do as she is doing now. I know, sir, not only from my own observation and examination, but from ample testimony, that this Government can do no better, as a mere matter of economy, than to educate the children upon all these reservations. When I was there in 1865 they were under no restriction whatever and were receiving no instruction; but the universal testimony was that they were susceptible of improvement; and I received the same testimony in regard to Oregon from gentlemen who had the custody of children and were instructing them.

Now, here is the testimony of Mr. Maltby upon this subject. I think this amount of money can be expended in no better way than in the education of children on these reservations. He says there ought to be two teachers. I have asked for an appropriation for one on each reservation. There are from seventy-five to one hundred children on each of them. I have asked for $900 as the pay of each teacher. It is the least amount for which good instruction can be obtained. So this gentleman says, and I know that to be the common price paid to teachers. I hope the committee will make this allowance. It is something that ought to have been done earlier, and I think the sooner we initiate this policy the better.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Navajo Indians in New Mexico: For subsistence for the Navajo Indians, and for the purchase of sheep, seeds, agricultural implements, and other articles necessary for breaking the ground on the reservation upon the Pecos river, $100,000.

Mr. BROOKS. This is rather a large appropriation for the Navajo Indians—" $100,000 for the purchase of sheep, seeds, implements, and other articles necessary for breaking the ground." I would like to have some explanation of this, and for that purpose I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. BUTLER. The House have already passed an appropriation of $100,000 for the Navajo Indians. That appropriation has passed the Senate and come back to this House, and the appropriation of $100,000 in this bill is to take the place of an appropriation already passed.

Mr. CAVANAUGH. I desire to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts what this $100,000 is appropriated for, and if it is not for the removal of the Navajo Indians from one point in New Mexico and their location upon a new reservation in New Mexico?

Mr. CLEVER. This appropriation, I understand, is for the support of the Navajo Indians while they are at Bosque Redondo, not for removal. A special provision has been made heretofore appropriating the sum of $150,000 to remove these Indians to the old Navajo country. That bill has been amended in the Senate by providing that the Navajo Indians shall be removed to the country known as the Indian territory. In case the Indian commissioners now on the Plains shall come to the conclusion that these Indians are to be removed from their reservation, then that amount—the $150,000—will be required for the purpose of effecting their transportation to the Indian territory. But this $100,000 in this bill, I understand, is for the purpose of supporting these Indians while they remain at Bosque Redondo. I think the amount should be much more than has been reported by the committee; but, inasmuch as all of the appropriations for the present are cut down, I have not said anything to the insufficiency of the amount.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the amendment.

Mr. BROOKS. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. CAVANAUGH. I renew the amendment. I desire now to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts who has reported this bill, and I desire to ask the Delegate from New Mexico, why it is necessary to give $25,000 to New Mexico while the other Territories get a mere pittance? Will the gentleman from Massachusetts tell me that it requires $100,000 to support them? I deny it. I have had too much experience in these Indian matters. I have seen too much of them. It is a job, not got up by the gentleman from Massachusetts, not got up by the Delegate from New Mexico, but got up by other parties. I would like to know how many Indians $150,000 will remove? I would like to know the distance they have to be removed? I would like to know to what part of New Mexico they are to be removed; whether in the vicinity of Santa Fé; whether in the vicinity of Taos; whether in the vicinity of Albuquerque? I do not desire to oppose this appropriation only. I simply desire that this Indian policy should be ventilated from the beginning to the end, because it is a fraud upon the Government from its inception to the present hour. I ask the Delegate to what point in New Mexico the Navajo Indians are to be removed, and what is the distance from their present reservation?

Mr. CLEVER. I understand the intention to be that the Indians shall be removed from Bosque Redondo, the present reservation where they have been placed by order of the War Department, afterward approved by the Congress of the United States, to what is called the Indian territory, west of the Arkansas river, altogether outside of the Territory of New Mexico.

Mr. CAVANAUGH. What is the distance?

Mr. CLEVER. I suppose it to be between four and five hundred miles.

Mr. CAVANAUGH. Now, I desire to ask the gentleman what is the number of Indians to be removed?

Mr. CLEVER. The number of Indians at Bosque Redondo is from seventy-three hundred to eight thousand souls.

Mr. CAVANAUGH. And it requires $150,000 to remove seven or eight thousand Indians four or five hundred miles? I repeat that it is a job, put up not by the gentleman from Massachusetts nor by the Delegate from New Mexico. I repeat that this Indian policy from the beginning of the Government to the present hour is wrong. It is a system of robbery upon the Government. I remember well when the Menomonees and Winnebagoes were removed. Three hundred thousand dollars were paid for the removal of the Winnebagoes from Iowa to Minnesota. I remember well the treaty of Prairie du Chien, signed by a distinguished gentleman now in the Senate, under which these Indians were removed. Take the Indians, as I said this morning, from the civil service of the Government. Take them out of politics. Place them where they legitimately belong, under the War Department, and you will have less swindling of the Government.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BUTLER. I desire simply to state to the Committee of the Whole what I have learned in regard to these Navajo Indians. Our Army caught them and put them upon the Bosque Redondo reservation, where they cannot even dig anything to live upon. They were kept there by order of the War Department, at more or less expense, until December last, when they were turned over to the Department of the Interior. It has cost the Department of the Interior $171,000 to keep these Indians from that time until the 1st of April. In the course of another investigation I have had occasion to look at the check that has been drawn for that amount of money. The Secretary of the Interior wanted $350,000 to take care of them for a year longer. The Committee of Appropriations brought in a bill containing an appropriation of $100,000 for the purpose of removing these Indians under the charge of the Indian commission. When that bill got into the Senate they increased the amount, if I remember aright, to $150,000. When the bill came back here, in my absence, it was sent to the Committee on Indian Affairs, where it now remains. In the mean time there is no money to keep these Indians.

Mr. WINDOM. The gentleman is mistaken; it was another bill which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BUTLER. I believe the gentleman is right; but the bill has not yet been passed upon. There must be some means of feeding these Indians, wherever they may be. And this amount is put in this bill for the year ending June 30, 1869; only about one third of the amount which was asked for by the department. Now, I have no objection personally to having this stricken out. But gentlemen must recollect that these Indians have been taken from where they were supporting themselves, by agriculture and manufactures of a simple kind, and have been put where they cannot earn their living. Having done that, we must take care of them.

Mr. CHANLER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question.

Mr. BUTLER. Very well.

Mr. CHANLER. The question I wish to ask is this: Was it the military power that removed these Indians from their former place and put them where they now are?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHANLER. Then, all I have to say is, that that is a fair specimen of what the Indian administration would be under the War Department.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CAVANAUGH. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. CHANLER. I renew the amendment for the purpose of saying that I consider the case of these Indians a practical illustration of this whole matter. These Navajo Indians were industrious and noted for their manufactures, warlike in their habits, a terror to their enemies, and a defense to themselves. They were the most industrious Indians on this continent. The War Department came forward and took them from their homes and put them where they had to starve or become the beneficiaries of this Government. Hundreds of thousands of dollars have been expended by the Government for the simple purpose of feeding a people who, when left alone, were capable of maintaining themselves, clothing themselves, and carrying on all the machinery of their own government.

Mr. CAVANAUGH. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CHANLER. Certainly.

Mr. CAVANAUGH. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHANLER] what kind of manufactures the Navajo Indians were engaged in other than the making of a very inferior article of blankets to cover themselves with?

Mr. CHANLER. It is immaterial to me what manufactures they were engaged in. It is the fact, at all events, that they were able to manufacture a cheap blanket, and that proves that they were capable of manufacturing as good clothes as those worn by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. CAVANAUGH] with proper care and instruction.

The difficulty with the Indian tribes is to find a nation that is industrious. Here was a nation that was industrious. They were taken by the military power of this Government and made beggars upon the face of the earth. We are now told that the system which we have heretofore pursued with regard to this people should be changed, and that they should be given over for their care and civilization to the military arm of this Government. There has never been a better instance in the whole history of American legislation than that brought up in this debate to prove that if we wish to advance these people in the cause of civilization we must adapt our treatment of them to their peculiar capacities. Each tribe of Indians has within itself a system of government peculiar to itself, and possesses qualifications for civilization peculiar to itself. A wise, a just, a noble-hearted people, such as the American nation, should seek rather the development of what is good in these semi-barbarians than to crush them by military despotism, and starve them out by thrusting them into such a barren and miserable corner of the earth as the place which has been described so graphically in previous debates upon this bill.

Mr. CAVANAUGH. Did the gentleman ever know a tribe of Indians that had any form or shape of government?

Mr. CHANLER. Yes, sir. If the gentleman wants to ascertain facts in regard to this matter, I refer him to Lieutenant Ives's very able report of his explorations of the Colorado, by which it appears that there are now living among the Indians of that region tribes which, from their first discovery by the Spaniards in 1520, have been living in cities, carrying on all the departments of government. The reports of the first discoverers are identical with that of Lieutenant Ives.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ROSS. I desire to say a word or two in relation to the Navajo Indians. They were, as has been properly said by the chairman of the committee, brought out from their own country by force of arms by the military of the United States. In Arizona, where they originally lived, they were in a flourishing condition. They were self-supporting; they had good farming lands and orchards. They were in a prosperous condition when the Army of the United States in midwinter transported them hundreds of miles, subjecting women and children to the severity of a violent snow storm, and placed them upon a barren waste on Pecos river called the Bosque Redondo. It became my duty a few years ago, in connection with a commission, to visit these Indians, and they begged that they might be permitted to return to their native land. They were held upon the reservation by force of arms, under a military despotism which, in my judgment, was intolerable and disgraceful to civilization.

The chairman of the committee complains of the amount of the appropriations asked by the Interior Department for the support of these Indians. I call his attention to the fact that for three years, while these Indians were under the charge of the military, the expense of their support upon the reservation on Pecos river averaged $100,000 a month. Now, sir, in my opinion, great injustice has been done toward these Navajo Indians. In hearing their statements of the injustice and despotism to which they had been subjected, my sympathies were greatly excited in their behalf. Their fields of corn were destroyed by the military; their towns were burned; their women and children were pursued and hunted down by the military like wild wolves upon the prairie. These Indians were taken from their homes and placed upon a barren waste where no one could subsist unless fed by the Government.

Now, in my judgment, the better policy would be to permit these Navajo Indians to return as they desire to their native land, where they were self-supporting, and whence for some reason which I do not understand they were forcibly taken, to be placed upon this miserable reservation where they can neither fish nor hunt nor raise provisions, and where their support has cost the Government $100,000 a month unnecessarily.

Mr. MILLER. I wish to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. ROSS. Very well.

Mr. MILLER. I ask the gentleman from Illinois what the Indians had been doing that the whites committed depredations upon their property and carried off their wives?

Mr. ROSS. I will tell the gentleman. New Mexicans had run down to Arizona and stole their children and then sold them into slavery. In retaliation these Indians went to New Mexico and stole horses and cattle.

Mr. MILLER. And murdered the whites?

Mr. ROSS. And I suppose they did murder. The facts show that there were hundreds of Navajo Indian women and children stolen by New Mexicans and sold into slavery, and that they are held to this day by New Mexican officials as slaves.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ROSS. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. WINDOM. I renew it for the purpose of making a reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] who yesterday so eloquently told us of the very great saving the Government would make by turning over the care of the Indians to the military authorities. In this case, Mr. Chairman, we have an illustration of how little ground there is for this theory of his, and I wish to present it to the House. These Navajo Indians were taken possession of by the military and turned over to the military authorities absolutely. Now, during the time they were under their care they cost the Government over one million two hundred thousand dollars. The proofs I have heretofore presented to the House, and can do so again if it be desired. They were left upon the same reservation, but Congress at the last Congress turned them over to the civil authorities and $100,000 was appropriated. They cost $200,000 under military authority and $100,000 under civil authority. This will show the extraordinary cheapness with which the military can take care of the Indians as compared with the civil authorities.

I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. WARD. I move to amend by inserting $50,000. I see, by looking over this paragraph, that it is proposed to appropriate $100,000 for the purpose of starting these Indians in farming, purchasing seeds, sheep, agricultural implements, &c. I think, in the present condition of our finances, that $50,000 is sufficient to give one tribe of Indians for the purpose of starting it in the agricultural business.

Mr. CLEVER. Mr. Chairman, the idea of noble qualities belonging to the Indians known as the Navajo Indians exists only in the imagination of those who know nothing about those Indians. If you went to New Mexico, as you passed over the highways, you would find on every side crosses set up, where for the last one hundred and fifty years the people of New Mexico have been ruthlessly murdered by the Navajo Indians. Even since New Mexico has belonged to the United States our troops have been at war with the Navajo Indians; and yet parties who have never lived in that Territory and know nothing about that Territory say they are a self-sustaining people. Go to the Indian Bureau, and there you will find claims of citizens of New Mexico amounting to $13,000,000 for property stolen by the Navajo Indians. That is the way the Navajo Indians are self-sustaining! Is that the way you desire your Indians shall be fed? If you want us to feed the Indians tell us so and we can do it.

Let me tell the gentlemen who have always something to say in favor of the Indians that they had better take care of their security when they travel west of the Missouri river. The question will be nearly reversed; it will no longer be shall the white man be protected, but it will hereafter be will the Government of the United States protect these Indians, or shall they be annihilated? Thank God we are getting strong enough in the West to soon protect ourselves. If the Government of the United States does not desire to carry out the ideas of humanity and civilization and do for these Indians what civilization dictates, if the Government of the United States will not take care of these Indians, keep them, and show them how to make their living by the sweat of their brow, then we shall be compelled to protect ourselves, and that self-protection may result rather disadvantageously to the Indians.

I say that there are on the American continent no more ferocious Indians than the Navajos. Look at our military forces in New Mexico, and ever since that Territory belonged to the United States, what do you find? You find that a continued war in the Territory of New Mexico was waged against the Navajo Indians; and yet they were peaceable tribes, a self-sustaining people! So they say in the East, where they have never seen an Indian, except when brought here by an Indian agent and fed in a hotel, who shakes hands with everybody and says "How-de-do," those being all the words he has learned of the English language. "Oh! what a beautiful fellow that Indian is!" [Laughter.] Because he is here in Washington he behaves himself; here he cannot take a scalp from a poor white man. I think the cry ought to be reversed. I believe Congress should do everything to protect the Indians, place them on the reservations and feed them.

Mr. ROSS. I wish to ask the gentleman whether the ladies in Santa Fé wore portions of Indian scalps as ornaments on their persons at the theater after the Chivington raid.

Mr. CLEVER. I do not know with whom the gentleman from Illinois, when he visited the Territory of New Mexico, associated while he was there. [Laughter.] I can assure him I never did see a lady who was decorated in any way by anything that manifested that she had a great liking for an Indian. [Laughter.]

But, Mr. Chairman, as regards this question of Indian slavery, I do not believe there is any one on this floor who deprecates more than I do the custom which heretofore has existed all over the country where the Spaniards have dominion to take Indians and make them slaves; and I believe every American who has gone to the Territory of New Mexico has exerted himself to the utmost to do away with that kind of practice.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The amendment to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$50,000" was disagreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, there are some other matters necessary to be attended to, as I am informed. I therefore now move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLAINE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being House bill No. 1073, making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending 30th June, 1869, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Indefinite leave of absence was granted to Mr. TABER on account of sickness in his family, and to Mr. ELIOT.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. HAMLIN, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed the bill of the House No. 784, to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of a new jail in and for the District of Columbia," approved July 25, 1866, with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

A subsequent message from the Senate, by Mr. HAMLIN, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 658) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1869, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked for by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Messrs. MORRILL of Maine, HOWE, and WILSON.

GUARD-ROOM AT THE CAPITOL.

Mr. BINGHAM. I am instructed by the select committee charged with the investigation of alleged corruption in the matter of the impeachment of the President to report the following resolution and put it on its passage:

Resolved, That rooms No. A and B, opposite the room of the solicitor of the Court of Claims in the Capitol, be, and are hereby, assigned as guard-room and office of the Capitol police, and are for that purpose placed under the charge of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House, with power to fit the same up for the purpose specified.

I desire to say that there are no rooms at present assigned by order of the House in which to detain persons ordered into the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms. There is such an order now in process of execution. The person Woolley is at present detained in the room of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and the resolution was that he be detained in custody in the Capitol. The committee are satisfied that a room ought to be assigned to the use of the Sergeant-at-Arms, so that this witness may be detained beyond the power or possibility by trick or circumvention on the part of any person to defeat the administration of justice. The reasons which have moved the committee to take this final step will more fully appear in another resolution which I shall offer after the House shall have disposed of this, in which the House and the country will be informed by the sworn testimony of this witness himself and by sworn testimony of one of his confederates that he has trifled with justice in the present House of Representatives and in defiance of the settled law of this country; and having thrown down the gauntlet, I for one want to test the power of the people through their Representatives to determine whether a recalcitrant witness of this character shall defy the whole people and the law as it has been solemnly ruled and settled unchallenged in this country for forty years. I call the previous question.

Mr. BROOKS. I hope the gentleman will not press the previous question on that resolution.

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes, sir; I call the previous question on that resolution.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable.

Mr. BROOKS. I know it is not.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Why does the gentleman from Ohio insist on cutting off debate if the resolution is a proper one?

The SPEAKER. No debate is in order.

The question was put upon seconding the previous question; and there were—ayes 82, noes 22.

Mr. BROOKS. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. Brooks and BINGHAM were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 80, noes 20.

So the previous question was seconded.

The question recurred upon ordering the main question to be put.

Mr. WOOD. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BROOKS. That is the only way we have to debate.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I move that the House do now adjourn; and on that motion I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. ELDRIDGE and BUTLER were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 21, noes 63; no quorum voting.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ROSS. I move that there be a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order pending the motion to adjourn. A motion to adjourn has priority over all motions.

The question was taken on Mr. ELDRIDGE's motion; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 18, nays 95, not voting 76; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barnes, Beck, Boyer, Burr, Cary, Chanler, Getz, Golladay, Haight, Hotchkiss, Johnson, Knott, McCormick, Nicholson, Ross, Stone, Lawrence S. Trimble, and Wood—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baker, Beaman, Beatty, Benton, Bingham, Blaine, Blair, Broomall, Butler, Churchill, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Covode, Cullom, Dawes, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Eggleston, Ela, Farnsworth, Ferriss, Ferry, Fields, Halsey, Harding, Higby, Hill, Hooper, Hopkins, Chester D. Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Judd, Julian, Ketcham, Koontz, Laffin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Lincoln, Loan, Logan, Loughridge, Lynch, Mallory, McClurg, Mercer, Miller, Moore, Moorhead, Morgan, Morrell, Mullins, Myers, Newcomb, Nunn, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Pike, Polesy, Price, Raum, Robertson, Sawyer, Schenck, Selye, Smith, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Stokes, Taffe, Taylor, John Trimble, Trowbridge, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Ward, Welker, Thomas Williams, William Williams, John T. Wilson, and Windom—95.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Anderson, Archer, Axtell, Bailey, Baldwin, Banks, Barnum, Benjamin, Boutwell, Bromwell, Brooks, Buckland, Cake, Cook, Cornell, Eckley, Eldridge, Eliot, Finney, Fox, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Gravely, Griswold, Grover, Hawkins, Holman, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Humphrey, Jenckes, Jones, Kelley, Kelsey, Kerr, Kitchen, Marshall, Marvin, Maynard, McCarthy, McCullough, Morrissey, Munger, Niblack, Peters, Phelps, Pike, Plants, Poland, Pomeroy, Prun, Randall, Robinson, Scofield, Shanks, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Spaulding, Thaddeus Stevens, Stewart, Taber, Thomas, Twichell, Van Aernam, Van Auker, Robert T. Van Horn, Van Trump, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Henry D. Washburn, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Woodbridge, and Woodward—76.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question recurred upon ordering the main question, upon which the yeas and nays had been ordered.

Mr. KERR. I move that there be a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to entertain that motion, as the rule prohibits him from doing it after the previous question has been seconded when a quorum is present. A quorum has just answered on a call of the roll.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I move that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Saturday next.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I demand tellers on that motion.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. KERR and ASHLEY, of Ohio, were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 19, noes 84.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 13, nays 84, not voting 92; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barnes, Boyer, Burr, Chanler, Getz, Hotchkiss, McCormick, Morgan, Niblack, Nicholson, Stewart, Stone, and Wood—13.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baker, Beaman, Beatty, Benton, Bingham, Blair, Broomall, Butler, Churchill, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Cullom, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Eggleston, Ela, Farnsworth, Ferriss, Ferry, Fields, Halsey, Harding, Higby, Hill, Hooper, Hopkins, Chester D. Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Judd, Julian, Ketcham, Koontz, Laffin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Lincoln, Loan, Logan, Lynch, Mallory, McClurg, Mercer, Miller, Moore, Moorhead, Morrell, Mullins, Myers, Newcomb, Nunn, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Polesy, Price, Robertson, Sawyer, Schenck, Selye, Smith, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Stokes, Taffe, Taylor, John Trimble, Upson, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Welker, Thomas Williams, William Williams, John T. Wilson, and Windom—84.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Anderson, Archer, Axtell, Bailey, Baldwin, Banks, Barnum, Beck, Benjamin, Blaine, Boutwell, Bromwell, Brooks, Buckland, Cake, Cary, Cook, Cornell, Covode, Dawes, Driggs, Eckley, Eldridge, Eliot, Finney, Fox, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Gravely, Griswold, Grover, Haight, Hawkins, Holman, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Humphrey, Jenckes, Johnson, Jones, Kelley, Kelsey, Kerr, Kitchen, Knott, Loughridge, Marshall, Marvin, Maynard, McCarthy, McCullough, Morrissey, Munger, Peters, Phelps, Pike, Plants, Poland, Pomeroy, Prun, Randall, Raum, Robinson, Ross, Scofield, Shanks, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Spaulding, Thaddeus Stevens, Taber, Thomas, Lawrence S. Trimble, Trowbridge, Twichell, Van Aernam, Van Auker, Burt Van Horn, Van Trump, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Woodbridge, and Woodward—92.

So the motion of Mr. NICHOLSON, that when the House adjourns to day it be to meet on Saturday next, was not agreed to.

Mr. GETZ. I move that the House take a recess till this evening at seven o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to entertain that motion for two reasons. The first is, that the House is acting under the operation of the previous question; and the second is, that by the resolution of the 25th of February—

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to entertain that motion, for the second reason which he was about stating with regard to the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Getz,] that on the 25th of February the House, under a suspension of the rules, adopted an order that upon resolutions reported by the managers there should be allowed but one dilatory motion—one motion to adjourn on each day. The House, on the day before yesterday, adopted a resolution continuing the managers as a committee, and clothing them with all the powers and rights which they had possessed by previous resolution. This is a resolution reported by the managers, and—

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend. He cannot speak on points of order in preference to the Chair. The Chair has not concluded his statement.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I beg the pardon of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has entertained not only one motion that the House adjourn, but also a motion that when the House adjourns it be to meet on Saturday next, so that gentlemen representing the minority might have full opportunity to test the sense of the House on those propositions. But under the rule adopted by the House the Chair cannot entertain any further dilatory motions.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. The question of order which I desire to raise is this: that the board of managers were not continued with the privilege of moving to suspend the rules or with any other powers than those of an ordinary committee. They certainly are not managers now. There is no impeachment to manage. They are simply an ordinary committee with the ordinary powers of a committee.

The SPEAKER. The resolution adopted by the House, which governs the Speaker, reads as follows:

"Resolved, That the managers"—

It recognizes them as managers—

"Resolved, That the managers, as a committee, be empowered and directed to continue the investigation ordered by the resolution of the House of the 16th instant, with all the powers and rights conferred thereby, and to make such full investigation as will determine the truth of the matters and things set forth in the preamble to said resolution."

The Chair ruled that as they had the right to introduce this resolution by order of the House one objection would not prevent its consideration. From that ruling the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDRIDGE] appealed, and the appeal was laid upon the table, the House thereby affirming the decision of the Chair and making it their own decision.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I suppose the authority we gave to the managers by the resolution of Tuesday related to their authority to investigate the particular matter in reference to corruption, and had no further reference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman may so understand it, but the resolution declared explicitly that they should have "all the powers and rights" conferred by the former resolution.

Mr. PAINE. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. PAINE. My point of order is that it is not in order to discuss a question of order after it has been decided by the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is always willing to have any gentleman fully state his point of order, so that the Chair may be in full possession of it.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I must take an appeal from that portion of the decision of the Chair which holds that the managers have now the same powers that they had while the impeachment was in progress. I make this appeal with no disrespect to the Chair, but because I differ with the Chair on this ruling.

Mr. BUTLER. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 84, nays 22, not voting 83; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Beaman, Beatty, Benton, Bingham, Blaine, Blair, Broomall, Butler, Churchill, Reader W. Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Covode, Cullom, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Eggleston, Ferriss, Ferry, Fields, Harding, Hill, Hooper, Hopkins, Chester D. Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Judd, Julian, Ketcham, Koontz, Laffin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Logan, Lynch, Mallory, McClurg, Mercer, Miller, Moore, Moorhead, Morrell, Mullins, Myers, Newcomb, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Pike, Polesy, Price, Raum, Robertson, Sawyer, Schenck, Selye, Smith, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Stokes, Taffe, Taylor, John Trimble, Trowbridge, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Welker, Thomas Williams, William Williams, John T. Wilson, and Windom—84.

NAYS—Messrs. Barnes, Beck, Boyer, Brooks, Burr, Cary, Chanler, Eldridge, Getz, Golladay, Haight, Hotchkiss, Johnson, Kerr, Knott, Morgan, Niblack, Nicholson, Stone, Lawrence S. Trimble, Van Auker, and Wood—22.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Anderson, Archer, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Bailey, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Barnum, Benjamin, Boutwell, Bromwell, Buckland, Cake, Sidney Clarke, Cook, Cornell, Dawes, Eckley, Ela, Eliot, Farnsworth, Finney, Fox, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Gravely, Griswold, Grover, Halsey, Hawkins, Higby, Holman, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Humphrey, Jones, Kelley, Kelsey, Kitchen, Lincoln, Loughridge, Marshall, Marvin, Maynard, McCarthy, McCormick, McCullough, Morrissey, Munger, Nunn, Peters, Phelps, Plants, Poland, Pomeroy, Prun, Randall, Robinson, Ross, Scofield, Shanks, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Spaulding, Thaddeus Stevens, Stewart, Taber, Thomas, Twichell, Van Aernam, Van Trump, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Woodbridge, and Woodward—83.

So the appeal was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, while this appeal was pending, having obtained the Congressional Globe, he desires to read in the presence of the House that portion of the resolution of the 25th of February last on which he has based his decision, which decision the House has affirmed:

"And that during the pendency of resolutions in the House relative to said impeachment, thereafter no dilatory motions shall be received except one motion on each day that the House do now adjourn."

That declares, if the Chair understands the force of the English language, that when resolutions are pending in the House "relating to impeachment"—not resolutions of impeachment, but relating to impeachment—dilatory motions shall not be received.

The House has still further acted so as to settle this question. While the impeachment was still progressing in the Senate, the House adopted a resolution, the preamble of which reads as follows:

"Whereas information has come to the managers which seems to them to furnish probable cause to believe that improper or corrupt means have been used to influence the determination of the Senate upon the articles of impeachment exhibited to the Senate by the House of Representatives against the President of the United States: Therefore," &c.

The day before yesterday, after the impeachment had ended in the Senate, the House adopted a resolution that the managers as a committee shall be empowered and directed to continue the investigation ordered by the House on the 16th instant, with all the powers and rights conferred thereby to make such full investigation as to determine the truth of the matters and facts set forth in the preamble and resolution. The preamble refers to one subject and one subject alone, and that is alleged corrupt means used to influence the Senate upon impeachment then pending before that body. A case of contempt arises and a resolution is offered growing out of the refusal of a witness to testify as to alleged corruption. The committee had no right to consider any question except as to alleged corruption touching the impeachment. If they had exceeded that they would have been subject to the censure of the House; and the Chair then ruled that there could be no dilatory motion.

Mr. NIBLACK. This resolution does not pertain to impeachment, but to setting apart a room for recusant witnesses.

The SPEAKER. This witness refused to testify on a matter referred to this committee.

The question was taken on ordering the main question; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 79, nays 22, not voting 88; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Beaman, Beatty, Benton, Bingham, Blair, Broomall, Butler, Churchill, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Covode, Cullom, Dixon, Dodge, Driggs, Eggleston, Ferriss, Ferry, Fields, Halsey, Harding, Higby, Hill, Hooper, Hopkins, Jencks, Judd, Julian, Ketcham, Kootz, George V. Lawrence, Lincoln, Loan, Logan, Mallory, McCarthy, McClurg, Mercer, Miller, Moore, Moorhead, Morrell, Mullins, Newcomb, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Pike, Polsley, Price, Raum, Sawyer, Selye, Shellabarger, Smith, Aaron F. Stevens, Stokes, Taffe, Taylor, John Trimble, Trowbridge, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Welker, Thomas Williams, William Williams, John T. Wilson, and Windom—79.

NAYS—Messrs. Barnes, Beck, Boyer, Burr, Cary, Chandler, Getz, Golladay, Haight, Hotchkiss, Johnson, Kerr, Knott, McCormick, Morgan, Niblack, Nicholson, Stewart, Stone, Lawrence S. Trimble, Van Auker, and Wood—22.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Anderson, Archer, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Bailey, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Barnum, Beck, Benjamin, Blaine, Boutwell, Bromwell, Brooks, Buckland, Cake, Cook, Cornell, Dawes, Donnelly, Eckley, Ela, Eldridge, Eliot, Farnsworth, Finney, Fox, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Gravely, Griswold, Grover, Hawkins, Holman, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Jones, Kelley, Kelsey, Kitchen, Knott, Lafin, William Lawrence, Loughridge, Lynch, Marshall, Marvin, Maynard, McCarthy, McCullough, Morrissey, Mungen, Myers, Nunn, Peters, Phelps, Pike, Plants, Poland, Pomeroy, Pruyn, Randall, Robertson, Ross, Scofield, Shanks, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Smith, Spalding, Starkweather, Thaddeus Stevens, Taber, Thomas, Twichell, Van Aernam, Van Trump, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Woodward, and Wood—88.

So the main question was ordered to be now put.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I move the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to entertain the motion.

Mr. KERR. Inasmuch as the resolution does not relate to impeachment or to the conduct of this witness, I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to entertain it.

Mr. ELDRIDGE demanded tellers on the resolution.

Mr. ORTH demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BURR moved that the resolution be laid on the table.

Mr. WARD demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 4, nays 82, not voting 103; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barnes, Burr, Hotchkiss, and Johnson—4.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Beaman, Beatty, Benton, Bingham, Blaine, Blair, Broomall, Butler, Churchill, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Covode, Cullom, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Ferriss, Ferry, Fields, Halsey, Harding, Higby, Hill, Hooper, Hopkins, Chester D. Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jencks, Judd, Julian, Ketcham, Kootz, George V. Lawrence, Lincoln, Loan, Logan, Lynch, Mallory, McCarthy, McClurg, Mercer, Miller, Moore, Moorhead, Morrell, Mullins, Newcomb, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Pike, Pike, Polsley, Price, Raum, Robertson, Sawyer, Selye, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Stokes, Taffe, Taylor, John Trimble, Trowbridge, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Welker, Thomas Williams, William Williams, John T. Wilson, and Windom—82.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Anderson, Archer, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Bailey, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Barnum, Beck, Benjamin, Boutwell, Boyer, Bromwell, Brooks, Buckland, Cake, Cary, Chandler, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Cornell, Dawes, Eckley, Eggleston, Ela, Eldridge, Eliot, Farnsworth, Finney, Fox, Garfield, Getz, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Gravely, Griswold, Grover, Haight, Hawkins, Holman, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Jones, Kelley, Kelsey, Kerr, Kitchen, Knott, Lafin, William Lawrence, Loughridge, Marshall, Marvin, Maynard, McCormick, McCullough, Morgan, Morrissey, Mungen, Myers, Niblack, Nicholson, Nunn, Peters, Phelps, Plants, Poland, Pomeroy, Pruyn, Randall, Robinson, Ross, Schenck, Scofield, Shanks, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Smith, Spalding, Thaddeus Stevens, Stewart, Stone, Taber, Thomas, Lawrence S. Trimble, Twichell, Van Aernam, Van Auker, Van Trump, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Wood, Woodbridge, and Woodward—103.

The SPEAKER. No quorum has voted.

During the roll-call,

Mr. ROSS stated that he was paired with his colleague, Mr. INGERSOLL.

Mr. CHANLER said that his colleague, Mr. TABER, had been called away suddenly by sickness in his family.

Mr. NEWCOMB said that his colleague, Mr. GRAVELY, was sick.

The result having been announced as above recorded,

Mr. BUTLER moved that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to entertain the motion; the rule prohibits him from entertaining it.

Mr. BROOMALL. I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The rule authorizes a call of the House whenever a quorum is not found to be present.

Mr. WARD. Suppose there is a quorum and gentlemen do not answer?

The SPEAKER. That is a subject of contempt of the House, contempt of its rules.

Mr. WARD. I believe there is a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has repeatedly stated that gentlemen who refuse to vote are in contempt of the House, subject, of course, to the action of the House.

The motion for a call of the House was agreed to.

The roll was then called; and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Messrs. Adams, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Bailey, Baldwin, Banks, Barnum, Benjamin, Boutwell, Bromwell, Buckland, Cake, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Cornell, Dawes, Eckley, Eliot, Farnsworth, Finney, Fox, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Gravely, Griswold, Grover, Hawkins, Holman, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Jones, Kelley, Kelsey, Kitchen, Lafin, Marshall, Marvin, Maynard, McCullough, Moorhead, Morrissey, Mungen, Nunn, Peters, Phelps, Poland, Pomeroy, Pruyn, Randall, Robinson, Scofield, Shanks, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Smith, Spalding, Thaddeus Stevens, Taber, Thomas, Twichell, Van Aernam, Van Trump, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Woodward, and Woodward.

The SPEAKER. One hundred and thirteen members have answered to their names, being a quorum.

Mr. BROOMALL. I move that the further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I object to that.

The question was put, and it appeared to be carried.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Is it in order to move that the House take a recess till to-morrow at some time?

The SPEAKER. It is not, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Is it not by unanimous consent?

Mr. LOGAN and several others objected.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 29, nays 60, not voting 100; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Baker, Beaman, Blair, Cary, Churchill, Dixon, Ela, Fields, Hooper, Ingersoll, Jencks, Julian, Ketcham, Lincoln, Loan, McClurg, Mercer, Moorhead, Myers, Pike, Price, Raum, Robertson, Sawyer, Schenck, Lawrence S. Trimble, Welker, William Williams, and John T. Wilson—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Archer, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Beatty, Benton, Bingham, Boyer, Broomall, Burr, Butler, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Covode, Cullom, Dodge, Donnelly, Eggleston, Ferriss, Ferry, Halsey, Harding, Higby, Hill, Hopkins, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Hunter, Johnson, Judd, Kootz, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Logan, Lynch, Mallory, McCarthy, Miller, Moore, Morrell, Mullins, Nicholson, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Polsley, Selye, Aaron F. Stevens, Stokes, Taffe, Taylor, John Trimble, Trowbridge, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Ward, and Thomas Williams—60.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Bailey, Baldwin, Banks, Barnes, Barnum, Beck, Benjamin, Blaine, Boutwell, Bromwell, Brooks, Buckland, Cake, Chandler, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Cornell, Dawes, Driggs, Eckley, Eldridge, Eliot, Farnsworth, Finney, Fox, Garfield, Getz, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Gravely, Griswold, Grover, Haight, Hawkins, Holman, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Jones, Kelley, Kelsey, Kerr, Kitchen, Knott, Lafin, Loughridge, Marshall, Marvin, Maynard, McCormick, McCullough, Morgan, Morrissey, Mungen, Newcomb, Niblack, Nunn, Peters, Phelps, Pike, Plants, Poland, Pomeroy, Pruyn, Randall, Robinson, Ross, Scofield, Shanks, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Smith, Spalding, Starkweather, Thaddeus Stevens, Stewart, Stone, Taber, Thomas, Twichell, Van Aernam, Van Auker, Robert T. Van Horn, Van Trump, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Wood, Woodbridge, and Woodward—100.

So the motion was disagreed to.

The SPEAKER. The roll having been called twice, the Doorkeeper will now close the doors, including the doors of the cloak-rooms, and the Clerk will call the names of the absentees for excuses.

The Clerk proceeded to call the names of the absentees.

GEORGE M. ADAMS. No excuse offered.

GEORGE W. ANDERSON.

Mr. VAN HORN, of Missouri. Mr. ANDERSON is absent by the leave of the House.

JAMES M. ASHLEY. No excuse offered.

SAMUEL B. AXTELL.

Mr. HIGBY. Mr. AXTELL is absent by the leave of the House.

ALEXANDER H. BAILEY.

Mr. MCCARTHY. My colleague, Mr. BAILEY, has leave of absence.

JOHN D. BALDWIN. No excuse offered.

NATHANIEL P. BANKS. No excuse offered.

WILLIAM H. BARNUM. No excuse offered.

JOHN F. BENJAMIN.

Mr. LOAN. Mr. BENJAMIN is absent by the leave of the House.

GEORGE S. BOUTWELL. No excuse offered.

HENRY P. H. BROMWELL. No excuse offered.

RALPH P. BUCKLAND.

Mr. EGGLESTON. Mr. BUCKLAND is absent by leave of the House.

HENRY L. CAKE. No excuse offered.

READER W. CLARKE. No excuse offered.

BURTON C. COOK.

Mr. JUDD. I believe Mr. Cook is absent by leave of the House.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman know that he has leave? The Chair does not remember.

Mr. JUDD. That is my impression.

The SPEAKER. The clerks are under the impression that he has leave of absence.

THOMAS CORNELL.
Mr. LINCOLN. I think that my colleague, Mr. CORNELL, has indefinite leave of absence. The SPEAKER. The Chair is under that impression.

HENRY L. DAWES. No excuse offered.
EPHRAIM R. ECKLEY.
Mr. BINGHAM. My colleague, I believe, has leave of absence. He is not in the city.

THOMAS D. ELIOT.
The SPEAKER. Leave of absence was granted to Mr. ELIOT to-day.

JOHN J. FARNSWORTH.
Mr. HARDING. My colleague, Mr. FARNSWORTH, is absent on leave, on account of indisposition.

A MEMBER. He was here to-day.
The SPEAKER. He has indefinite leave of absence on account of illness.

DARWIN A. FINNEY. No excuse offered.
JOHN FOX. No excuse offered.
JAMES A. GARFIELD. No excuse offered.
ADAM J. GLOSSBRENNER. No excuse offered.

JOSEPH J. GRAVELY.
Mr. NEWCOMB. My colleague, Mr. GRAVELY, is detained from the House by sickness. I move that he be excused.
The motion was agreed to.

JOHN A. GRISWOLD. No excuse offered.
A. P. GROVER. No excuse offered.

ISAAC R. HAWKINS.
Mr. STOKES. My colleague, Mr. HAWKINS, has leave of absence.

WILLIAM S. HOLMAN.
Mr. KERR. My colleague, Mr. HOLMAN, is absent on leave.

ASAHEL W. HUBBARD.
Mr. DODGE. My colleague, Mr. HUBBARD, is sick at home. I move that he be excused.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I object to his being excused, and demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. DODGE. I withdraw the motion.
Mr. ELDRIDGE. Is it not too late to withdraw it?

The SPEAKER. It is not; before the vote is taken a gentleman can withdraw his motion or he can modify it.

Mr. BURR. I move that Mr. HUBBARD, of Iowa, be excused on account of sickness.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. ELDRIDGE. I object, and call for the yeas and nays on excusing him.

Mr. BURR. I call for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. BURR and PRICE were appointed.

Mr. HUNTER. I rise to a question of privilege. I was informed by my colleague, Mr. WASHBURN, that he was paired with a Democrat who is voting. [Cries of "Name him."]

The SPEAKER. That is not a question of privilege. It has been ruled repeatedly that the House can take no cognizance of a violation of a pair. It is a matter of honor only.

The House divided; and the tellers reported twenty-two in the affirmative.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 90, nays 5, not voting 94; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Archer, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Barnes, Beaman, Beatty, Beck, Benton, Blair, Boyer, Brooks, Broomall, Burr, Butler, Cary, Churchill, Cobb, Coburn, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Eggleston, Ela, Eldridge, Ferriss, Ferry, Fields, Getz, Golladay, Haight, Halsey, Harding, Higby, Hill, Hopkins, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Johnson, Judd, Julian, Kerr, Ketcham, Knott, Kountz, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Lincoln, Loan, Logan, Loughbridge, Mallory, McClure, McCormick, Mercer, Miller, Moore, Morgan, Morrell, Mullins, Myers, Nicholson, O'Neill, Orth, Perham, Phelps, Pils, Price, Robertson, Schenck, Selye, Aaron F. Stevens, Stewart, Stokes, Stone, Taffe, John Trimble, Lawrence S. Trimble, Upson, Van Auker, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Thomas Williams, William Williams, John T. Wilson, and Woodward—90.

NAYS—Messrs. Ames, Bingham, Sidney Clarke, Niblack, and Taylor—5.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Allison, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Bailey, Baldwin, Banks, Barnum, Benjamin, Blaine, Boutwell, Bromwell, Buckland, Cake, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Cornell, Covode, Cullom, Dawes, Eckley, Eliot, Farnsworth, Finney, Fox, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Gravelly, Griswold, Grover, Hawkins, Holman, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hubburd, Humphrey, Jones, Kelley, Kelsey, Kitchen, Ladin, Lynch, Marshall, Marvin, Maynard, McCarthy, McCullough, Moorhead, Morrissey, Mungen, Newcomb, Nunn, Paine, Peters, Pike, Plants, Poland, Polsey, Pomeroy, Pruyn, Randall, Raum, Robinson, Ross, Sawyer, Scofield, Shanks, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Smith, Spalding, Starkweather, Thaddeus Stevens, Taber, Thomas, Trowbridge, Twichell, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Van Trump, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Woodbridge, and Woodward—94.

So the motion to excuse Mr. HUBBARD, of Iowa, was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to inquire of the Chair if, under the rules of the House and the order of the Speaker, the doorkeepers have a right to allow members to enter the Hall?

The SPEAKER. They have not.

Mr. LOGAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOYER] was permitted to enter, and he voted on the last call.

Mr. BOYER. I answered to my name when the roll was called on the order that there be a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. It has been the universal custom of the House pending a call of the House to permit members who have answered to their names to retire from the Hall for a few minutes and to return again.

Mr. KERR. I now move that all further proceedings under this call be dispensed with.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HIGBY. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. HIGBY. My point of order is that the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. KERR] is a dilatory motion, and therefore not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order on the ground that in no other way can the House relieve itself from its present situation so as to proceed with business except by dispensing with further proceedings under the call.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BINGHAM] has submitted a proposition to me which is satisfactory to me, and which, if agreed to by the House, I have no doubt will be satisfactory to this side of the House. We are not struggling for the purpose of delay merely.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio will state his proposition to the House, if there be no objection.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. LOGAN. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, no debate is in order. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. KERR,] that further proceedings under the call be now dispensed with; upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. SCHENCK. We are all in good health now, and we may as well go through with this matter.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 38, nays 54, not voting 97; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Baker, Beaman, Beck, Benton, Boyer, Burr, Cary, Dixon, Donnelly, Getz, Golladay, Haight, Hotchkiss, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Johnson, Julian, Ketcham, Knott, George V. Lawrence, Loughbridge, Lynch, Mallory, Mullins, Myers, Phelps, Pils, Robertson, Sawyer, Aaron F. Stevens, Stone, Lawrence S. Trimble, Twichell, Upson, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, John T. Wilson, and Woodward—38.

NAYS—Messrs. Ames, Archer, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Beatty, Blair, Butler, Churchill, Cobb, Coburn, Covode, Cullom, Dodge, Driggs, Eggleston, Ela, Ferriss, Ferry, Fields, Halsey, Harding, Higby, Hopkins, Chester D. Hubbard, Hunter, Judd, Kerr, Kountz, Lincoln, Loan, McCarthy, McClure, Mercer, Miller, Moore, Morgan, Morrell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Polsey, Price, Raum, Schenck, Stewart, Stokes, Taffe, Taylor, John Trimble, Van Auker, Welker, Thomas Williams, and William Williams—54.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Allison, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Bailey, Baldwin, Banks, Barnes, Barnum, Benjamin, Bingham, Blaine, Boutwell, Bromwell, Brooks, Broomall, Buckland, Cake, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cook, Cornell, Dawes, Eckley, Eldridge, Eliot, Farnsworth, Finney, Fox, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Gravelly, Griswold, Grover, Hawkins, Hill, Holman, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hubburd, Humphrey, Jones, Kelley, Kelsey, Kitchen, Ladin, William Lawrence, Logan, Marshall, Marvin, Maynard, McCormick, McCullough, Moorhead, Morrissey, Mungen, Newcomb, Niblack, Nicholson, Nuzz, Peters, Pike, Plants, Poland, Pomeroy, Pruyn, Randall, Robinson, Ross, Scofield, Selye, Shanks, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Smith, Spalding, Starkweather, Thaddeus Stevens, Taber, Thomas, Twichell, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Van Trump, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Woodbridge, and Woodward—87.

So the motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call was not agreed to.

Mr. KERR. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know whether it is in order for any member to leave the Hall and go into any of the cloak-rooms for any purpose during the call?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has ordered that the doors be closed and no member allowed to leave. The Chair has granted to three gentlemen permission to leave the Hall for not exceeding two minutes, but not to leave the floor on which the Hall is located.

Mr. BROOMALL. I rise to a question of privilege. I desire to give notice that when the House is in a condition to entertain such a proposition I intend to introduce a resolution censuring the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. ELDRIDGE,] who refused to vote on both the votes upon dispensing with further proceedings under the call, although he was within the Hall on both occasions, and although the Speaker had previously announced that it was the duty of all members to vote, and that those who refused to do so would be liable to the censure of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot entertain such a proposition at this time, because a call of the House is now in progress.

Mr. BROOMALL. I merely desire to give that notice.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I was engaged in reading the papers which I hold in my hand, and I do not know whether I voted or not.

Mr. BROOMALL. The gentleman was not so engaged during the first call.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I do not know whether I was or not.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will resume the call of absentees.

The Clerk resumed the call of the names of absentees.

RICHARD D. HUBBARD. No excuse offered.

CALVIN T. HULBURD. No excuse offered.

JAMES M. HUMPHREY. No excuse offered.

THOMAS L. JONES. No excuse offered.

WILLIAM D. KELLEY.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] has leave of absence.

WILLIAM H. KELSEY.

Mr. WARD. I believe my colleague, Mr. KELSEY, has leave of absence.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman so state?

Mr. WARD. I cannot state the fact positively, though I think it is so.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. KELSEY] stated to me that he had leave of absence.

The SPEAKER. That is sufficient.

BETHUEL M. KITCHEN.

Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia. My colleague, Mr. KITCHEN, has leave of absence.

The SPEAKER. That is the fact.

ADDISON H. LAFLIN. No excuse offered.

SAMUEL S. MARSHALL.

Mr. KERR. The gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. MARSHALL,] when he left the Hall, said he was indisposed, and left on account of indisposition. I therefore move that he be excused.

Mr. BURR. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the question is on excusing the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. MARSHALL.]

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HIGBY. I raise the question of order that that is a dilatory motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. HIGBY] states that in his opinion this is a dilatory motion. The Chair will submit the question to the House for its decision.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Has not the Chair ruled upon that question once?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has entertained several propositions moved by gentlemen of the minority, although he himself doubted the propriety of doing so. The Chair is doubtful whether he should have entertained the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURR] to lay the resolution on the table. The Chair thinks that under the circumstances it was a dilatory motion. The Chair also thinks that the proposition in regard to excusing an absent member was not a bona fide application, because the colleague of the gentleman absent who had moved for his excuse on account of illness had previously withdrawn the application. But the Chair will let the House decide the question, and for this reason: when a call of the House is ordered it is because less than a quorum is present. The object, under the Constitution, is to enforce the attendance of absent members. If those who are present and object to the call demand the yeas and nays on excusing every absentee, as they would have the right to do if this is entertained by the House, then no roll-call would culminate for days, at least for a day. The question is whether the constitutional right of a majority to enforce the attendance of absent members shall be accorded without dilatory proceedings. That question the Chair puts to the House.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. The same point of order was raised once, and the Chair decided that it was not a dilatory motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decided that the motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call was not a dilatory motion, as it was the only way in which it could be dispensed with.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I believe the Chair is right.

Mr. NICHOLSON. The same motion has been put and voted on by the House.

The SPEAKER. That was entertained by the Chair. The question now is whether the House of Representatives will entertain it, and the House of Representatives is of higher power than the Speaker, and a decision by the House would be more satisfactory to both sides of the House.

The question then recurred on sustaining Mr. HIGBY's point of order.

Mr. KERR demanded tellers.

Mr. BUTLER demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 84, nays 17, not voting 88; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ames, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Beaman, Beatty, Benton, Bingham, Blair, Broomall, Butler, Cary, Churchill, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Covode, Cullom, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Ella, Ferriss, Ferry, Fields, Halsey, Harding, Higby, Hill, Hopkins, Chester D. Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Judd, Julian, Ketcham, Koontz, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Lincoln, Loan, Logan, Loughridge, Lynch, Mallory, McCarthy, McClurg, McCormick, Mercer, Miller, Moore, Morrell, Myers, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Pile, Polsley, Price, Raum, Robertson, Sawyer, Schenck, Seelye, Aaron F. Stevens, Stewart, Stokes, Taffe, Taylor, John Trimble, Trowbridge, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Welker, Thomas Williams, William Williams, and John T. Wilson—84.

NAYS—Messrs. Archer, Barnes, Boyer, Burr, Eldridge, Getz, Golladay, Haight, Hotchkiss, Johnson, Knott, Morgan, Nicholson, Phelps, Stone, Lawrence S. Trimble, and Van Auker—17.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Allison, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Bailey, Baldwin, Banks, Barnum, Beck, Benjamin, Blaine, Boutwell, Bromwell, Brooks, Buckland, Cake, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Cornell, Dawes, Eckley, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Finney, Fox, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Gravelly, Griswold, Grover, Hawkins, Holman, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hulbard, Humphrey, Jones, Kelley, Kelsey, Kerr, Kitchen, Laffin, Marshall, Marvin, Maynard, McCullough, Moorhead, Morrissey, Mullins, Mungen, Newcomb, Niblack, Nunn, Peters, Pike, Plants, Poland, Pomeroy, Pruyn, Randall, Robinson, Ross, Scofield, Shanks, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Smith, Spalding, Starkweather, Thaddeus Stevens, Taber, Thomas, Twichell, Van Aernam, Van Trump, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Wood, Woodbridge, and Woodward—88.

So the point of order was sustained, and it was declared to be the judgment of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question now is what action shall be taken in reference to the absentees?

Mr. PILE. I move that the Sergeant-at-Arms be sent for them.

The SPEAKER. That will be entertained under the thirty-sixth rule.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. That is in violation of a standing rule of the House.

The SPEAKER. What rule?

Mr. ELDRIDGE. That the absentees shall be called for excuses.

Mr. WOOD. And the call of the absentees has not been concluded.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will remind the gentlemen from New York and Wisconsin that the ruling on the resolution growing out of the impeachment referred to the committee of managers was decided in the affirmative; that dilatory motions could not be entertained. It follows as a consequence that the House has the right to decide any question growing out of it. The call of the House has grown out of it, and the House, by a vote of 84 to 17 have decided that this is covered by the rule adopted on the 25th of February last. The House has affirmed that on appeal from the decision of the Chair. The House again affirms that the demand of the yeas and nays on excusing absentees is a dilatory motion; that although provided for by the thirty-sixth rule, adopted some years ago, it is prohibited by the rule adopted on the 25th of February last.

Mr. WOOD. The Chair has misunderstood my point of order. It was this: that until the Clerk has concluded the call, except by a motion to suspend proceedings, no other question can be raised.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has just replied as distinctly as he could to the precise point of order, and that the House have decided that the resolution submitted to-day was a resolution from a committee which had charge of nothing but impeachment and could report nothing but matters relative to impeachment, and therefore their resolution was covered by the rule of the 25th of February last. Upon an appeal the House sustained the decision of the Chair—yeas 84, nays 17. The Chair is never called upon to explain resolutions of the House of Representatives; he sometimes explains his own ruling.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. The point of order is, that whenever a temporary rule like the one we have adopted, which the Chair holds to be a rule governing the House, conflicts with a standing rule of the House, the standing rule must govern.

The SPEAKER. The Chair regards them both as of equal dignity, though upon legal principles, the latter would repeal the former. If there were any differences it would be in favor of the last; but the Chair does not so hold. He regards both as of equal dignity.

The question being put on the motion of Mr. PILE, it appeared to be carried.

Mr. KERR. I demand tellers.

Mr. PILE. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. JOHNSON. I desire to ask if all the names of the absentees are handed to the Sergeant-at-Arms?

The SPEAKER. If the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PILE] is adopted, that will be the order of the House.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 77, nays 23, not voting 89; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ames, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Beaman, Beatty, Benton, Blair, Broomall, Butler, Churchill, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Covode, Cullom, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Eggleston, Ella, Ferriss, Ferry, Fields, Halsey, Harding, Higby, Hill, Hopkins, Chester D. Hubbard, Hunter, Johnson, Judd, Julian, Ketcham, Koontz, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Lincoln, Loan, Logan, Loughridge, Lynch, Mallory, McCarthy, McClurg, Mercer, Miller, Moore, Morrell, Mullins, Myers, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Pile, Polsley, Price, Raum, Robertson, Sawyer, Schenck, Seelye, Aaron F. Stevens, Stewart, Stokes, Taffe, Taylor, John Trimble, Trowbridge, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Welker, and William Williams—77.

NAYS—Messrs. Archer, Barnes, Beck, Boyer, Brooks, Burr, Cary, Eldridge, Getz, Golladay, Haight, Hotchkiss, Jenckes, Kerr, Knott, McCormick, Morgan, Nicholson, Phelps, Stone, Lawrence S. Trimble, Van Auker, and Wood—23.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Allison, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Bailey, Baldwin, Banks, Barnum, Benjamin, Bingham, Blaine, Boutwell, Bromwell, Buckland, Cake, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Cornell, Dawes, Dixon, Eckley, Eliot, Farnsworth, Finney, Fox, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Gravelly, Griswold, Grover, Hawkins, Holman, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hulbard, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Jones, Kelley, Kelsey, Kitchen, Laffin, Marshall, Marvin, Maynard, McCullough, Moorhead, Morrissey, Mungen, Newcomb, Niblack, Nunn, Peters, Pike, Plants, Poland, Pomeroy, Pruyn, Randall, Robinson, Ross, Scofield, Shanks, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Smith, Spalding, Starkweather, Thaddeus Stevens, Taber, Thomas, Twichell, Van Aernam, Van Trump, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Thomas Williams, James F. Wilson, John T. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Woodbridge, and Woodward—89.

So the motion was agreed to.

During the roll-call,

Mr. KOONTZ said: I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. STEVENS, is sick.

Mr. ELDRIDGE and Mr. BURR objected to any excuses.

The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to entertain it by order of the House.

Mr. NIBLACK. I desire to state that I understand my colleague, Mr. WASHBURN, who left the city some days ago, considered himself as paired with me. My colleague, Mr. HUNTER, has so informed me. I did not know until recently that he was absent. But as I am informed that he considers himself paired with me I am willing to recognize the pair. Therefore I shall decline to vote hereafter unless compelled by order of the House.

Mr. KERR. I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. That cannot be done till the absentees are brought in.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I desire to move that all further proceedings in the call be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to entertain that motion, as the House has ordered an arrest of members.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Then I must take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to entertain the appeal.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is it in order to move to take a recess?

The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to entertain that motion.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Does the Chair decide that the House must remain in perpetual session?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not so decide.

After a considerable interval the Sergeant-at-Arms appeared and reported that he had arrested and now had at the bar of the House Mr. JAMES K. MOORHEAD, Mr. LUKE P. POLAND, Mr. PHILADELPH VAN TRUMP, Mr. GLENNI W. SCOFIELD, and Mr. READER W. CLARKE.

Mr. PILE. I move that the members now at the bar be allowed to take their seats, subject to the further order of the House.

Mr. WOOD. Is it in order to move that they be committed to the same bastille that Mr. Woolley occupies?

The SPEAKER. The Chair doubts if it would be.

Mr. WOOD. I did not know whether the Chair would entertain the motion.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. PILE.]

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask unanimous consent that on account of his advanced age, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORHEAD] be allowed to be seated during the call of the roll. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to be seated.

The question was taken on Mr. PILE's motion; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 98, nays 5, not voting 86; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Archer, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Beaman, Beatty, Beck, Benton, Bingham, Blair, Boyer, Brooks, Broomall, Burr, Butler, Cary, Churchill, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Covode, Cullom, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Eggleston, Ela, Eldridge, Ferriss, Ferry, Getz, Golladay, Haight, Halsey, Harding, Higby, Hill, Hooper, Hopkins, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Johnson, Judd, Julian, Kerr, Ketcham, Knott, Koontz, William Lawrence, Lincoln, Loan, Logan, Loughridge, Lynch, Mallory, McCarthy, McClurg, McCormick, Mercur, Miller, Moore, Morgan, Morrill, Mullins, Myers, Nicholson, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Phelps, Pile, Plants, Raum, Robertson, Sawyer, Schenck, Selye, Starkweather, Stewart, Stokes, Taffe, Taylor, John Trimble, Trowbridge, Upson, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Welker, Thomas Williams, William Williams, John T. Wilson, and Wood—98.

NAYS—Messrs. Paine, Aaron F. Stevens, Stone, Lawrence S. Trimble, and Van Auker—5.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Bailey, Baldwin, Banks, Barnes, Barnum, Benjamin, Blaine, Boutwell, Bromwell, Buckland, Cake, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Cornell, Dawes, Eckley, Eliot, Farnsworth, Fields, Finney, Fox, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Gravely, Griswold, Grover, Hawkins, Holman, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Jones, Kelley, Kelsey, Kitchen, Knott, Laffin, Marshall, Marvin, Maynard, McCullough, Morrissy, Mungen, Newcomb, Niblack, Nunn, Peters, Phelps, Pike, Plants, Poland, Pomeroy, Pruyn, Randall, Robinson, Ross, Schofield, Shanks, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Smith, Spalding, Thaddeus Stevens, Taber, Thomas, Twichell, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Van Trump, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Woodbridge, and Woodward—86.

So the motion was agreed to; and the members at the bar of the House accordingly resumed their seats.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Has not the hour for the Republican caucus, of which notice was given, arrived?

Several MEMBERS. It is postponed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot answer that question.

Mr. WOOD. Is it in order now to move to dispense with further proceedings under the call?

The SPEAKER. It is in order now. The Chair will state that some little time since he ruled this motion out of order for the reason that the House had ordered him to sign a warrant of arrest. The Clerk was preparing it, but the Chair had not then had an opportunity of executing the order of the House and no business could be transacted until the Speaker had obeyed the order devolved on him by the House. The motion is now in order.

Mr. WOOD. Then I move that all further proceedings in the call be dispensed with.

Mr. BUTLER. If the House should suspend further proceedings would not that open the doors and allow our friends on the other side to go home?

The SPEAKER. It would.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I hope that the motion will not be adopted.

Mr. PILE. I move to lay the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Wood] on the table.

The SPEAKER. The motion cannot be laid on the table. The question must be taken directly on the proposition.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion of the gentleman from New York.

On ordering the yeas and nays there were—yeas 21, nays 89; less than one fifth voting in the affirmative.

Mr. UPSON. I observe that on this question the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VAN TRUMP] has voted. I submit that he has no right to vote, being in contempt of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman has the right to vote, he having been discharged subject to the further order of the House.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. BURN and PILE were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—yeas twenty-four, nays not counted.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 7, nays 104, not voting 78; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cary, Haight, Hotchkiss, McCormick, Stewart, Lawrence S. Trimble, and Van Auker—7.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Archer, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Barnes, Beaman, Beatty, Beck, Benton, Bingham, Blair, Boyer, Brooks, Broomall, Burr, Butler, Churchill, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Covode, Cullom, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Eggleston, Ela, Eldridge, Ferriss, Ferry, Fields, Getz, Golladay, Halsey, Harding, Higby, Hill, Hooper, Hopkins, Chester D. Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Johnson, Judd, Julian, Kerr, Ketcham, Knott, Koontz, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Lincoln, Loan, Logan, Loughridge, Lynch, Mallory, McCarthy, McClurg, Mercur, Miller, Moore, Moorhead, Morgan, Morrill, Mullens, Myers, Nicholson, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Phelps, Pile, Poland, Polsley, Price, Raum, Robertson, Schenck, Seofield, Selye, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Stokes, Stone, Taffe, Taylor, John Trimble, Trowbridge, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Van Trump, Ward, Welker, Thomas Williams, William Williams, John T. Wilson, and Wood—104.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Bailey, Baldwin, Banks, Barnum, Benjamin, Blaine, Boutwell, Bromwell, Buckland, Cake, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Cornell, Dawes, Eckley, Eliot, Farnsworth, Finney, Fox, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Gravely, Griswold, Grover, Hawkins, Holman, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Jones, Kelley, Kelsey, Kitchen, Laffin, Marshall, Marvin, Maynard, McCullough, Morrissy, Mungen, Newcomb, Niblack, Nunn, Peters, Pike, Plants, Pomeroy, Pruyn, Randall, Robinson, Ross, Sawyer, Shanks, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Smith, Spalding, Thaddeus Stevens, Taber, Thomas, Twichell, Van Aernam, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Woodbridge, and Woodward—78.

So the House refused to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to move that the House adjourn?

The SPEAKER. The House has decided that that motion would not be in order. Therefore the Chair cannot entertain it.

Mr. WOOD. The question, I think, has not been submitted to the House.

The SPEAKER. It has been, upon an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. WOOD. We have no means, then, of extricating ourselves from the difficulty in which this question is involved? There is no way in which we can reach a vote upon the resolution, nor can we adjourn.

The SPEAKER. According to the resolution adopted on the 25th of February but one motion to adjourn can be made pending the consideration of a resolution reported from the board of managers.

Mr. WOOD. We cannot adjourn, and we cannot do anything.

Mr. UPSON. I call the gentleman to order.

The SPEAKER. It is not even debatable, though the Chair was willing to hear the remark of the gentleman from New York.

The Sergeant-at-Arms then appeared, and reported that in pursuance of the order of the House he had arrested, and now had at the bar of the House Mr. FRANCIS THOMAS, of Maryland, Mr. JOHN D. BALDWIN, of Massachusetts, and Mr. TOBIAS A. PLANTS, of Ohio.

Mr. PILE. I move that the members now at the bar be allowed to take their seats, subject to the further order of the House.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 100, nays 2, not voting 87; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Archer, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Barnes, Beaman, Beatty, Benton, Bingham, Blair, Boyer, Brooks, Broomall, Burr, Butler, Cary, Churchill, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Covode, Cullom, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Eldridge, Ferriss, Ferry, Fields, Getz, Golladay, Haight, Halsey, Higby, Hill, Hooper, Hopkins, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Johnson, Julian, Kerr, Ketcham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Lincoln, Loan, Logan, Loughridge, Lynch, Mallory, McCarthy, McClurg, Mercur, Miller, Moore, Moorhead, Morgan, Mullins, Myers, Nicholson, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Pile, Poland, Polsley, Price, Raum, Robertson, Sawyer, Schenck, Seofield, Selye, Starkweather, Stewart, Stokes, Taffe, Taylor, John Trimble, Lawrence S. Trimble, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Auker, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Van Trump, Ward, Welker, Thomas Williams, William Williams, John T. Wilson, and Wood—100.

NAYS—Messrs. McCormick and Stone—2.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Ames, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Bailey, Baldwin, Banks, Barnum, Beck, Benjamin, Blaine, Boutwell, Bromwell, Buckland, Cake, Chanler, Cook, Cornell, Dawes, Eckley, Eggleston, Ela, Eliot, Farnsworth, Finney, Fox, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Gravely, Griswold, Grover, Harding, Hawkins, Holman, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Jenckes, Jones, Judd, Kelley, Kelsey, Kitchen, Knott, Koontz, Laffin, Marshall, Marvin, Maynard, McCullough, Morrissy, Mungen, Newcomb, Niblack, Nunn, Peters, Phelps, Pike, Plants, Pomeroy, Pruyn, Randall, Robinson, Ross, Shanks, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Smith, Spalding, Aaron F. Stevens, Thaddeus Stevens, Taber, Thomas, Twichell, Van Aernam, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Woodbridge, and Woodward—87.

So the motion of Mr. PILE was agreed to.

Mr. GETZ. Is it in order for me to ask leave of absence until to-morrow morning?

The SPEAKER. It requires, in order to grant leave of absence to a member, a quorum of the House and an open session of the House. As soon as further proceedings under this call shall have been dispensed with it will be in order to grant leave of absence.

Mr. SCHENCK. Would it be in order, by unanimous consent, to permit the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Getz] to leave the Hall and go away.

The SPEAKER. It would be in order.

Mr. SCHENCK. Then I ask unanimous consent of the House for the gentleman to absent himself at this time.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I object.

Mr. WOOD. I object, unless permission is also given to some twenty other members on this side.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Is it in order now to move that all further proceedings under this call be dispensed with?

The SPEAKER. That motion would be in order.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Then I make that motion, and on it I call for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and upon a division there were—yeas 23, nays 88.

So (one fifth voting in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 6, nays 103, not voting 80; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cary, Haight, Hotchkiss, Stone, Lawrence S. Trimble, and Van Trump—6.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Archer, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Barnes, Beaman, Beatty, Beck, Benton, Bingham, Blair, Boyer, Brooks, Broomall, Burr, Butler, Churchill, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Covode, Cullom, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Eggleston, Ela, Ferriss, Ferry, Fields, Getz, Golladay, Harding, Higby, Hill, Hooper, Hopkins, Chester D. Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Johnson, Judd, Julian, Kerr, Ketcham, Koontz, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Lincoln, Loan, Logan, Loughridge, Lynch, Mallory, McCarthy, McClurg, McCormick, Mercur, Miller, Moore, Morgan, Morrill, Mullins, Myers, Nicholson, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Phelps, Pile, Plants, Poland, Polsley, Price, Raum, Robertson, Schenck, Seofield, Selye, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Stewart, Stokes, Taffe, Taylor, Thomas, John Trimble, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Auker, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Van Trump, Ward, Welker, Thomas Williams, William Williams, John T. Wilson, and Wood—103.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Ames, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Bailey, Banks, Barnum, Benjamin, Blaine, Boutwell, Bromwell, Buckland, Cake, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Cornell, Dawes, Eckley, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Finney, Fox, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Gravely, Griswold, Grover, Halsey, Hawkins, Holman, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Jones, Kelley, Kelsey, Kitchen, Knott, Laffin, Marshall, Marvin, Maynard, McCullough, Morgan, Morrissy, Mungen, Newcomb, Niblack, Nunn, Peters, Pike, Plants, Pomeroy, Pruyn, Randall, Robinson, Ross, Sawyer, Shanks, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Smith, Spalding, Thaddeus Stevens, Taber, Twichell, Van Aernam, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Woodbridge, and Woodward—80.

So the motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call was not agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK. I desire to say that some four or five gentlemen whom I could name, Republicans as well as Democrats, answered at the first roll-call and then went away. As I understand there is no mode of reaching them except by dispensing with all further proceedings under this call, and then having another one, I suggest we had better dispense with all further proceedings under this call and then have a new call of the House.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Is it in order for the gentleman to make that motion?

Mr. SCHENCK. I shall move to censure these gentlemen when it is in order to do so.

The SPEAKER. The Chair could not entertain that motion at the present time, as it has just been voted down. The usual parliamentary course is that some business must intervene.

Mr. CULLOM. I wish to say that my colleague [Mr. WASHBURN] went home on account of sickness.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Is that dilatory?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. BURR. I move that he be excused.

The SPEAKER. The House has decided that that is a dilatory motion.

Mr. BINGHAM. I ask by common consent that we now take a direct vote on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. That can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I object.

Mr. BROOKS. We do not object on this side of the House.

Mr. WOOD. There is no objection here to our coming to a direct vote on the proposition.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to understand the proposition. Is a direct vote to be taken on the proposition immediately?

The SPEAKER. That is the proposition, and the Chair hears no objection.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. The proposition is that the vote shall be taken on the resolution at this time, and that a motion shall be entered to reconsider that, and the other resolutions shall be introduced pro forma, ordered to be printed, and that to-morrow we shall have two hours' debate. That would be satisfactory.

Mr. LOGAN. I will object for four weeks before any agreement is made at all. I was kept here two days and not permitted to open my mouth on the proposition of impeachment, and I do not intend—

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I do not believe there was ever a time when that gentleman's mouth was kept shut so long. [Laughter.]

Mr. LOGAN. So far as that is concerned, the gentleman's mouth is always shut. He never talks in this House. He is a gentleman of few words, and the few there are have nothing in them. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the proposition?

Mr. LOGAN. I object.

Mr. BUTLER. Is it understood there is no condition annexed to this?

The SPEAKER. It was so stated by the Chair.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not object.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I object unless we shall have an opportunity to debate this resolution.

Mr. LOGAN. Then you cannot debate it.

Mr. MORGAN. I will withdraw the objection I made if Mr. Manager BINGHAM will allow me to ask him a question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORGAN. The question I wish the honorable gentleman to answer is whether it is true that the committee have refused Mr. Woolley's counsel opportunity to communicate with him?

Mr. BINGHAM. I do not know that under the rules of the House it is in order for me to state anything the committee has done in session except by order of the committee, and, therefore, I am not at liberty to answer the gentleman's question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks, that, business having transpired, it is now in order to renew the motion that all further proceedings under the call shall be dispensed with.

Mr. LYNCH. I make that motion.

The motion was disagreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not aware that there is any other motion that can be made at this time.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I object to the gentleman from Ohio making any statement or speech.

Mr. BINGHAM. I am not going to make any speech. I am only going to say—

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I object to the gentleman stating anything unless he makes some point of order which is in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state that all points of order made in the House are not in order, but the Chair will hear the point of order of the gentleman from Ohio as he hears the points of order of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BINGHAM. I was only going to say that, if in order, I will answer the inquiry made by my colleague, [Mr. MORGAN,] after consulting with the majority of the committee in regard to the action of the committee. That is all.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I object.

Mr. BROOMALL. Would it be in order for me at this time to call up my question of privilege in regard to the non-voting of the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. ELDRIDGE?]

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would not be in order, as the doors are closed and the House is acting under a call of the House. It can, however, be taken up by unanimous consent.

Mr. BROOMALL. Well, I ask unanimous consent.

Mr. VAN AUKEN. I object.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. At the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. MORGAN,] I withdraw the objection to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BINGHAM] making his statement.

Mr. BINGHAM. I am instructed by the majority of the committee to make answer to the interrogatory of my colleague, [Mr. MORGAN,] My answer is this.

Mr. SELYE. What was the question?

Mr. BINGHAM. His inquiry was whether the committee had resolved that Woolley should not have an opportunity of consulting his counsel.

Mr. MORGAN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. That was not the inquiry.

Mr. BINGHAM. Well, sir, what was it?

Mr. MORGAN. I did not ask if the committee had resolved, but if Mr. Woolley was not denied communication with his counsel.

Mr. BINGHAM. By whom?

Mr. MORGAN. By the committee.

Mr. BINGHAM. Exactly.

Mr. MORGAN. Directly or indirectly.

Mr. BINGHAM. Very well.

Mr. MORGAN. Or some one of them.

Mr. BINGHAM. I do not desire to misrepresent the gentleman. He adds to the question now, "Some one of them." I cannot answer for some one of them; but, so far as I know, no member of the committee made any such denial except as I shall state hereafter; nor did the committee make any such denial except this, that when the witness was brought before the committee, under the order of this House, to answer the interrogatories put to him, he declined, as will be shown by the record which will be presented if ever we reach the second resolution, which is pending here, and, among other things, insisted that he should not answer the question until his counsel was brought into the presence of the committee and consultation was had with him. So far objection was made, but there was no denial of his communicating with his counsel at his own chamber where he is held in custody, nor was there any action of the committee to that effect.

I may be allowed to state further that I understand from what little was said by the witness that he had had an interview with his counsel, and that the evasive answer which he made was given under the direct instructions and advice of his counsel.

A MEMBER. Written?

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes, written. And not only that, but he has had intercourse with whomsoever he pleased since his arrest and while he was in custody and up to this hour.

Mr. MILLER. I would like to ask the gentleman who is his counsel?

Mr. BINGHAM. I believe the witness himself gave Mr. Merrick as the name of his counsel, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. MORGAN. Do I understand the gentleman to say that Mr. Merrick has been allowed free access to the prisoner?

Mr. BINGHAM. I do not use the word "free." I only state what the witness said himself. He did not intimate that his counsel had been denied access to him; but, on the contrary, he said that he had had an interview with his counsel, and gave the evasive answer under the instruction and direction of his counsel, whom he named as Mr. Merrick.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will explain the matter for the satisfaction of the gentleman from Ohio. The Sergeant-at-Arms submitted the question to the Speaker whether close confinement would prevent the witness from having access to his counsel, and the Chair answered in the negative—that the right of counsel was a right guaranteed to a prisoner, and no power could take it from him except an order of the House to place him in solitary confinement. He is now in close confinement exactly as if in jail, where he would have the right to confer with counsel, and the Chair directed that he should have a right to confer with him at any time.

Mr. MORGAN. I am happy that the Chair has overruled the committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER. No such thing.

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand that the committee had ruled anything contrary to his own ruling.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask—

Mr. UPSON. I object to the gentleman from Ohio asking any more questions.

The SPEAKER. The question was referred by the managers themselves and the Sergeant-at-Arms to the Speaker for his decision, and he never heard any objection to his decision until now.

Mr. MORGAN. My further question is this: when the committee of managers—

Mr. UPSON and Mr. HIGBY objected to any further questions.

The SPEAKER. It can only be entertained by unanimous consent.

Mr. BROOKS. I ask consent to make a statement.

A MEMBER. I think the witness should answer and not the committee.

Mr. BROOKS. I move that the witness be allowed to come in here and answer for himself.

Mr. HIGBY. I object.

Mr. SCHENCK. I rise to a question of order. I find that at least four gentlemen of this House, namely, Messrs. PIKE, ROSS, BLAINE, and CHANLER, answered to their names after proceedings here had been commenced, then left the Hall and are now staying away. I ask whether it will be in order to take some public notice of that fact by mentioning it as I do now. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks by unanimous consent it could be mentioned. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCHENCK. I now ask unanimous consent of the House to send for those gentlemen as we sent for others under the call.

The SPEAKER. That can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. WOOD. I object.

The SPEAKER. The House, by unanimous consent, can order that there be a special call for those members.

Mr. SCHENCK. They cannot be sent for, I understand, except by unanimous consent under this call?

The SPEAKER. Or by dispensing with this call and ordering another.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask unanimous consent to have them called for.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] objects.

Mr. JOHNSON. I rise to ask a parliamentary question. Yesterday I was granted indefinite leave of absence. Am I not entitled now to leave the Hall and go home?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman is so entitled. When the House grants such leave of absence it is for the member to avail himself of it or not.

Mr. JOHNSON. It was my intention to have left last evening or this evening, but as I did not get ready yesterday I have been detained here this evening.

The SPEAKER. When the House grants indefinite leave of absence the member has a right to take advantage of it, and leave or continue in the Hall as he sees fit.

Mr. SCHENCK. Is it in order to ask leave of absence for members?

The SPEAKER. It is in order only to grant leave of absence where a member desires it.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask unanimous consent that indefinite leave of absence be granted to all the gentlemen on the other side.

The SPEAKER. They have not asked it, and the Chair cannot ask it for them. It is for the members themselves to ask it or to authorize it to be asked for them.

Mr. WOOD. Is the gentleman willing we shall all retire from the Hall?

The SPEAKER. That was the object, as the Chair understood it, but the Chair will not entertain the proposition.

Mr. WOOD. We will absent ourselves if it is desired.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] states that he will take advantage of the request if it is granted. The Chair, therefore, thinks the request can be made for the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WOOD. The Chair misunderstands me. I do not desire leave of absence for myself. If I go, I go with my friends; not without.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman feels authorized to ask leave of absence for all of them, the Chair will entertain the proposition.

Mr. WOOD. We will stay here until morning.

Mr. SCHENCK. I want it understood that there is no objection on this side.

After some minutes,

Mr. COVODE said: I wish to ask unanimous consent of the House to make a few remarks at this time for the purpose of edifying and instructing the gentlemen on the other side of the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. WOOD. We have no objection on this side of the House.

Mr. ALLISON. I object.

Mr. COVODE. All I can say is that I am sorry that objection is made.

Some minutes afterward,

Mr. BINGHAM said: I desire again to ask the unanimous consent of the House that a vote be taken on the pending resolution. If that is granted, and that resolution is acted upon, then I propose to offer the other resolution, and have it printed, so that it may come up to-morrow. The House will remember that when I opened this question this afternoon, before this controversy arose, I stated that there was no disposition on the part of the committee to prevent discussion on the general resolution.

The SPEAKER. The proposition of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BINGHAM] requires unanimous consent.

Mr. HIGBY. I object.

Mr. BUTLER. Was there any condition attached to the proposition?

The SPEAKER. There was none.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. HIGBY. I object.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. And I also object to the proposition, unless it contains also a proposition that there shall be some debate on the resolution.

Some time subsequently,

Mr. BUTLER said: I ask unanimous consent to make a statement.

Mr. VAN AUKEN. I object.

The Sergeant-at-Arms here appeared and reported that, in pursuance of the order of the House, he had arrested, and now had at the bar of the House, Mr. SAMUEL J. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. DAVID A. NUNN, of Tennessee.

Mr. PILE. I move that the members now at the bar of the House be allowed to take their seats, subject to the further order of the House.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays; and upon a division there were—yeas 21, noes 89.

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. VAN AUKEN called for tellers upon ordering the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering tellers; and there were twenty-two in the affirmative.

So (one fifth of a quorum voting in the affirmative) tellers were ordered; and Mr. TRIMBLE of Kentucky, and Mr. HOOPER of Massachusetts were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—yeas 24, noes 93.

So (one fifth voting in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 112, nays 2, not voting 75; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Barnes, Beaman, Beatty, Beck, Benton, Bingham, Blair, Brooks, Broomall, Burr, Butler, Cary, Churchill, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Covode, Cullom, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Eggleston, Ela, Eldridge, Ferriss, Ferry, Fields, Getz, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Haight, Halsey, Harding, Higby, Hill, Hopkins, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jencks, Johnson, Judd, Julian, Kerr, Ketcham, Knott, Koontz, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Lincoln, Loan, Logan, Loughbridge, Lynch, Mallory, McCarthy, McClurg, McCormick, Mercur, Miller, Moore, Moorhead, Morgan, Morrill, Mullins, Myers, Newcomb, Nicholson, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Pile, Plants, Poland, Polesley, Price, Raum, Robertson, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Selye, Shellabarger, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Stewart, Stokes, Taft, Thomas, John Trimble, Lawrence S. Trimble, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Auker, Robert T. Van Horn, Van Trump, Ward, Welker, Thomas Williams, William Williams, John T. Wilson, and Wood—112.

NAYS—Messrs. Archer, and Boyer—2.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Bailey, Banks, Barnum, Benjamin, Blaine, Boutwell, Bromwell, Buckland, Cake, Chanler, Cook, Cornell, Dawes, Eckley, Eliot, Farnsworth, Finney, Fox, Garfield, Gravely, Griswold, Grover, Hawkins, Holman, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Jones, Kelley, Kelsey, Kitchen, Laffin, Marshall, Marvin, Maynard, McCullough, Morrissey, Mungen, Niblack, Nunn, Peters, Phelps, Pike, Pomeroy, Pruyn, Randall, Robinson, Ross, Shanks, Sitgreaves, Smith, Spalding, Thaddeus Stevens, Stone, Taber, Taylor, Twichell, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Woodbridge, and Woodward—75.

So the motion of Mr. PILE was agreed to, and the members at the bar accordingly resumed their seats.

The Sergeant-at-Arms here reported that, in accordance with the order of the House, he had arrested Mr. DAWES, Mr. WASHBURN of Massachusetts, Mr. MARVIN, Mr. WOODBRIDGE, and Mr. SMITH, and brought them to the bar of the House.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that they be allowed to take their seats, subject to the further orders of the House.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. LOGAN. I move an amendment that all brought in hereafter shall have liberty to take their seats subject to the orders of the House.

The SPEAKER. That can be done by unanimous consent. What is present can be decided at once, but in regard to future action unanimous consent or a suspension of the rules is required.

Mr. BEAMAN. I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. That has priority.

Mr. SCHENCK. I wish to reserve the right as to the four members to whom I have already alluded.

The SPEAKER. The only reservation under parliamentary law is to be found on page 32 of the Digest:

"By an adjournment pending a call all proceedings in the call are terminated; but where the House has previously passed an order specially directing otherwise such special direction should doubtless be executed."

This is the precedent in the Twenty-Seventh Congress, reaffirmed afterward by a decision which does not appear in the Digest. It is within the recollection of the Chair where a quorum was present in the House all further proceedings were dispensed with under the call, with the condition that those still absent should be brought to the bar by the Sergeant-at-Arms at the opening of the House the next day.

Mr. SCHENCK. I want the reservation as to these four.

The SPEAKER. The only way that can be done is to vote down the motion to dispense with all further proceedings under this call.

The House divided; and there were—yeas 45, noes 51.

So Mr. BEAMAN's motion was rejected.

The yeas and nays were ordered on Mr. ALLISON's motion.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 117, nays 3, not voting 69; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Archer, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Barnes, Beaman, Beatty, Beck, Benton, Bingham, Blair, Boyer, Broomall, Burr, Butler, Cary, Churchill, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Covode, Cullom, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Eggleston, Ela, Eldridge, Ferriss, Ferry, Fields, Getz, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Haight, Halsey, Harding, Higby, Hill, Hooper, Hopkins, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jencks, Johnson, Judd, Julian, Kerr, Ketcham, Knott, Koontz, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Lincoln, Loan, Logan, Loughbridge, Lynch, Mallory, McCarthy, McClurg, McCormick, Mercur, Miller, Moore, Moorhead, Morgan, Morrill, Mullins, Myers, Newcomb, Nicholson, Nunn, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Phelps, Pile, Plants, Poland, Polesley, Price, Randall, Raum, Robertson, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Selye, Shellabarger, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Stewart, Stokes, Taft, Taylor, Thomas, John Trimble, Lawrence S. Trimble, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Auker, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Van Trump, Ward, Welker, Thomas Williams, William Williams, John T. Wilson, and Wood—117.

NAYS—Messrs. Brooks, Haight, and Stone—3.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Bailey, Banks, Barnum, Benjamin, Blaine, Boutwell, Bromwell, Buckland, Cake, Chanler, Cook, Cornell, Dawes, Eckley, Eliot, Farnsworth, Finney, Fox, Garfield, Gravely, Griswold, Grover, Hawkins, Holman, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Jones, Kelley, Kelsey, Kitchen, Laffin, Marshall, Marvin, Maynard, McCullough, Morrissey, Mungen, Niblack, Peters, Pike, Pomeroy, Pruyn, Robinson, Ross, Shanks, Sitgreaves, Smith, Spalding, Thaddeus Stevens, Taber, Twichell, Van Aernam, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Woodbridge, and Woodward—69.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BROOMALL. I submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to bring the absent members to the bar of the House to-morrow at one o'clock p. m., there to abide the order of the House; and that all further proceedings under the call of the House be dispensed with except for the enforcement of this order.

Mr. BUTLER. I think there is now a quorum of the friends of good order in the Hall.

Mr. WOOD. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. BUTLER. I hope everybody will remain.

Mr. MULLINS. I move to insert "then," so it will read "then and there abide."

The amendment was agreed to.

The question was put; and there were—yeas 92, noes 24.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken on agreeing to the resolution of Mr. BROOMALL; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 97, nays 27; not voting 71; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Beaman, Beatty, Benton, Bingham, Blair, Broomall, Butler, Cary, Churchill, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Covode, Cullom, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Eggleston, Ela, Ferriss, Ferry, Fields, Halsey, Harding, Higby, Hill, Hooper, Hopkins, Chester D. Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Judd, Julian, Ketcham, Koontz, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Lincoln, Loan, Logan, Loughbridge, Lynch, Mallory, Marvin, McCarthy, McClurg, Mercur, Miller, Moore, Moorhead, Morrill, Mullins, Myers, Newcomb, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Pile, Plants, Poland, Polesley, Price, Raum, Robertson, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Selye, Shellabarger, Smith, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Stewart, Stokes, Taffe, Taylor, Thomas, John Trimble, Trowbridge, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Welker, Thomas Williams, William Williams, and John T. Wilson—97.

NAYS—Messrs. Archer, Barnes, Beck, Boyer, Burr, Eldridge, Getz, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Haight, Hotchkiss, Johnson, Kerr, Knott, Niblack, Peters, Randall, Stone, Lawrence S. Trimble, Van Auken, and Van Trump—21.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Bailey, Banks, Barnum, Benjamin, Blaine, Boutwell, Bromwell, Brooks, Buckland, Cake, Chanler, Cook, Cornell, Dawes, Eckley, Eliot, Farnsworth, Finney, Fox, Garfield, Gravely, Griswold, Grover, Hawkins, Holman, Asabel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Jones, Kelley, Kelsey, Kitchen, Laffin, Marshall, Maynard, McCormick, McCullough, Morgan, Morrissey, Mungen, Nicholson, Nunn, Phelps, Pike, Pomeroy, Pruyn, Robinson, Ross, Shanks, Sigreaves, Spalding, Thaddeus Stevens, Taber, Twichell, Van Aernam, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Wood, Woodbridge, and Woodward—71.

So the resolution was adopted.

The SPEAKER. Further proceedings under the call are dispensed with, subject to the conditions of the resolution. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BURR,] that the resolution reported by the select committee be laid on the table, on which no quorum voted. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. BURR. Further proceedings under the call having been dispensed with, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to entertain the motion. Under the rule adopted this afternoon it cannot be entertained until the resolution is disposed of.

Mr. BARNES. I desire to offer a resolution which I send to the Chair.

Mr. MULLINS and others objected.

Mr. WOOD. Is it in order to move to postpone?

The SPEAKER. It is not, under the rule adopted by the House. Two propositions are pending, namely, on agreeing to the resolution, and on laying the resolution on the table. The Clerk will again call the roll.

The question was again taken on laying the resolution on the table; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 28, nays 97, not voting 64; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Archer, Barnes, Beck, Boyer, Brooks, Burr, Cary, Eldridge, Getz, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Haight, Hotchkiss, Johnson, Kerr, Knott, McCormick, Morgan, Nicholson, Phelps, Randall, Sigreaves, Stewart, Stone, Lawrence S. Trimble, Van Auken, Van Trump, and Wood—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Baldwin, Beaman, Beatty, Benton, Bingham, Blair, Boutwell, Broomall, Churchill, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Covode, Cullom, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Eggleston, Ela, Ferriss, Ferry, Fields, Garfield, Halsey, Harding, Higby, Hill, Hooper, Hopkins, Chester D. Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Judd, Julian, Ketcham, Koontz, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Lincoln, Loan, Logan, Loughbridge, Lynch, Mallory, Marvin, McCarthy, McClurg, Mercur, Miller, Moore, Moorhead, Morrill, Mullins, Newcomb, Nunn, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Pile, Plants, Poland, Polesley, Price, Raum, Robertson, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Selye, Shellabarger, Smith, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Stokes, Taffe, Taylor, Thomas, John Trimble, Trowbridge, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Welker, Thomas Williams, William Williams, John T. Wilson, and Woodward—97.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Bailey, Baker, Banks, Barnum, Benjamin, Blaine, Bromwell, Buckland, Butler, Cake, Chanler, Cook, Cornell, Eckley, Eliot, Farnsworth, Finney, Fox, Gravely, Griswold, Grover, Hawkins, Holman, Asabel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Jones, Kelley, Kelsey, Kitchen, Laffin, Marshall, Maynard, McCullough, Morrissey, Mungen, Myers, Niblack, Peters, Pike, Pomeroy, Pruyn, Robinson, Ross, Shanks, Spalding, Thaddeus Stevens, Taber, Twichell, Van Aernam, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodward—61.

So the House refused to lay the resolution on the table.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs under the operation of the previous question. Will the House agree to the resolution?

Mr. BURR. I renew the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to entertain that motion on the grounds already stated.

Mr. MULLINS. Is not this a contempt of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to entertain it on the further ground that the House has decided on an appeal that that decision was correct. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the resolution if they are insisted on.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. We feel that we are subdued. We cannot resist any longer. We have resisted to the utmost of our ability.

The SPEAKER. Then, if there be no objection, the call of the yeas and nays will be dispensed with. The Chair hears no objection.

The resolution was then adopted.

Mr. BINGHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RECUSANT WITNESS.

Mr. BINGHAM. I wish now to report the second resolution to the House, and I desire to say, in the hearing of the House, that I wish to report the resolution pro forma, have it passed pro forma, and printed in the Globe, and a motion to reconsider entered, with the further statement that on to-morrow, after the reading of the Journal, I shall claim my hour under the rules to discuss the resolution on the motion to reconsider—and I hope the House will not deny it to me—with the intention of allowing such gentlemen as desire to engage in the discussion on both sides of the House to occupy a portion of my time, so that the case may be heard.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Ohio that under the rules, if the motion to reconsider is pending when the House adjourns, he will be entitled to one hour, whether the House consents or not. It is his right.

Mr. BINGHAM. There is no condition obligatory upon me in regard to this matter further than this, that I stated when the discussion arose—and, I believe, with the general consent of the committee—that it was our purpose to allow some discussion on the second resolution, because it is in accordance with the universal practice and usage in this country, inasmuch as it protects the liberties of the citizens of the Republic. And it ought to be apparent to gentlemen that there is this advantage in having the resolution thus presented now and passed upon and the motion to reconsider entered, that it will appear in the Globe to-morrow morning, so that gentlemen can come to the discussion of the question with some fair understanding of the recitals of the preamble touching the testimony taken, not only of the witness in question, but of others whom he himself named and referred to, as well as others with whom he was in association in regard to this whole question.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I want to raise the same question of order with reference to this resolution that I raised with reference to the other, that the committee have no right to report the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has decided, and the House have sustained that decision on an appeal and by the yeas and nays, that the House having given the committee all the rights and privileges which were granted to the managers they have a right to report resolutions. The Chair makes the same decision now.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I supposed that would be the decision.

Mr. BURR. I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether the course proposed by him limits all discussion on the resolution to one hour?

Mr. BINGHAM. It does, unless the House shall allow the time to be extended, and for my own part I think the House would be satisfied if the final vote should be taken, without any delay, on the resolution at two o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. BUTLER. No; that would break up the whole day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Ohio that under the order made by the House at one o'clock to-morrow the members who were absent on the call of the House, and who have not been excused, are to be brought to the bar of the House.

Mr. BINGHAM. I shall not insist on it; I only made the suggestion. An hour is allowed me under the rules, and that is all I can say about it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman to propose that the resolution shall be considered as agreed to and a motion to reconsider pending, whereupon he will move that the House adjourn.

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WOOD. Let the preamble and resolution be read.

Mr. BINGHAM. There is no necessity for that at this late hour. It will appear in the Globe to-morrow.

Mr. WOOD. I will withdraw my call for the reading of the resolution.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I desire to hear it read.

The Clerk read the preamble and resolution, as follows:

Whereas Charles W. Woolley has been brought before the committee and the following questions proposed to him by the committee, to wit:

"Question. The committee desire to know whether on the 6th of May you telegraphed over the signature of 'Hooker' to Sheridan Shook, 'My business is adjusted. Place ten to my credit with Gillis, Harney & Co., No. 24 Broad street?'"

"Question. Did you also telegraph to Sheridan Shook, over the signature of 'Hooker,' on the 12th of May, 'The five should be had. It may be absolutely necessary?'"

Which questions Woolley declined to answer, in the words following, to wit:

"This is a private and confidential communication, passing between counsel and client. It has reference to business in that relation and to nothing else, and has no reference whatever to the trial of the President on the articles of impeachment preferred against him, nor to the conduct or result of the trial, nor the vote of any persons on the trial, nor any allusion thereto whatever. That is my answer."

And whereas Sheridan Shook, the party to whom said supposed confidential and privileged communications are alleged to have been sent, has been examined by your committee and testified as follows in regard to the money mentioned in said telegram:

"By Mr. BUTLER:

"Question. Do you know Charles W. Woolley?"

"Answer. I do.

"Question. How long have you known him?"

"Answer. I do not think I have known him over a year."

"Question. Have you had business relations with him?"

"Answer. Very little, if any. I do not know that I ever had any transaction with him."

"Question. Did he deposit in your hands last Sunday night any sum of money?"

"Answer. No, sir.

"Question. Or during the day Sunday?"

"Answer. No, sir.

"Question. Has he ever deposited any sum of money in your hands?"

"Answer. I may have borrowed fifty or a hundred dollars of him at a time; but he has placed no sum of money in my hands."

"Question. Have you seen him lately?"

"Answer. I have not seen him since the Sunday of which you speak."

And whereas upon the same subject the said Woolley has testified before your committee as follows: [From the testimony of C. W. Woolley, May 19, 1868.]

"By Mr. BUTLER:

"Question. Have you deposited any money, and where, since that time, i. e., May 8?"

"Answer. Not in any bank."

"Question. Have you with any individual?"

"Answer. No, sir.

"Question. Then why do you say 'not in any bank'?"

"Answer. Because it is not to my credit in any bank."

"By Mr. WILSON:

"Question. What do you mean by that answer?

"Answer. I mean to say that I have not put it in a bank. I gave it to an individual who was owing me in New York and told him to keep that money until I arrived there.

"By Mr. BUTLER:

"Question. Who was that individual?

"Answer. Sheridan Shook.

"Question. How much money did you give Sheridan Shook?

"Answer. I think between sixteen and seventeen thousand dollars, as near as I can get it.

"Question. In what?

"Answer. Greenbacks, I think.

"Question. What denomination of greenbacks?

"Answer. Big bills; I cannot tell you. There may have been some $500 bills. I think in one package I gave him some small bills.

"Question. When did you give this to Sheridan Shook?

"Answer. Sunday.

"Question. At what time?

"Answer. In the afternoon; I cannot tell the hour.

"Question. Before or after you were summoned here?

"Answer. Before, I think.

"Question. For what purpose did you give it to Sheridan Shook?

"Answer. For safe keeping for me as an individual. Let me correct myself there. I gave that money to Shook to take over to New York to keep for me till a day or two, when I intended to go to New York. Then Dunleavy came and asked me to go West and I thought I had better go. I made up my mind to go there instead of going to New York, and I let him carry it along.

"Question. Well, you gave it to him finally?

"Answer. He kept it from the time I gave it to him.

"Question. Has he got it now?

"Answer. I guess so, unless he spent it.

"Question. Did you take any memorandum for it?

"Answer. No, sir; I did not want it.

"Question. Supposing he should have been killed?

"Answer. I would have taken my chance.

"Question. Did you go on with Sheridan Shook in the same train?

"Answer. Yes, sir.

"Question. What sort of a package was the money in?

"Answer. No package at all.

"Question. Did you count it?

"Answer. I do not recollect exactly. I kept what I thought I would want myself, and gave him the parcel. If I were to state closely it was about sixteen thousand one hundred dollars. It was not seventeen thousand dollars, I am satisfied.

"Question. Where did you get that money that you sent by Sheridan Shook?

"Answer. That is a part of the money that came out of the bank."

And whereas your committee believe the reasons given by the witness in declining to answer are wholly untrue and evasive, and the refusal to answer is a deliberate contempt of the authority of the House, and done for the purpose of concealing the fact and embarrassing public justice: Therefore,

Resolved, That said Woolley, for his repeated contempt of the authority of the House, be kept until otherwise ordered by the House in close confinement in the guard-room of the Capitol police, by the Sergeant-at-Arms, until said Woolley shall fully answer the questions above recited, and all questions put to him by said committee in relation to the subject of the investigations with which the committee is charged, and that meanwhile no persons shall communicate with said Woolley, in writing or verbally, except upon the order of the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The proposition of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BINGHAM] is, that this preamble and resolution shall be regarded as agreed to, the motion to reconsider entered, and the House shall then adjourn. Is there any objection?

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I suppose that is with the understanding that the question upon the motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table shall be taken by yeas and nays.

Mr. BINGHAM. Of course, for that will be the test question.

The SPEAKER. No objection being made, the proposition will be regarded as agreed to by unanimous consent.

The House accordingly (at five minutes past ten o'clock p. m.) adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. BROOMALL: Thirteen petitions numerously signed by citizens of Pennsylvania residing in the seventh congressional district, iron-workers and operators in cotton and woolen mills, setting forth the depression of their industry by reason of foreign competition, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of citizens of Pennsylvania, manufacturers and dealers in cigars and tobacco, remonstrating against an increase of taxation, and recommending a change in the stamps.

By Mr. CULLOM: A petition, signed by a large number of citizens of Springfield, Illinois, praying that the tax on cigars be retained as heretofore; also, praying that the tax be collected by the use of revenue instead of inspectors' stamps.

By Mr. DRIGGS: The petition of R. W. Updegraph and 127 others, residents of Keweenaw county, Michigan, praying Congress for protection on American copper.

Also, from same and 117 others, for same object.

Also, from Alexander English, of East Saginaw, Michigan, and 125 others, for the removal of special tax on refined petroleum.

Also, from William P. Raley and 56 others, for an appropriation to improve Saint Mary's river and canal in Michigan.

Also, from same and 66 others, for same object.

By Mr. ELA: The petition of Ichabod Goodwin and 19 others, of Portsmouth, New Hampshire, interested in shipping, for an appropriation for the construction of a breakwater in the vicinity of Cape Elizabeth, Maine.

By Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts: The memorial of J. M. Forbes and others, citizens of Boston, Massachusetts, in favor of the improvement of the St. Mary's canal and river in Michigan.

By Mr. KETCHAM: The remonstrance of L. Higley and 67 others, manufacturers of and dealers in cigars, of Hudson, New York, against proposed increase of tax on cigars.

By Mr. MARVIN: The remonstrance of cigar manufacturers, journeymen cigar-makers, dealers in cigars, growers of and dealers in seed leaf tobacco, of Schenectady, New York, against any change in the present rates of taxation on those articles.

By Mr. MILLER: The petition of 54 workmen and citizens of Ickesburg, Perry county, Pennsylvania, praying that Congress will resume the consideration of the tariff bill which failed in the House March, 1867, and enact it into a law at the earliest practical moment.

Also, the petition of 41 iron-workers in Mid-dletown, Dauphin county, Pennsylvania, setting forth that owing to foreign competition their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 81 iron-workers at Cholaskey, Pennsylvania, setting forth that owing to foreign competition their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 234 workers in cotton mills at Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, setting forth that owing to foreign competition their industry is greatly depressed, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of A. G. Cummings and other workers in the Pennsylvania steel-works at Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, complaining of the depression of industry, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, a memorial of cigar manufacturers, journeymen cigar-makers, dealers in cigars, growers and dealers in seed-leaf tobacco, of the county of Dauphin, Pennsylvania, protesting against the increase of revenue tax on said articles, and asking Congress to try the system of collecting the revenue on cigars by making the stamp a revenue stamp instead of an inspector's stamp, sold only to licensed manufacturers, with suitable checks to prevent frauds and counterfeits.

By Mr. MOORE: The petition of 15 manufacturers and makers of cigars of Camden, New Jersey, praying that no change be made in the present tax on the manufacture of cigars.

By Mr. MOORHEAD: A memorial of underwriters of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of a law making all vessels and water-craft registered under the law of the United States subject to a lien in admiralty for all premiums for insurance thereon.

Also, from soldiers of Birmingham, Pennsylvania, asking that all soldiers, sailors, and marines who served during the war be placed on an equality in regard to bounties.

By Mr. MYERS: The petition of Mary McDevitt, mother of James C. McDevitt, late of company I, twenty-eighth Pennsylvania volunteers, for pension.

Also, the petition of William C. Mayer, guardian of minor child of Christian Simon, late of twenty-sixth Pennsylvania volunteers, for pension.

Also, the petition of Anna Burneice, widow of William Burneice, late gunner United States Navy, for pension.

Also, the petition of Eva Harbauer, widow of Louis Harbauer, late private company C, first regiment District of Columbia cavalry, for pension.

Also, the petition of Emeline Posey, widow of Edward Posey, late corporal company O, twenty-third regiment Pennsylvania volunteers, for pension.

By Mr. STEWART: A memorial of Captain Daniel S. Hart, late assistant commissary of subsistence, praying for relief.

By Mr. STOKES: The petition of Hon. L. D. Evans, of Texas, asking relief for moneys lost.

By Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois: The petition of cigar manufacturers and dealers, in Illinois, asking that the tax on cigars be collected by means of revenue stamps.

By Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana: The remonstrance of W. J. Campbell and others, tobacco and cigar manufacturers of Huntington, Indiana, against the increase of taxation on the same.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, May 29, 1868.

Prayer by Rev. E. H. GRAY, D. D.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WILSON presented the petition of John H. Finlay, late of company G, second Illinois cavalry, for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a memorial of citizens of Milledgeville, Georgia, and vicinity, protesting against the removal of the State capital from that city to Atlanta, and praying that the clause in the new constitution of Georgia, now before Congress, authorizing such removal, be stricken out; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of Charles L. Bradwell, a free man of color, resident at Savannah, for compensation for four bales of cotton taken by the Government under orders issued by General Sherman in 1865; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WILSON. I present the petition of A. G. Mackey, president of the constitutional convention of South Carolina, requesting action to have the Legislature of that State convened. By the provisions of the constitution of that State the Legislature was to meet on the 12th day of May, but the commanding general of the department issued an order to prevent the assembling of the Legislature until after Congress should have approved the constitution. I move the reference of this petition to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART presented the petition of Margaret Doyle, praying compensation for damages sustained by reason of the United States failing to comply with a certain contract entered into November 28, 1863, for the delivery of saw logs; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HOWARD. I present the petition of

J. A. Hammer and numerous other citizens of Lynchburg, Virginia, respectfully representing that William L. Saunders is now and has been for many years acting justice of the peace in that city; that his experience and efficiency in that capacity render his services of great value to the community, and stating that he is under certain legal disabilities, and asking that those disabilities may be removed by act of Congress, in order that he may be elected to that office and exercise its functions. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOWARD presented the petition of members of the Michigan bar, praying that the existing United States court of the eastern district of Michigan may be abolished and the judge thereof retired upon his salary; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FERRY presented a memorial of cigar manufacturers and cigar-makers, dealers in cigars, growers of and dealers in seed leaf tobacco, for a change in the rate of taxing cigars; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WILLEY presented additional papers in relation to the claim of Margaret A. Laurie; which, with the papers heretofore presented in the same case, were referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COLE presented a petition of citizens of California, praying that Congress will pass an act making eight hours a legal day's work in all works under the control of Government; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SUMNER. I offer the petition of citizens of Boston, Massachusetts, setting forth the importance of improvements of the great lakes, and particularly at St. Mary's falls, and asking for assistance in the enlargement of the St. Mary's canal. I move the reference of this petition to the Committee on Commerce; and I hope my friend the chairman of that committee will give the subject attention.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred a resolution directing them to inquire into the propriety and necessity of taking such steps as shall be found necessary to restore to the body of the public domain the tract of land in California known as the Gabillan grant, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to; and he submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Finance to report certain amendments to the bill (S. No. 440) supplementary to an act entitled "An act to provide a national currency, secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof," approved June 3, 1864, and also to report several letters from the Comptroller of the Currency on the subject. I ask that the amendments be printed, together with the letters, and I give notice that I shall call the bill up at an early day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order to print will be entered, no objection being made.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. HOWARD. The Committee on the Pacific Railroad, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 137) extending the time for the completion of the Northern Pacific railroad, have had the same under consideration, and directed me to report it back and recommend its passage. I venture to ask the Senate to take it up at the present time. I do not think it will lead to any discussion or to any consumption of time. It requires no appropriation.

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides to amend section eight of an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Lake Superior to Puget sound on the Pacific coast," as to read as follows:

That each and every grant, right, and privilege herein are made and given to and accepted by said Northern Pacific Railroad Company, upon and subject to the following conditions, namely: that the said company shall commence the work on said road within five years from and after the second day of July, A. D. 1868, and shall complete not less than fifty miles per year after the second year thereafter, and shall construct, equip, furnish, and complete the whole road by the 4th day of July, A. D. 1883.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not wish to defeat the passage of this measure; but I think it goes far beyond what was asked for by the persons interested in this road. I was not present in the committee when this matter was decided on, but I think it goes beyond what was asked. If the Senators from Minnesota and Oregon, representing the portion of country through which this road is to go, are willing to defer all improvements in that section of country for five years, and to tie up forty million acres of their public lands until 1883, it is a serious question. I did not understand that the persons who were interested in this road claimed so long an extension. I am willing to vote for a reasonable extension; but this proposes to allow them five years within which to build the first section of the road, and then only requires them to construct fifty miles each year, and they are not bound to complete the whole road for fifteen years, and in the meantime they hold their grant of forty million acres of public lands, and they are pressing every day upon us the question of subsidy and bounty.

Mr. RAMSEY. I will simply say to the Senator from Ohio that this company is in the process of surveying the country; and it has already gone to considerable expense, having probably spent during the last season more than one hundred thousand dollars in surveys extending westwardly from the head of Lake Superior, and eastwardly across the chain of mountains in Washington Territory. The time required for the commencement of the work has almost expired, and they want some extension of time. Whether they want precisely five years, I am not able to say. I am willing to compromise with the Senator from Ohio, so far as I can, with the consent of the chairman of the committee who reports this resolution, by saying four years instead of five. Besides, the lands on the line of this road are not so immediately wanted for agriculture as those in many other parts of the country.

Mr. SHERMAN. This road commences on Lake Superior, a region of country that is rapidly growing now, and passes through the State of Minnesota. The company is not even bound to get into the State of Minnesota under five years. Under this provision, they would not reach St. Paul, which is one hundred and thirty or one hundred and forty miles west of the eastern terminus of the road, for about eight years. Surely this land ought not to be tied up so long as that. I shall not oppose a reasonable extension of time, but I hope this measure will lie on the table until other members of the committee have an opportunity to look into it. I was not able, and several other Senators were not able to attend the meeting of the railroad committee to-day on account of the sitting of other committees, and I think, therefore, it had better lie on the table at present.

Mr. RAMSEY. I have no objection to that course, if it is desired.

The joint resolution was ordered to lie on the table.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. STEWART asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 138) to appoint a board of examiners for claimants against the United States in the State of Nevada; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

COMMERCE ON THE LAKES.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate

now proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 266.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think we ought to take up the resolution which I offered some days since, proposing to accept of the resignation of the Secretary of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan. The Chair hears no objection, and the motion is agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask my friend from Michigan to let this bill be laid aside informally for a moment, that I may move to take up the resolution I offered yesterday of thanks to Mr. Stanton.

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly, if the bill can be laid aside informally, so that it will come up afterward.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If the resolution that I have named is not before the Senate now, I ask that it be taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana is next in order. It would be much more convenient if Senators would permit the morning business to be gone through with before interposing motions to take up bills and resolutions.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I was going to do that; but I noticed that bills in regard to railroads and so on were being called up, and I saw no prospect of reaching the resolution unless I submitted the motion now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up the resolution indicated by him.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is not Senate bill No. 266 now before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That bill is before the Senate, having been taken up by unanimous consent.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I should like to hear what bill that is. I do not believe it was heard on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask that it be read by its title.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (S. No. 266) to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern, northeastern, and northwestern frontiers of the United States, and for other purposes."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If the bill is up it is idle to object to it, perhaps, and I do not know that I would object. I am not much given to objecting; but I had not heard the bill called up at the time I moved to take up the resolution I offered a week ago. I do not object to the proposition of the Senator from Michigan; but if mine has priority of right before the Senate, then I should like to call it up. Mine is a resolution in relation to the organization of the Senate itself, and I submit to the Chair that it is business of a prior right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Neither of them was in order until the regular morning business was disposed of; but the motion of the Senator from Michigan was made, and no objection was made to it. That brought the bill before the Senate.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Then I understand from the Chair that all business occupies the same relation toward the body. If so, then the Senator from Michigan has the start.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan is prior in time; that is all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, I ask my friend from Michigan to let this bill be laid aside informally, that I may take up the resolution I have named.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have no objection, if this bill will not lose its place.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is a sort of bargaining I should not like to be a party to. I was trying to get up a resolution that I introduced a week ago, and I do not like that sort of bargaining. If the Senator from Michigan wants the floor he can claim it as his right, but not to make a bargain.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then, Mr. President, as this bill will not occupy much time, I ask that it be passed. It has been read at length, and will occupy but very little time, and I ask my friend from Vermont to allow it to pass first.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and the question is on the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, reported by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to have the bill read, so as to know exactly the bill which is before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the amendment, in the form of a substitute, be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine calls for the reading of the whole bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. Very well.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Committee on Commerce reported the bill with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the master of every vessel enrolled or licensed to engage in the foreign and coasting trade on the northern, northeastern, and northwestern frontiers of the United States shall, before the departure of his vessel from a port in one collection district to a port in another collection district, present to the collector at the port of departure duplicate manifests of his cargo, or, if he have no cargo, duplicate manifests setting forth that fact, which manifests shall be subscribed and sworn or affirmed to by the master before the collector, who shall indorse thereon his certificate of clearance, retaining one for the files of his office, the other he shall deliver for the use of the master. And in case such vessel should touch at any intermediate port in the United States, and there discharge cargo taken on board at an American port, or at such intermediate ports shall take on board cargo destined for an American port, the master of such vessel shall not be required to report such lading or unloading at such intermediate ports, but shall enter the same on his manifest obtained at the original port of departure, which he shall deliver to the collector of the port at which the unloading of the cargo is completed, within twenty-four hours after arrival, and shall subscribe and make oath (or affirm) as to the truth and correctness of the same. And the master of such vessel shall, before departing from a port in one collection district to a place in another collection district where there is no custom-house, file his manifest and obtain a clearance in manner aforesaid and make oath or affirmation to the manifest aforesaid, which manifest and clearance shall be delivered to the proper officer of customs at the port at which said vessel next arrives after leaving the place of destination specified in said clearance: Provided, That the master of any vessel with cargo, passengers, or baggage from any foreign port or place, shall obtain a permit and comply with existing laws before discharging or landing the same: And provided further, That nothing in this section contained shall exempt masters of vessels from reporting, as now required by law, any goods, wares, or merchandise destined for any foreign port: And be it further provided, That no permit shall be required for the unloading of cargo brought from an American port.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the master of any vessel enrolled or licensed as aforesaid, destined with cargo from a place in the United States at which there may be no custom-house, to a port where there may be a custom-house, shall, within twenty-four hours after arrival at the port of destination, deliver to the proper officer of the customs a manifest, subscribed by him, setting forth the cargo laden at the place of departure, or laden or unladen at any intermediate port or place, to the truth of which manifest he shall make oath or affirm before such officer: Provided, That if said vessel have no cargo the master shall not be required to deliver such manifest.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That steam-tugs duly enrolled and licensed to engage in the foreign and coasting trade on the northern, northeastern, and northwestern frontiers of the United States, when exclusively employed in towing vessels, shall not be required to report and clear at the custom-house: Provided, That when said steam-tugs shall be employed in towing rafts or other vessels without sail or steam motive power, not required to be enrolled or licensed under existing laws, they shall be required to report and clear in the same manner as is hereinbefore provided in similar cases for other vessels.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the manifests, certificates of clearance, oaths or affirmations provided for by this act, shall be in such form, and prepared, filled up, and executed in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury may from time to time prescribe.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That if the master of any enrolled or licensed vessel as aforesaid shall neglect or fail to comply with any of the provisions or requirements of the foregoing sections of this act, such master shall forfeit and pay to the United States the sum of twenty dollars for each and every failure or neglect, and for which sum the vessel shall be liable, and may be summarily proceeded against by way of libel in any district court of the United States.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That in case the master or owner of any vessel shall willfully and falsely swear or affirm to any of the matters or facts herein required to be sworn or affirmed to, said master or owner shall be deemed to be guilty of perjury, and shall be liable to all the fines and penalties imposed by existing laws punishing such offenses.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act the following fees shall be levied and collected from the owners and masters of vessels enrolled or licensed on the northern, northeastern, and northwestern frontiers of the United States, and none others shall be received than those herein specially enumerated: for the admeasurement of any vessel the fees prescribed by section — of an act entitled "An act —," approved May 6, 1864; for certificate of enrollment, including bond and oath, $1 10; for granting license, including bond and oath, if not over twenty tons, forty-five cents; for granting license, including bond and oath, above twenty and not over one hundred tons, seventy cents; for granting license, including bond and oath, above one hundred tons, $1 20; for certifying manifest, including master's oath, and granting permit for vessel, to go from district to district, under fifty tons, twenty-five cents; for certifying manifest, including master's oath, and granting permit for vessels to go from district to district, over fifty tons, fifty cents; for receiving manifest, including master's oath, on arrival of a vessel from one collection district to another, whether touching at foreign intermediate ports or not, under fifty tons, twenty-five cents; for receiving manifest, including master's oath, on arrival of a vessel from one collection district to another, whether touching at foreign intermediate ports or not, over fifty tons, fifty cents; for certifying a manifest, including master's oath, and granting permit to a vessel under fifty tons, laden with a cargo destined for a port or place in another district at which there is no custom-house, twenty-five cents; for certifying a manifest, including master's oath, and granting permit to a vessel above fifty tons, laden with a cargo destined for a port or place in another district at which there is no custom-house, fifty cents; for the entry of a vessel of fifty tons or under direct from a foreign port, $1 50; for the entry of a vessel above fifty tons direct from a foreign port, $2 50; for the clearance of a vessel of fifty tons or under, direct to a foreign port, $1 50; for the clearance of a vessel above fifty tons direct to a foreign port, $2 50; Provided, That vessels departing to or arriving from a port in one district to or from a port in an adjoining district and touching at intermediate foreign ports are exempted from the payment of the entry fees. For a post entry of such vessel, two dollars; for permit to land or deliver goods, twenty cents; for a bond taken officially, not otherwise provided for, forty cents; for permit to load goods for exportation entitled to drawback, thirty cents; for debenture or other official certificate not otherwise provided for, twenty cents; for recording all bills of sale, mortgages, hypothecations, or conveyances of vessels, fifty cents; for recording all certificates for discharging and canceling any such conveyances, fifty cents; for furnishing a certificate setting forth the names of the owners of any registered or enrolled vessel, the parts or proportions owned by each, and also the material facts of any existing bill of sale, mortgage, hypothecation, or other incumbrance, the date, amount of such incumbrance and from and to whom made, one dollar; for furnishing copies of such records for each bill of sale, mortgage, or other conveyance, fifty cents; for receiving manifest of each railroad car or other vehicle laden with goods, wares, or merchandise, from a foreign contiguous territory, twenty-five cents; for entry of goods, wares, or merchandise for consumption—warehouse, re-warehouse, transportation, or exportation, including oath and permit to land or deliver, fifty cents; for certificate of registry, including bond and oath, $2 25; for indorsement of change of masters on registry, one dollar.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That section one of an act entitled "An act to further provide for the collection of the revenue upon the northern, northeastern, and northwestern frontiers, and for other purposes," approved July 14, 1862; and section six of an act entitled "An act to prevent smuggling, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1864; and so much of an act entitled "An act to regulate the fees of custom-house officers on the northern, northeastern, and northwestern frontiers of the United States," approved March 3, 1865, and all other acts or parts of acts conflicting with or supplied by this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall have authority to ascertain the facts upon all applications for remission of fines or penalties incurred under the provisions of this act, where the amount in question does not exceed $1,000, in such manner and under such regulations as he may deem proper, and he may thereupon remit or mitigate such fines or penalties, if in his opinion the same shall have been incurred without willful negligence or intention of fraud in the person or persons incurring the same, and all fines and penalties imposed or recovered by this act shall, after deducting proper costs and charges, be disposed of as provided by section ninety-one, act of March 2, 1799.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. I know practically very little of the laws as they are in relation to the coasting trade. I ask the honorable member from Michigan whether any serious inconvenience has resulted from the laws as they now stand, and whether it is not probable that the regulations proposed by this bill may increase the opportunity for smuggling on the frontier?

Mr. CHANDLER. I will answer the Senator that very great inconvenience is suffered by the shipping interests of the Northwest under the present law. I made this statement a few days ago, and, therefore, it is a mere repetition. The Senator from Maryland was not present. At present, a vessel taking on cargo at Buffalo for Chicago, for example, is in the habit of taking cargo for all, or many, of the intermediate ports between Buffalo and Chicago. The present law requires a vessel to take out a manifest at every port which she touches. If a vessel, for example, bound for Chicago arrives at Cleveland in the night—and these are all steam vessels—she must wait during the night for the custom-house to open to get out a manifest to proceed on her voyage. The first section of this bill changes that; and allows the shipper to state in the manifest the points at which a vessel is to deliver her cargo, and requires her simply to take out one manifest, for example from Buffalo to Chicago; and she may land at Cleveland, at Detroit, at Milwaukee, or at any of the intermediate ports, deliver the cargo which appears on her manifest, without delay or detention, and proceed on her voyage, reporting at Chicago what she has done.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is that delivery marked on the manifest?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes, sir; the deliveries are marked on the manifest. The expense of steam vessels is, perhaps, two hundred dollars a day, and sometimes they are detained for ten or twelve hours for nothing except to take out a useless manifest. That is section one. It will be a great saving of time and a great saving of expense.

I hold in my hand a paper signed by nearly the entire shipping interest, in these words:

"We, the undersigned vessel-owners, have examined the bill to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern, northeastern, and northwestern frontiers of the United States, and for other purposes, and highly indorse the provisions therein, and earnestly ask that immediate action be taken thereon by Congress."

The entire shipping interests of the lakes are to be benefited, the Government not injured, and a very earnest desire is manifested on the part of the shipping interest that the bill shall pass at once.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Mr. President, I might this morning have applied a rule which the honorable Senator from Michigan has applied to me on two several occasions, when he has interposed a single objection to the taking up of a bill which was of considerable importance in one case to my own constituents, and in another case to the country generally; but I did not see fit to do so, inasmuch as I do not feel inclined, for the gratification of any feeling I may have, to interpose a single objection to prevent particular business being done.

As the bill is up, however, I will state that in my judgment it ought to be recommitted to the Committee on Commerce. I inquired of the honorable Senator from Michigan on a former occasion if the bill had been submitted to the Treasury Department for its opinion. He replied that it had. He did not, however, see fit to state the fact—he said afterward that he was not obliged to do so—that the Treasury Department entirely disapproved of it, and thought it was a bill that ought not to pass. The honorable Senator also stated when he was up before that this bill had been thoroughly considered and unanimously agreed to by the Committee on Commerce. I have inquired of the members of the Committee on Commerce, and three of them tell me that they never heard of it before, and the other three say they did not know anything about it, except that the Senator himself said it was all right and they allowed him to report it. If that is what the Committee on Commerce regard as a thorough consideration of a bill, it is different from any practice of any committee to which I belong or have belonged heretofore. It seems, then, that the bill has been reported without the knowledge of the committee except the chairman. I do not mean that it has been reported without their knowledge of the fact, but without a full knowledge on their part of the provisions of the bill. I think, therefore, that it ought to be recommitted to that committee, because it involves very important changes in the revenue laws on the western and northwestern lakes.

I think it very likely, as the Senator from Michigan has stated this morning, that there are some inconveniences in the present regulations as applied to the commerce of the lakes, and I have no doubt that this bill will be approved by the ship-owners or those engaged in navigation on the lakes, because it would relieve them from difficulty and inconvenience. The same may be said of the Treasury regulations or the commercial regulations on the coast. They are all inconvenient. They subject the owners of vessels and freighters to inconvenience, but they are found necessary in order to secure the collection of the revenue, prevent frauds upon the revenue, and for all those purposes which are subserved in those cases where individuals must submit to inconvenience in order to the advancement of the public good. I suppose in the case the Senator mentions, where vessels start on one of the lakes taking in cargoes for different points, it may be inconvenient to await the necessary entries at the custom-house and to change their manifests. Perhaps some provision ought to be made in reference to that, if any can be made consistently with the revenue. But, nevertheless, if that can be done, the same necessity does not involve a very large and serious reduction of the fees which are exacted by law for the operations of navigation upon the lakes as elsewhere, for they are the same all over the country.

This bill goes on to make a very large and serious reduction. It in fact changes the law so that all the regulations with regard to fees which are applicable to other sections of the country are reduced on the lakes to about one half what they are elsewhere. The answer which the honorable Senator made the other day was that it only has a tendency to reduce the profits of the custom-house officers; but we are all aware that the salaries of the custom-house officers are paid out of the fees, and if you reduce the fees so that they do not reach the amount the officers are allowed by law to take, I suppose it must be made up out of the Treasury.

There are other objections to the bill, but my great objection to it is that it has not been considered by the committee. I do not believe that it is proper or safe to legislate upon a matter of so much importance, on a bill brought in here simply by permission of the committee, when the committee itself has not examined it. Therefore, sir, I move that it be recommitted to the Committee on Commerce, in order that the committee may have a chance to examine it, and consider the objections, which are numerous, that are made at the Treasury Department against the bill itself.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, the Senator from Maine brings a very grave and serious charge against myself as chairman of the Committee on Commerce. He says that he has been around to six members of that committee and got a statement from them, and that I stated what was not true when I said that this bill had been carefully considered by the Committee on Commerce. The Senator can make his own deduction and state it in his own language. I shall take no offense at anything he may say. I stated, sir, that this bill had been carefully considered by the Committee on Commerce; and it had been carefully considered by that committee. It was before the Committee on Commerce for, I think, about three months, and every member of that committee will bear me witness that I brought it to their attention at every meeting, or nearly every meeting, after we had received the opinion from the Secretary of the Treasury. It is true that the committee deferred somewhat to my knowledge of the wants of western commerce. It was familiar to me, and more familiar to me than to any one else, I having been connected with it and engaged in it for more than thirty years past. If the bill should be now recommended to the Committee on Commerce, I presume there is not a single member of the committee who will give it any more attention than was given to it during the three months it was before them. They certainly listened to the reading of the whole bill once, if not twice, and perhaps three times, and approved of it unanimously, as I stated; but they said to me, "You understand this thing better than we do." Well, sir, I do; and I understand it better than the clerk at the Treasury Department who wrote the opinion, for he knows nothing about it—nothing whatever.

Our commerce is different from that of the Atlantic ocean. Our ports are, perhaps, every fifteen or twenty miles along Lake Erie. You yourself, sir, know very well that vessels leaving Chicago touch, perhaps, ten times during the day. Would you compel a vessel stopping ten times a day, perhaps to discharge a single barrel or two or three barrels of freight, to pay the same custom-house fees that you would charge a foreign ship that takes in a full cargo for a foreign port and touches at no place for, perhaps, thirty days? The proposition is an absurdity. Here is a great burden upon the commerce of the lakes. I hold in my hand a statement showing something of this great burden. There is a little steamboat called the Reindeer, upon which my colleague has ridden very often, which is worth, I should think, about ten thousand dollars—no more than that. She runs from Detroit seventy miles north. She makes frequent landings; and last year this little boat, worth $10,000, paid $1,140 for manifests alone, or one ninth of her whole value.

The Senator says that we must protect the custom-house officers. Why, sir, the custom-house officers in the State of Michigan say that this is a just and proper bill and ought to be passed. True, they say it may cut down their fees, but it is justice. We give our custom-house officers on the lakes a salary of $1,000 per year, and then give them the fees up to the maximum of $2,500 a year. The Senator says that great reductions in the fees are made by this bill. I can inform him that the reductions are exceedingly small, and they are so small that they are hardly worth noticing. I have the old fee bill in my hand and that here provided for, and the average will not vary five per cent., in my judgment. For example, "for certifying manifest, including master's oath, and granting permit for vessels to go from district to district, over fifty tons," the old price was fifty cents, and the new price fifty cents; under fifty tons, twenty-five cents now, twenty-five cents before; "for granting license, including bond and oath," $1 50 was the old fee. This is reduced to $1 20. The reductions are exceedingly small, and, in my judgment, four fifths of the items are not changed at all. Some are increased and some diminished. The opinion of not only our mercantile men but our custom-house officers is that the bill is an eminently just and proper one and ought to pass. It is a bill that interests no section of the country except the lakes. It touches no other commerce but the commerce of the lakes; and I hope, in accordance with the unanimous request of the mercantile interests of the Northwest, that this bill will be permitted to pass.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. This bill certainly touches largely the interests of my constituents, as Lake Champlain borders the entire length of the State; and if it is to be a convenience to anybody it will be a convenience to the people of Vermont. But, Mr. President, I think it also reaches to other portions of the country than merely the northwestern lakes. I found that the language of the bill is—

That the master of every vessel enrolled or licensed in the foreign or coasting trade on the northern, northeastern, and northwestern frontiers of the United States shall, &c.

That clearly embraces our coasting trade throughout New England or the northeast, where the practice of coasting vessels to touch from port to port is at least as great as it is on the lakes of the Northwest. When the bill was under consideration before I had a copy of it before me and made several annotations upon it, but that bill I am unable to find at the present moment. It seems to me, however, that if we pass this bill allowing masters of vessels to touch at any port they please, leaving no track or sign behind them, discharging and receiving cargo either at ports where there is a collection district or where there is not, we are about to open the door for an indefinite amount of fraud.

Then allow me to call the attention of the Senate for a moment to another feature of the bill contained in the third section:

That steam-tugs duly enrolled and licensed to engage in the foreign and coasting trade on the northern, northeastern, and northwestern frontiers of the United States, when exclusively employed in towing vessels, shall not be required to report and call at the custom-house.

On Lake Champlain this may embrace a very large amount of the business that is transacted. We have steam-tugs that are constantly plying through to Montreal and to the upper waters of the St. Lawrence, to Ottawa, and other places, coming back with lumber and with various other articles; and it is also the same at the upper end of the lake. If these vessels are not required to stop and report and be examined by revenue inspectors, they may carry any amount of concealed merchandise and defraud the revenue daily to the amount of thousands and thousands of dollars. Vessels and boats not touching at ports of entry have been detected within the last three or four years in transporting such articles as tobacco, carrying it into Canada, and then bringing it back in order to avoid the internal revenue tax. If this bill passes, and they are thenceforward to go without any inspection, without any notice, it is not difficult to see that any amount of fraud will be practiced. I am free to say that the evil complained of by the Senator from Michigan should be corrected if any practicable mode can be adopted by which we can grant facilities to the masters of vessels to stop at ports without duplicating and reduplicating manifests. But I am unwilling that a bill of this character, which seems to me to open very widely the door for any amount of fraud, tempted as our people are now by the high rates of duty we are compelled to impose upon foreign merchandise in order to support the Government. I am unwilling that such a bill should pass, not only without the consideration of the committee, if that be so—and I know nothing about that fact, but it seems to be a controverted point—but without the full consideration of the Treasury Department, of the officers there having charge of such matters, and the head of the Treasury. We ought to know what their suggestions are, what the fault is that they find with the bill, and what amendments they may desire to propose. I hope, therefore, that the motion of the Senator from Maine will be adopted, and the bill be recommitted.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Mr. President, I feel somewhat interested in this bill, because I know something of the inconveniences suffered by men engaged in commerce upon the lakes. I have heard of these complaints. I do not pretend to be familiar with this branch of business, and I cannot answer the objections that are made by the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Maine as to this bill not being sufficiently guarded. Nobody, I apprehend, wants a bill to pass that will encourage smuggling or prevent the collection of the revenue. I apprehend that the Senator from Michigan is just as much opposed to that as the Senator from Vermont. Now, we have a bill prepared by one of our committees, that comes in here to correct what I am satisfied is a very great inconvenience, and I think that some bill of this kind ought to pass. I have heard of these complaints at Chicago; and I do not know how we are to legislate if we are not to consider such a bill, when one of our committees having charge of the matter has had it under consideration for months, has investigated the subject, has been in correspondence with the Treasury Department in regard to it, has ascertained what the views of the Treasury Department were in reference to it, and then framed the bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have those views; they are in writing; they can be read at the Clerk's desk if the Senator wants to hear them.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I presume the committee have seen them.

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. FESSENDEN. But it was not communicated to the Senate that the views of the Department were against the bill, as a very dangerous one, and one which ought not to pass.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Certainly, I have no objection to proper amendments, so far as I am concerned. I have not charge of the bill. I am only speaking of what is admitted to be an evil and a great inconvenience that certainly can be corrected to some extent by legislation, and ought to be corrected. When a bill is brought in for that purpose, and the Treasury Department have been consulted about it, and a committee has acted upon it, I do not know when we are ever to have any legislation if you are to refer it back to the same committee which has considered the matter. I think it ought to be properly considered, and this is the appropriate committee. If the Senator having the bill particularly in charge thinks any further investigation is needed, or supposes that there is any new information to be obtained in regard to it, I have no objection to its going back to the committee; but I would not vote to recommit this bill to the same committee that has had it under consideration unless something new is to be brought to their attention. We had better try to amend the bill in the Senate if it needs amendment; let the Senator from Maine propose such amendments as are necessary to guard the revenue. Certainly the object of the bill is not, I am sure, to avoid the collection of the revenue.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will say, so far as I am concerned, that I have not the slightest objection, if there are these inconveniences there and they can be avoided by legislation, to having that done. I have not the slightest objection to that. My attention was called to the bill early. I happened to look at it, and it struck me that it was a dangerous bill; that it made very serious and important changes in the revenue laws; and that was the reason of the inquiry I made of the honorable Senator from Michigan, whether it had been submitted to the Treasury Department. His answer, not intentional perhaps, was that it had; and he stopped there, and I rested satisfied with it, until the bill not being passed, I made some inquiry with regard to it, and found that it had been submitted to the Department, and that they had given a decided opinion against it in detail. The Senator from Michigan says that the men who gave that opinion know nothing about it, and that he does know about it. That may be, but still we are in the habit of believing that the Treasury Department have some knowledge of matters committed to their charge. Labor is divided there, and these matters are under the charge of intelligent men who make them their study and endeavor to ascertain what the good of the community requires with reference to them; and I am in the habit, and shall continue in that habit until I see good reason to the contrary, of believing that they do know something about the matters to which they give their daily attention. It is probable that they may not know the inconveniences of which the Senator speaks so well as he knows them; but it is also probable that they know what the effect would be of certain provisions in this bill; and anybody may see that a reduction of fees reduces the revenue, and anybody may see that facilities afforded to smuggling reduce the revenue much more. That does not require any very particular experience or knowledge to ascertain.

Now, sir, if it is considered that the examination of the subject by the honorable Senator from Michigan is sufficient, and that we are to pass the bill upon his view of what the interests of commerce require, and his view alone, I have nothing to say. I did not mean to charge the honorable Senator with stating an untruth, as he supposes; but I meant simply to say that I was informed by members of the committee that they had left the matter entirely to their chairman, relying upon his examination and his knowledge of the subject. That was all. I do not think that in a case where a gentleman represents a particular section of the country, and a bill presented by him affects more particularly his section of the country, it ought to be passed by Congress into a law without examination by more individuals than the single Senator who brings it forward, because he may naturally be influenced very much in his views by the wishes of those he represents.

I send to the Chair, and should like to have read, a copy of the letter addressed by the Department to the chairman of the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair feels bound to arrest further proceedings on this bill by announcing that, the morning hour having expired, the unfinished business of yesterday is regularly before the Senate.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Very well, sir.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HARLAN. I think by resolution some days since the Senate decided to devote to-day to the consideration of bills on the Calendar pertaining to the District of Columbia. If it requires a motion to proceed to the consideration of those bills, I will submit it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope not. I hope we shall go on with the bill in reference to Arkansas. The Senator from Iowa himself will see the propriety of finishing that bill. We certainly ought to dispose of it. It has been under consideration one or two days, and I hope the Senate will not adjourn to-night until we get a final vote upon it.

Mr. HARLAN. I make the motion, in order that my remarks may be in order, that the present and all prior orders be postponed with a view of proceeding to the consideration of bills on the Calendar pertaining to the District of Columbia. On this motion I wish to make a few remarks—

Mr. SUMNER. Will my friend allow me to ask whether a motion is necessary, whether the business of the District of Columbia does not come of course at this hour on Friday?

Mr. HARLAN. I will abide the decision of the Chair on that point.

Mr. SUMNER. I supposed there was an order of the Senate setting apart this day for District of Columbia business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The interpretation the Chair puts upon the rule is that the unfinished business supersedes the appropriation of a day to particular business. The rules provide that the unfinished business shall be in order at one o'clock, and take precedence of all other business; and I suppose it requires, even when the day is set apart for particular business, that that be proceeded with, and it supersedes any special order. That is the interpretation of the rule that the Chair has put upon it.

Mr. HARLAN. I then submit the motion, and I wish to make a remark or two in relation to it. I feel the importance of disposing of the Arkansas bill perhaps as fully as any Senator on this floor; but the Senate has not given even one day to the consideration of the business of this District. Senators will remember that there is no other legislative body in the District competent to make laws for the government of this people, who have now grown to be a large community. By the authority of the Senate I am a member of that committee, and have been made chairman; I suppose, therefore, that it is my duty to bring to the attention of the Senate the business that has been referred to that committee by the body itself. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FESSENDEN] a few days since said that a day or two had been heretofore set apart for the consideration of business pertaining to this District. One day was set apart, and then I yielded to the solicitation of friends to permit other business to be considered until nearly the whole day was exhausted. I will not now take the personal responsibility of doing so. If it should be the will of the Senate that this business should be postponed for the consideration of the bill pending, let the Senate take the responsibility. I make the motion, and will abide by the decision of the Senate in relation to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that the unfinished business and all prior orders be postponed for the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of the bills reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Mr. President, I certainly cannot complain of the course taken by the Senator from Iowa, who is chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, because he considers it his duty to press that business; but I am not aware that there is any very great urgency for any particular District bill, nor does he so state; and I trust that the Senate, after we have commenced and spent two or three days in considering the bill to recognize the State government in Arkansas, will not lay it aside for any other business. My experience in the Senate is that when you take up a bill and progress with it for a day or two in this way and then lay it aside to take up other business, you lose the whole time; you will have to go over it all again. But, not to take up time, sir, I merely wish to appeal to the Senate, as the most expeditious way of transacting its business, to stand by the bill we have under consideration; and also to do so in consequence of the importance of that measure. I trust, therefore, the motion of the Senator from Iowa will not prevail.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, as I have the honor to be upon the Committee on the District of Columbia, I hope I shall be pardoned if I express a hope that the business of that committee will not be entirely neglected. The Senator from Illinois hopes that the Senate will stand by a bill which he has reported. Now, I like his phrase; I hope the Senate will stand by the order it made a few days ago, to give at least one day to the business of this District. Owing to the condition of affairs in this Chamber for the last two months we have have not been able to attend to the affairs of this District. Meanwhile questions have accumulated. There are bills in charge of the chairman of that committee, my excellent friend, the Senator from Iowa, which ought to be attended to. The necessities of this District will suffer if they are not attended to. I think, therefore, he was wise when, the other day, he asked the Senate to set apart Friday for that business, and I may add that it seems to me that it is entirely vain for us in advance to set apart a day for the business of that particular committee if we do not adhere to that order. What is the meaning of the order? It is that this coming Friday, putting aside all other things, we will attend to the business of that committee. Now, it seems to me the Senate is pledged to that conclusion.

Then there is another consideration in connection with the Arkansas bill. It is within my knowledge that one of our honorable friends desires to address the Senate at some length on that measure and is not able to go on to-day. Of course I do not allude to myself, for I have no such purpose, but one of our number whom we all respect I know desires to be heard upon it, and he is not ready to go on to-day. There is, therefore, a consideration founded on the actual condition of the Arkansas bill which comes in to support the motion of my friend, the Senator from Iowa. I hope, therefore, that the Senate will proceed with the District business until such time as it may find itself disposed to go to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. WILSON. I rise, Mr. President, to express the hope that the Senate will proceed with the consideration of the bill for the admission of Arkansas; and I hope, when we have done that, we shall immediately proceed to the consideration of a bill to admit the other six States that are now prepared for and are asking admission here. It seems to me there can be no business of this District, or of any other kind that can come before us, which can be compared in importance one moment with the completing of this work of restoration and reconstruction. Sir, we profess—and we are in possession of facts that require us to proclaim it here and elsewhere—that the protection of the loyal people of those States requires our action; and I hope that we shall allow nothing, I care not what it is, to put aside the consideration of this bill and the immediate consideration of the bill relating to the six other States which have made constitutions and have elected Legislatures. They can do nothing until we act, and it is important, therefore, that we at once attend to this business and that we relieve the people of those seven States from the rebel officers who now rule and dominate over them, and put those States under the control of men who are loyal to the country and true to liberty and justice and humanity. Therefore, sir, while I should be very glad to adhere to the vote of the Senate to set apart this day for matters relating to this District, I know that matters relating to this District are of minor importance when compared with the great work of completing the reconstruction of this Government.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, if I remember correctly about the business of the Senate for the last six months, the District of Columbia has had its fair share of the time. The business connected with this District may be behind somewhat, and perhaps it is, but the business of the whole country is sadly behind, and the affairs of this District are certainly very trivial in importance when compared with the affairs of reconstruction and the importance of settling the question of reconstruction; and I hope that the affairs of the District of Columbia will at least be allowed to give way to such questions as this.

Mr. President, whenever it is proposed by the District Committee to consider some measures for the improvement of the horrible condition of the streets of this city, especially Pennsylvania avenue, I shall perhaps feel more indulgently inclined to give way and set apart a day for that business.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. President, I desire to ask, when the occasion presents itself, unanimous consent of the Senate to consider a resolution of inquiry, calling upon the General of the Army for a supplemental report of papers in the case of Arkansas. Until within a day or two I was not aware that there were additional papers relating to the recent election in that State, although the fact that such were about being transmitted is mentioned in the report sent by the General of the Army to the House of Representatives. I am now informed that those papers are probably in the War Department, and that they are very important in their character. Whether there is or is not a formal report accompanying them from General Gillem, I cannot say. If I can get the ear of the Senate, and can get my resolution adopted, I propose to have it sent up to-day and get these papers, if possible, by to-morrow.

I mention this in connection with this question of the order of business, because it is my opinion that we ought to have before us, when the debate on the Arkansas case proceeds, all the official information which is within our reach in Washington, as the debate, whenever we reach the bill itself and get rid of the questions of amendment, will turn principally upon matters of fact which are contained in the report already transmitted to the House of Representatives by General Grant. In discussing these matters of fact we ought to have possession of all the information which is now within reach in this city. I shall vote to postpone that bill and take up other business to-day, with the idea that we shall proceed again with the Arkansas question to-morrow, and I mention this matter as a reason for my vote.

I will only add that I have no desire to protract debate upon this question, or consume any unnecessary time; but I suspect that by the adoption of my resolution, and by delaying the consideration of the cause until to-morrow, we shall probably make better progress than if we take it up now.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Mr. President, I do not know what information the Senator from Pennsylvania refers to; he has not indicated what it is. We have a report from the General of the Army containing the report of the officer in command in the district of which Arkansas forms a part, and that report shows the election, the result of the election, and all the information, I suppose, that is to be obtained about it. Certainly we ought to have the information that is accessible that bears upon this question; but unless the Senator from Pennsylvania indicates what it is that he wants it seems to me we should not postpone this matter in order that we may fish after testimony. What is it, upon what subject is it, to what does it relate? We have the constitution of Arkansas here; that is one thing we wish. We have the evidence of its ratification by the people; that is another thing. Now, what more do we want? What further is necessary for our action than these facts? If there is anything in relation to these facts not embodied here let us know what it is.

But, sir, I should regret very much if the Senate should agree to lay aside this important measure. It is the great question that this country has been engaged in since the close of the war—the reorganization of the rebel States. We listened yesterday to a two hours' speech, made by the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. McCREERY,] deploring the sad condition of things in the rebel States, telling us of the military rule, of the despotism, of the disorder, and of the violence there. Then let the Senator from Kentucky, and all other Senators, join and recognize a civil form of government in Arkansas, and in the other rebel States, that shall dispense with what you call a military despotism. Congress is pledged, the country is pledged, we are all pledged to the earliest re-establishment of civil government in the rebel States that is practicable with safety to the Union people there, and safety to the Union itself. Every consideration impels us to this. Justice requires it—justice to the loyal people there, whom we have encouraged to labor for the last twelve months in the organization of a State government. When they have made that government complete, complied with your laws, gone through all this labor of registration, of elections once and twice, of conventions to form constitutions, and have complied with every provision which you have prescribed that they could comply with, have done every act that it was possible they could do under your law, with what face can we sit here and lay aside this question, which we have all sought to bring to an early settlement, when they present themselves here in this condition. They having complied with every requisition that has been imposed, what will you say to the loyal people of Arkansas, whom you have encouraged to form this government?

And how, let me ask, is a government ever to be established? Why, sir, suppose you were to impose new conditions, were to reject this constitution, refuse to act upon it, will you pass another law and tell the people of Arkansas to form another State organization? When they have done it will they be in any better condition than they are to-day? Will the Congress then in session consider itself under any more obligation than we are under to carry out the measures which we have inaugurated?

I do trust, sir, that this measure is not to be put over on any suggestion by the Senator from Pennsylvania that he wants some other evidence, unless he will tell us specifically what that evidence is, and where it is, and what bearing it has upon the question under consideration. We have here the constitution officially communicated. We have here the evidence of its ratification officially communicated. What is it that the Senator from Pennsylvania wants? He has heard that some other papers have been communicated. I know not what they are; I have no knowledge that any such exist; but surely, when the evidence is complete as it lies upon our tables, we should not delay this most important of all questions that can come before Congress, unless there is some specific statement showing that there are other documents important to the consideration of this question which can be had by delay.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. President, of course it is impossible for me to recite the contents of those documents without examining them, or without having made some further inquiry. It seems from the official report made by General Gillem that he does not report that the constitution was adopted. He makes no declaration upon that subject. He states that, according to the returns sent to him, a particular result is reached, and he proceeds to say that without waiting further he forwards all the papers and evidence in his possession upon this subject of the adoption of the constitution. That is perfectly true. It seems that he sent an officer to Little Rock who made some informal inquiries there, who reported to him on the 22d of April. He waited apparently for his report, because the communication to General Grant is dated the 23d, the day following, but before the additional evidence which was in course of preparation could reach him. It does not seem that he chose to wait for that, but sent on what he had at the time. What I propose is that the additional evidence submitted to General Gillem, and any additional report by him upon the subject of this election, shall be called for and immediately obtained. I do not propose that the Senate shall be delayed by waiting too long a time for this report, or for printing it. I presume we can get it by to-morrow.

On page 29 of the report I have referred to, the Senator from Illinois will find two dispatches from a gentleman who was active in accumulating the evidence which is reported, some of it, in this document by General Gillem. He informs him that he is about sending on additional papers. I understand that those papers and that evidence are partly official and partly made up of affidavits showing the proceedings of the registers, who had control of the election; showing the manner in which the returns were made up. I believe one paper is a circular from this board of commissioners, which was appointed by the convention for holding the State election. Other papers relate to the manner in which returns were made up. In the case of one of the counties, where there were surplus votes, there are proofs that there were never any precinct returns made, but simply a general return for the country—additional proof to that which is already contained in the document with reference to the officer who had control of those returns. That was a case of alleged fraud; and there is a dispatch from him inquiring how many more votes were needed from a particular county which he had returned, and saying that they should be made up. In this report it seems an excuse is made for that officer that he was intoxicated, and that the general return, which was in his possession, was delayed some time by reason of incapacity arising from drunkenness. This evidence, showing his dispatches about that time, will show the business in which he was engaged and will bear strongly upon the general return of that county, the papers from which were in his charge, and will show the Senate that, so far as that county is concerned, no reliance can be placed on this report which was transmitted to the General.

I have mentioned these two or three points simply to illustrate the general character of this testimony. It is of the same general description as that contained in the former report of General Gillem and additional to it, and would, doubtless, have been transmitted by him in connection with his former report to General Grant if he had had possession of the documents at the time.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the state of public business is such, and we have now arrived at such a stage of the session, that we must begin to husband our time. I think the Senate is not disposed to lay aside important business that it has partly discussed with a view to take up other bills, and then invite another struggle on Monday as to the order of business, and I therefore suggest to the Senator from Iowa that he allow the Arkansas bill to be settled and disposed of before we take up any new business. If he will consent I will move that the District business be continued the special order for Monday instead of to-day.

Mr. CONNESS. Not Monday, but Friday next; give them the next Friday.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator from Iowa is willing to say Friday, that will suit me. On Tuesday I desire to take up a bill which I think ought to be acted on, and if he will be satisfied to take Monday for District business, I will move that it be continued as the special order for Monday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a motion now pending.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senator from Iowa to allow me to make the motion I have indicated.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Arkansas bill is before the Senate, and the pending motion is to postpone it.

Mr. SHERMAN. But if that motion is lost the District business is lost with it. I desire to give the Committee on the District of Columbia a day for their business, and I will propose next Monday, or next Friday, as the chairman desires.

Mr. HARLAN. If that is the judgment of the Senate, it will be agreeable to me to substitute Monday.

Mr. SUMNER. But I ask my friend why make a special assignment of Monday for the District business. This day has already been set apart for District business, and if the Senate breaks its faith for Friday, what assurance have we that it will not do the same thing on Monday or the next Friday?

Mr. SHERMAN. The rules of the Senate, as the Senator very well knows, declare that the unfinished business shall take precedence of anything else. Now the Senator wishes to violate the faith of the Senate expressed in its rules, which declare that the unfinished business shall be finished before a special order is taken up.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator will pardon me; I do not so interpret the rules. Of course I submit cheerfully to the decision of the Chair; but my judgment is that under the rules of the Senate, when a day is specially set apart for a particular class of business, that overrides even the rule with regard to unfinished business. It is not in the nature of a special order. The Senator makes a mistake. He supposes that there is a special order for to-day. It is not so. This day has been set apart for this work. I remember that during the first two years I was in the Senate every other Friday was set apart for private bills. Nobody ever sought to interfere with that. Nobody supposed they could interfere with it. When that Friday came around private bills had their day. It was familiarly called by many of us at the time, I remember, a day of justice. It could not be interfered with. It was set apart in advance, and became in the nature of a rule. Unfinished business dropped before it.

Mr. SHERMAN. It was a rule then just as it is in the House of Representatives, where the rule requires Friday to be set apart for private business.

Mr. SUMNER. I understand that the other day when the Senator from Iowa moved that Friday be set apart for the consideration of District business, it was in the nature of a rule for that occasion. It was not a special order; and there is the mistake of my friend; he treats this as a special order, and he wishes to brush it aside. He lets the unfinished business play the part of the broom to brush it aside. Well, he must allow me to say that his interpretation of the rules is not applicable to this case. I consider that under the rules at this moment the District business is in order, and I hope my friend from Iowa will proceed with it.

Mr. CONNESS. Mr. President, it must be interesting sometimes to an observer in the Senate, if there were nothing else to observe that was peculiarly interesting, to see the combinations made up here—Senators will pardon me for saying it—and the direction and indication that take place here. This morning we have a joining hands, if not hearts, between the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCKALEW] and the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. SUMNER.] Ostensibly the Senator from Pennsylvania opposes considering the Arkansas bill to-day, strongly, powerfully, as is always the case with him. Dealing indirectly, the Senator from Massachusetts opposes it by wanting to give the day to some other business. Mr. President, a day was agreed to be given to the District of Columbia business, and I am disposed always to keep faith—at least I think I am—but if the Senator having charge of that business is willing that it shall go over to another day, then I think every obligation which can bind this side of the Senate—I mean this political side of the Senate; I do not mean now to include my friend from Pennsylvania on the other side—demands that we should go on to the end with the Arkansas bill and with like bills that are before us. As has been stated recently by other Senators in the Chamber, I do not know nor understand how the Republican or Union members of this Senate, after organizing governments in the South against such powerful influences as they have met, can now refuse final action for the admission of the States named and here making application for admission. By no process, by no means, not even by the seductive influences of my friend from Pennsylvania, who upon all other subjects generally manages to govern me, can any cooperation be obtained from me against those bills. The documents that are said to have been sent to the War Department can throw no light upon this subject that I, at least, am willing to wait to receive. We understand the business affecting the reconstructed States which are here applying for admission, and I hope we shall walk up squarely to the work of their admission. I am willing to say plainly that I want their votes for the national candidate for President of the United States, and I want them in the Union for that purpose; and I hope, sir, that on our side of the Senate, at least, there will be no impediments placed in the way.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I think time is of the essence of this whole proceeding, so far as admitting these States is concerned. If we are to admit them at all, we must immediately take them out of their present state of suspense, or we destroy all they have done. We are doing a great deal of harm by allowing this matter to drag. We agreed that if they would do certain things we would receive them. They have done those things substantially; they have struggled manfully against power and patronage and influence, and they have substantially complied with all we demanded. If we do not intend to let them in at once we had better say so, and stop the business altogether. This process of delay is most terrible to them, after having organized their governments; it leaves them in a state of disorganization, uncertainty, paralyzing business, paralyzing Union sentiment, and has a tendency to convince them that they have no friends anywhere who are willing to sustain them.

However we may cavil, whatever we may think, or whatever we may desire, matters very little; we are committed to a certain course of conduct, and there is no varying from that. We must do what we have agreed to. We must keep faith with these people. If we do, I believe that there is good ground to hope that they can sustain themselves against the combined elements that are against them; certainly without our action they cannot; with it, they may. There is no hope but to go forward with this work; and when we have admitted them, as we shall, and shall promptly; when they are recognized here as States, when their State governments are set up, let any man attempt to tear them down! If he does, let him bear the responsibility; let the hand that is raised against lawful authority there set up be seen; let us know who it is that will take the responsibility to inaugurate anarchy in those States after we shall have admitted them. I believe in Congress doing its duty, and if there be any power in this Government that dare interfere with the legitimate functions of these States when they shall be recognized by Congress, let the people of the United States know who it is and from whence it comes. I am for going forward on the supposition that the laws of this Government will be executed; I am going to take it for granted that they will be executed, although we may have had some warning to the contrary. We have no right to act upon the hypothesis that the laws will be denied. Let us pass the laws, doing our duty, and the people will hold the authorities of this Government responsible for their execution. I am in favor of proceeding at once with this business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved and seconded that the unfinished business and all prior orders be postponed for the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of the business of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HARLAN. I ask for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not know that I understand just what the question is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on postponing the unfinished business of yesterday, being the Arkansas bill, and proceeding to the consideration of the District of Columbia business, for which this day was set apart by a resolution.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Chair will indulge me in asking whether the District of Columbia business was made the special business for this afternoon by any order of the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To-day was set apart by an order of the Senate for District business; but that is superseded, under the rules, by the unfinished business of yesterday.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 12, nays 35; as follows;

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Corbett, Doolittle, Fowler, Harlan, Hendricks, McCreery, Norton, Patterson of New Hampshire, Patterson of Tennessee, Sumner, and Vickers—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Cameron, Cattell, Chandler, Cole, Conkling, Conness, Cragin, Drake, Edmunds, Ferry, Fessenden, Frelinghuysen, Howard, Howe, Johnson, Morgan, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Tanager, Tipton, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—35.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Davis, Dixon, Grimes, Henderson, Nye, and Saulsbury—7.

So the motion was not agreed to.

INVITATION TO MOUNT VERNON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before proceeding with the Arkansas bill, the Chair will lay before the Senate an invitation from the regent of the Mount Vernon Ladies' Association, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

MOUNT VERNON, THURSDAY, May 28, 1868.
The regent of the Mount Vernon Ladies' Association of the Union tenders to the Senate an invitation to visit Mount Vernon on Saturday next.

The steamer Arrow will be waiting at the wharf, (foot of Seventh street,) setting out at four p. m. The Senators will have an opportunity to see Mount Vernon and its surroundings toward sunset, and to return by moonlight.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will also lay before the Senate some bills from the House of Representatives, for reference.

The bill (H. R. No. 788) to regulate the appraisement and inspection of imports in certain cases, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 215) relative to the Louisville Bridge Company, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

BREAKWATER AT PORTLAND.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 279) in relation to the breakwater at Portland, Maine, was read twice by its title.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I should like to have that resolution acted on now.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope the Senator from Maine will not ask that now.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It will take but a moment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There is no objection to it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It can be passed in the morning hour to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made to the present consideration of the bill, it will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The committee have already informally considered it. Let it lie on the table.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I believe the Senator from Illinois is now willing to withdraw his objection and let the resolution pass. It is important that it should be passed early.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I will not object to taking a vote on it if no time is to be consumed.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There is no dispute about it; the committee have examined it.

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that so much of the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the breakwater in Portland harbor, Maine, as the chief engineer shall deem proper, may be expended under his direction in excavating the middle ground near the breakwater, and in otherwise protecting the channel from injury by filling and improving the same.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WASHINGTON CITY CHARTER.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. W. G. MOORE, his Secretary, announced that the bill (S. No. 475) to extend the charter of Washington city; also, to regulate the selection of officers, and for other purposes, having been presented to the President on the 16th day of May, 1868, and not having been approved by him or returned to the Senate, in which it originated, within ten days, (Sundays excepted,) it has become a law under the provisions of the Constitution.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message of the President of the United States, communicating papers which have been submitted to him relating to the proceedings for the formation of a constitution in the State of Florida under the reconstruction acts; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

REPRESENTATION OF ARKANSAS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (H. R. No. 1039) to admit the State of Arkansas to representation in Congress is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole; and the pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. FERRY,] to strike out all of the bill after the word "Union" in the fourth line.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I now ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to offer the resolution of inquiry, which I mentioned before, in order that it may be sent to the Department at an early hour.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolved, That the General of the Army be requested to transmit to the Senate any reports and papers received by him since the 4th instant in relation to the late election in Arkansas upon the adoption of a constitution.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I feel myself bound to object to that if it is to delay proceeding. I have no objection to the resolution, but I do not want it to be urged as a reason for postponing action. If the Senator wants to call for other information I certainly have no objection, but I am not willing to lay aside the Arkansas bill with a view of waiting to get information, and for that reason I object to the resolution on the present occasion. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Being objected to, the resolution goes over under the rule.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. President, I wish to answer the Senator's question, and say that I want the information, whether it comes before or after the bill is disposed of, and it will be for the Senate itself to judge whether the information is of a character to produce delay. I am not asking it to delay the bill.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Well, I have no objection to its being passed if it is not to be urged as a reason for continuing the bill. I withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The objection being withdrawn, the question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. FERRY] to the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is of considerable consequence, Mr. President, to have no misapprehension as to what the powers of Congress are over questions of this kind. I have taken occasion hitherto, on another subject, to express my opinions on this question, but as Senators who desire to have this amendment adopted have in this debate maintained with a great deal of vigor and with great ingenuity the proposition that we have no power at all in admitting a new State, either by way of fundamental condition or by way of compact with the people of that State, to limit the exercise of powers which otherwise as a sovereign State they might exercise, I think it right to occupy a short time in restating my opinion, because the fashion is getting to be that everybody who does not state his opinion on every question is supposed to agree to what everybody else says, and is estopped afterward.

Mr. CONNESS. I do not understand that to be so.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not understand it to be so, but it has been urged very stoutly in some arguments that have been addressed to us within my recollection.

Mr. President, the Constitution gives to Congress the power to admit new States. It gives to Congress the power to suppress rebellion; I believe that, even, is agreed to by gentlemen on the other side. It makes it the duty of Congress to guaranty republican forms of government in the several States. It enables Congress to make war and to conclude peace. Now, whether the condition of the State of Arkansas (because it is not necessary to go beyond that at present) is that precisely of being a new State admitted into the Union is, of course, a subject of dispute; and, therefore, in what I have to say I do not put it entirely or mainly upon that clause of the Constitution. My friends on the other side of the Chamber contend that this is no admission of a State, either new or old; that she is in the Union as she always was, and is here with her old laws; and that all the matter with her is that we unconstitutionally refuse to permit the Senators and Representatives who were elected under the authority of Andrew Johnson in 1865, or thereabouts, to come in. That is their proposition. Our proposition is the one so well stated by my honorable friend from Indiana [Mr. MORRIS] during this present session, which I need not restate; but the substance, the effect, and result of it is that we are clothed with plenary and absolute power to reorganize the governments of these States upon such fundamental republican forms as to us shall seem fit.

If that be our power, saying nothing for the moment as to the precise authority that the Constitution gives us over the Territories and the admission of new States—if we have power to reorganize the governments of these States upon such republican grounds as will make their constitutions conform to the general rule provided in the Constitution under which we live, that is of republicanism, I fail to see the logic which reaches the result that my friend from Indiana seems to reach, that we are unable to put that government in such a form that it shall "stay put," as the homely language of the North is, in that kind of republicanism which cannot be overthrown.

I did not fail to understand the point of my friend from Indiana—and that is what my friend from Massachusetts would call a technical point—that the people of no State or community can disentitle themselves to any faculty of sovereignty; and therefore he says that if these people to-day consent to strip themselves of any of the faculties and attributes that are adherent in their sovereign nature, the people to-morrow or next day, having the same unimpaired sovereign powers, can recede from any such agreement. That is the substantial ground of the argument. That proposition I deny as a matter of public law, as a matter of constitutional law, and, if I can use the phrase, also as a matter of municipal law. The history of the world is full all over of instances where peoples are depriving themselves of the exercise of powers that otherwise would be sovereign and complete, by compact and agreement, by conquest, or by cession. One of the faculties of sovereign power is dominion over the territory in which that sovereign power exists, and yet we all know that sovereign power disposes of its territory and of the people that are contained in it, and having disposed of it a people who succeed in the same sovereign State have no power to retake the ceded territory.

We all know, Mr. President, to come down to our own municipal and constitutional history, that the people of every single State in this Union have time and again from the foundation of the Government parted with rights which were the inherent and necessary faculties of sovereignty as it respected the private citizens and corporations within their own limits. They have granted charters of incorporations (which will illustrate the whole question) in which they have agreed that the incorporated companies should bear no taxation, sometimes for a limited period, sometimes for an unlimited period; and it has been decided, until it has become as familiar law as the spelling-book is to the school-boy, that, although it be true as is always conceded, that the power to tax is one of the highest faculties of sovereign power, yet the State binding itself by such a compact cannot recede from the engagement, and cannot therefore constitutionally impose a tax which it had agreed that it would not impose. Is not that thus far a limitation of the exercise of sovereign power? The courts of the United States that have decided this question have always held and admitted that it was, but they say that there is nothing in the inherent nature of sovereign power which cannot, if the sovereign power chooses for special objects or the public good to part with it, be parted with.

Is not the power to regulate the administration of justice within the territory of a State a sovereign power? Most clearly it is. There is no faculty of sovereign power which so essentially sustains the public good, which is so indispensable to that power which governs a State as the administration of justice; and yet my friend from Indiana and my friend from Illinois [Mr. TRUMBULL] cannot fail to know that more than forty years ago the Supreme Court of the United States decided that the State of Kentucky, having by compact parted with the sovereign power in an agreement with the State of Virginia to regulate the administration of justice as it respected a certain class of claims, was thereby forever estopped and prohibited from making any change of her laws that would affect that class of claims or the remedies upon them. That is the case of Green vs. Biddle reported in 8 Wheaton, and it is worth looking at; for the history of the nation concerning sovereign attributes in the Supreme Court of the United States, that was referred to the other day, is really, when you trace it down, a history of the political changes of opinion that have happened to exist in the breasts of the particular judges who composed that court, just so far as these so-called inalienable and ilimitable faculties became needful to the aggressive interests of slavery.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Will the Senator give the date of that agreement between Virginia and Kentucky?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will give it in a moment if the case gives it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Was it not before the Constitution was adopted?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I rather suspect, inasmuch as it was an agreement with Kentucky, which was not admitted until after the Constitution was adopted, that it must have been afterward.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Was it with Kentucky as a State?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That was what I wanted to know.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am going to show what the case was. It was brought before the Supreme Court of the United States at the February term, 1823, upon a certificate of division, and the following were the questions:

"1. Whether the acts of the Legislature of the State of Kentucky, of the 27th of February, 1797, and of the 31st of January, 1812, concerning occupying claimants of land are constitutional or not; the demandants and the tenants both claiming title to the land in controversy under patents from the State of Virginia, prior to the erection of the district of Kentucky into a State.

"2. Whether the question of improvements sought to be settled under the above act of 1797, the suit having been brought before the passage of the act of 1812, although judgment for the demandant was not rendered until after the passage of the last-mentioned act."

The opinion of the court was delivered by Mr. Justice Story, who said:

"The first question certified from the circuit court of Kentucky, in this cause, is whether the acts of Kentucky of the 27th of February, 1797, and of the 31st of January, 1812, concerning occupying claimants of land, are unconstitutional?"

"This question depends principally upon the construction of the seventh article of the compact made between Virginia and Kentucky, upon the separation of the latter from the former State, that compact being a part of the constitution of Kentucky. The seventh article declares that all private rights and interests of lands, within the said district, derived from the laws of Virginia, shall remain valid and secure under the laws of the proposed State, and shall be determined by the laws now existing in the State, (Virginia.)

"As far as we can understand the construction of the seventh article of the compact contended for by those who assert the constitutionality of the laws in question, it is that it was intended to secure to claimants of lands their rights and interests therein, by preserving a determination of their titles by the laws under which they were acquired. If this be the true and only import of the article, it is a mere nullity; for, by the general principles of law, and from the necessity of the case, titles to real estate can be determined only by the laws of the State under which they are acquired. Titles to land cannot be acquired or transferred in any other mode than that prescribed by the laws of the territory where it is situate. Every Government has, and from the nature of sovereignty must have, the exclusive right of regulating the descent, distribution, and grants of the domain within its own boundaries; and this right must remain until it yields it up by compact or conquest. When once a title to lands is asserted under the laws of a Territory, the validity of that title can be judged of by no other rule than those laws furnish, in which it had its origin; for no title can be acquired contrary to those laws; and a title good by those laws cannot be disregarded, but by a departure from the first principles of justice. If the article meant, therefore, what has been supposed, it meant only to provide for the affirmation of that, which is the universal rule in the courts of civilized nations, professing to be governed by the dictates of law."

Then he goes on to show that the language of the article does not mean that, but means that not only all land rights but all remedies affecting the merits which had been granted by Virginia should be determined by the laws of Virginia in force at the time of the compact. The act of the State of Kentucky to which objection was made was what we in the North call a betterment act; that is, it provided that on a recovery in ejectment by a plaintiff against a defendant, the defendant should have a rebate or recovery over from the plaintiff of the value of the improvements that had been put upon the land. It did not touch the question of the original title to the land, because, as Mr. Justice Story says, the laws of all countries agree in holding that the title to land must always depend upon the law of the State under which the title originated; but the question was whether the State of Kentucky, under the Virginia grants, could pass a law that the squatter of Kentucky should make the owner of land, when his title came to be asserted in court, pay to him the value of the improvement that he had bestowed upon the land. If there was no limitation to the sovereign power of Kentucky to provide these betterment acts, as they are called, then most clearly Kentucky could pass them; but Kentucky had agreed that all questions relating to land, as I have said, should be determined according to the laws of Virginia and not according to the laws of Kentucky.

Mr. Justice Story went on to define what the question was, and to declare that these were sovereign rights; that they must remain sovereign rights until the State of Kentucky should give them up either by compact (and he uses that very term) or by conquest, which is perhaps the term that my friends on the other side of the Chamber would say is applicable to the State of Arkansas. Then he goes on to show, in an opinion too elaborate for me to venture to trespass upon the time of the Senate to read, that this compact between the State of Virginia and the State of Kentucky was one which Virginia and Kentucky had a right to make as between themselves, and that Kentucky had thereby surrendered a portion of her sovereign rights to regulate the administration of justice in her own courts according to her own laws and had bound herself to administer justice upon an existing case according to the laws of another State, and that her attempt by legislation to recede from that compact was a violation of the compact and was therefore void under the Constitution of the United States, which held every State to its compacts, that it could pass no law impairing the obligation of a compact into which it had entered.

Then, it was said that this compact between Virginia and Kentucky was void, because the United States had not assented to it, there being a clause in the Constitution that no compact should be made between States without the assent of Congress. His answer to that was one which will be very pertinent here to this people of Arkansas, if they choose to organize, on the fundamental condition which we impose upon them; and it was this, that inasmuch as after Kentucky was separated from the territory of Virginia, Congress upon that compact and that new constitution had passed an act admitting Kentucky into the Union; it was a tacit assent to the ground-work and basis upon which she stood; and therefore, if Kentucky existed at all, she must exist by force of the very organic compact and terms under which she was admitted. The language of the court upon that subject is, perhaps, worth recurring to:

"Now, it is perfectly clear"—

And I am now reading from the opinion of Mr. Justice Washington, by whom the opinion upon the rehearing was delivered.

Mr. CONKLING. What page?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Page 362 of 5 Curtis.

The case was decided, as I have said, by Mr. Justice Story; but after it was decided upon the principles I have named, Mr. Henry Clay, upon whom we have heard a just eulogy passed very lately, addressed the court and asked that the case might be continued for reargument, because it affected so many interests in the State of Kentucky, and the court granted the request; and it was again argued, although the court were unanimous in the first instance, and on the second argument Mr. Justice Washington delivered the opinion. Upon this point, to which I am now calling attention, of implied assent by acting under a condition or compact, Mr. Justice Washington proceeds to say this:

"Now, it is perfectly clear, that, although Congress might have refused their consent to the proposed separation, yet they had no authority to declare Kentucky a separate and independent State without the assent of Virginia, or upon terms variant from those which Virginia had prescribed. But Congress, after recognizing the conditions upon which alone Virginia agreed to the separation, expressed, by a solemn act, the consent of that body to the separation. The terms and conditions, then, on which alone the separation could take place, or the act of Congress become a valid one, were necessarily assented to; not by a mere tacit acquiescence, but by an express declaration of the legislative mind, resulting from the manifest construction of the act itself. To deny this, is to deny the validity of the act of Congress, without which Kentucky could not have become an independent State; and then it would follow that she is at this moment a part of the State of Virginia, and all her laws are acts of usurpation. The counsel who urged this argument, would not, we are persuaded, consent to this conclusion; and yet it would seem to be inevitable, if the premises insisted upon be true."

Here, then, Mr. President, we have a case decided in the earlier days of the Supreme Court, and a case which, as it related merely to rights of land, and not to rights in slaves or rights of suffrage, was a case which appealed to no political prejudice of the court; indeed, I may almost say that at that day the court had not learned to have political prejudices; and that case, if I rightly understand it, is the solemn adjudication of the highest judicial tribunal in the land of two things: first, that a State of the Union may make a compact with another State which shall strip her of certain sovereign rights; second, that if that compact is made with the assent of Congress under the Constitution, it is one from which she cannot recede, and that any act attempting to recede from it upon her part is absolutely null and void. Now, why does not that apply to this case? And it further proceeds to declare as plainly as language can declare anything, that if a State comes into existence upon a compact or condition of that character, the very act which created her existence is the one which contains, as a part of its very essence and nature, the condition of things under which she was created, and therefore, if she repudiates that act of creation, she repudiates herself. She only exists, in the language of Mr. Justice Washington, by force of the act of Congress which admitted her into the Union upon those terms, and if that act of Congress imposing those terms is invalid, then she has not been in the Union at all, and all her laws passed in the mean time, in the language of the court, are acts of usurpation merely. And yet gentlemen contend that there is something so peculiar about our republican organization in this country that a sovereign State, more than anybody else, has a legal right to play fast and loose with her bargains and contracts; first, that she has no faculty at all to surrender any quality or privilege of sovereignty, which I have shown to be an entire error as applied to the whole class of instances which have arisen under our history; and, second, that if she does enter into any such engagement she has a perfect right to recede from it at any time, because it was a compact she had no right to make.

If every State may declare, as I have shown, and declare so as to bind her through all time, that her courts of justice shall administer the laws of a foreign State, and not her own, over a given class of subjects which otherwise she might have administered, why may she not declare that a particular class of her citizens who are now citizens of the United States, and who are entitled to exercise all the faculties of citizenship, shall never be deprived of the right to exercise those faculties. Is there anything anti-republican in that? Is there anything dangerous to the sovereignty of the State to declare that she shall maintain her institutions forevermore up to the full standard of republicanism as it existed when her constitution was formed? I think not.

But, as I was saying, Mr. President, this is not all the course of decision in this matter. We have another class of cases of compacts between a State and the United States, which, so far as the literal form of agreement goes, would be precisely analogous to this; and the cases that I now refer to are those between the United States and Maryland and Ohio and, I believe, Virginia, touching the old turnpike known as the Cumberland road. When that road was given up to those States by Congress they entered into an engagement that they would surrender the sovereign faculty of taxation upon any of the property of the United States or any mail coaches that were carrying the property of the United States over those roads. After they had got the property they concluded that it would be a wise thing, inasmuch as they could not surrender the faculties of sovereignty, to impose the tax, and so they undertook it; and the Supreme Court, in cases coming up from each one of those States—because after one State had tried it the others did not give it up, for they thought they might have better luck next time—involving the same question of the right of those States to be bound by a contract not to impose taxes upon a particular class of property that otherwise confessedly they might have imposed taxes upon, and that by force of the contract they had entered into with the United States not to do, in each case and at each time solemnly decided that they were bound by the contracts, and that the Constitution of the United States, whether it affected sovereignty or whatever it affected, prevented them from passing any law or act which should impair the obligation of that contract into which they had entered; and so another faculty of sovereignty was found to be one which could be given up by a State if she chose to give it up.

The same thing took place at first in respect to these Alabama land cases, upon which the case of Pollard's Lessee vs. Hagan was cited the other day. There, for the first time, as read by my friend from Missouri, not now in his seat, [Mr. HENDERSON,] the dogma that there was any inherent sacredness in the faculties of sovereignty that a State could not give up for any purpose, or under any circumstances, came into light, although on the very same questions as touching those same Alabama lands, as will be found in the dissenting opinion of one of the judges in that same case—I think it is in the same case—the previous decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States had been constantly and uniformly, in three or four instances, exactly the reverse, to wit, that the State of Alabama was bound by the compact that she entered into in respect to those lands, that the lands were fairly within the scope of the compact, and the compact was upheld, and the title of the United States given to its patentees was held to be the valid title. Now, as it is true that in this case that was read the other day, the judges in giving their opinions, or rather one of them, Mr. Justice McKinley, declared this doctrine that is now asserted on the floor of the Senate, but in the same breath he declared that it was not necessary to the decision of the case, because he decided, and a majority of the other judges concurred with him, that after all the question did not arise on account of the fact that the compact did not cover the land.

But I admit, Mr. President, that in a later case, one that occurred as late as 1857, in 20 Howard—I have forgotten the name of it—which was a case from the State of Mississippi, a judge of the Supreme Court, speaking for his associates, again speaking on this question of inherent sovereign rights which States possessed, which they could not part with, did say, in the most formal and solemn manner, that the State of Mississippi could not give up her right to control the navigable waters on the borders or within the territory of that State, to Congress by assenting to the conditions upon which she was admitted into the Union, and, therefore, that the provision in the bill by which the State of Mississippi was admitted into the Union, that the waters of the Mississippi should remain forever free to the navigation of all the inhabitants and citizens of the United States, was an obligation that she was not bound by. To be sure, Mr. President, it is due to the judge to say that they again dodged the question. They asserted the abstract doctrine, but immediately proceeded to decide that in that particular case the State of Mississippi had not attempted to do any such thing. But I confess that the doctrine which is now contended for was boldly announced; and it was carried at that same time, as you well know, sir, to an extent much greater even than that in the Dred Scott case, where the whole case turned upon the decision of the court, that by force of the Constitution touching the Territories Congress could pass no act which should prevent the introduction of slaves into those Territories; that the ordinance of 1787 was nothing but waste paper; that the constitutional provision which gave Congress the power to make all needful rules and regulations relating to the Territories had no applicable force; and that no act of Congress could be made which could prohibit a citizen of Mississippi, or of any other slaveholding State, from taking his property which he might hold by the laws of his own State into that Territory on this same ground of State sovereignty and equality.

And this leads me to allude (because I can, of course, only touch upon these subjects in the time which I feel justified in using) to what has been stated in the debate here about the phrase admitting a State "upon an equal footing with the other States" of the Union, and to the argument advanced, that if we impose any conditions or limitations upon the right of this State which are not imposed as it respects our own States, she cannot be admitted upon an equal footing. In the first place, there is no such provision in the Constitution. The language touching the "equal footing" of the States is borrowed from the acts of cession of Virginia and Georgia of the southwestern territory to the United States, which proceeds to declare that the inhabitants of those territories shall be erected into States of convenient size, and, when the proper time comes, shall be admitted upon an "equal footing" with the other States of the Union; and in one of these Alabama cases to which I have referred the judges of the court seize hold upon that expression in the compact between the State of Virginia and the State of Georgia and the United States in giving up the territory, as the grant which gives those States which are formed out of that territory the right to come in on an equal footing; in other words, that a compact which is made between the United States and Virginia and Georgia may bind the United States; but when we ask to have Virginia and Georgia bound by it, then it is quite a different thing. That is where the phrase comes from.

The equal footing to which each State is entitled under the Constitution is just such an equal footing, and no more, as that which the Constitution itself prescribes. What is that equal footing? It is that the representation of that State, like the representation of all others, shall be apportioned upon the total number of its inhabitants. It is that each State shall have two Senators in Congress. It is that each State shall have the same faculties in respect of those enumerated rights which are given to them, and those enumerated prohibitions which are asserted against them, which the Constitution contains, that every other has. That is the equal footing of the States which the Constitution has provided for, and it only relates, as you will perceive, to their relations as to each other, and does not relate to the extent of their territory, the number of their inhabitants, or the particular detailed nature of their republican institutions at all. Therefore, to maintain that you cannot admit a State upon any terms which will not make her in every respect politically like every other State is to assert a proposition that you can never fulfill.

Take the very constitution of Arkansas which is before you. You will find that that constitution narrows the faculties of that people in many respects and enlarges them in many others, as distinguished from the constitution of the State of Massachusetts or of Vermont or of New York; and therefore you would find, by a comparison, an instant demonstration of the fact that these people, if you have no condition at all, are not to be admitted upon an equal footing with those States, if by "equality" you mean the having institutions that are just alike. And if by "equality" you mean that they cannot be permitted to make an engagement which in any respect is different from the engagements the other States have made as the terms upon which they were to come in, on the ground that they could not part with a sovereign right, then I say you oppose yourself to the voice of all human experience, that all sovereignties do part with sovereign rights every day, as the State of Ohio has done as between herself and private persons, in limiting her faculty to tax banks, and as she and other States have done as to taxing mail coaches, &c., as the Supreme Court has decided; as the State of Kentucky has done in the case I have referred to.

Mr. MORTON. Ohio has the right to change her constitution in that particular, as any other State has, so that she still occupies the same position.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, Ohio has the right to change her constitution, but if she were to change her constitution and declare by her new constitution that the particular bank she engaged should not be taxed should be taxed, my friend then would find that Ohio had still the manacles of the law upon her limbs, and that her constitution would have no more power than the law she had passed.

Mr. CONKLING. Do you refer to the Piqua Bank and Knoop case?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I refer to the tax cases; I do not know what the names of the banks were; and I might refer to the bridge cases of Massachusetts and many others. So there is nothing in the difference between a constitution and a law which makes a distinction in the right of a State to limit her sovereign faculties one way or the other, if she binds herself by a law which impairs her right of sovereignty to impose taxes upon a particular person, then she is bound to stand by that compact, and if she chooses to change her constitution in order to violate the compact, the compact is just as valid as it was before. I should suppose my friend from Indiana would scarcely contest that.

But I have not time, Mr. President, and I am sure the Senate have not the patience to continue this branch of the discussion.

Mr. MORTON. I should like, with the permission of the Senator from Vermont, to ask him a question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. MORTON. Supposing, for the sake of the argument, that the people of a State have the power to bind themselves in perpetual compact with the General Government, by which they surrender some right, I want to ask the Senator whether that must be done by the people in their primary capacity or may be done by an ordinary Legislature?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is quite a different question from the one I have been so far arguing. I have been, in the first place, endeavoring to combat the proposition advanced the other day, that it was not within the power of the people as a body, acting through the highest form of action that they could possibly act in, to deprive themselves of a right which belonged to sovereignty, and as we all know that every political and civil right is inherent in and belongs to sovereignty, and that it only exists because of sovereignty, the proposition is simply that a State cannot deprive herself of any right except that which relates to private property which she owns as an individual.

Now, my friend from Indiana comes to another and quite a different question.

Mr. MORTON. No, sir; I argued that same question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But, I say, you now come in your inquiry to another and quite different question. I will attend to that if the Senator will have a little patience. I agree with my friend from Indiana that where a Legislature derives its powers solely from a constitution that creates it, so far as that Legislature has any relation to the constitution in what it is to do, it, of course, has no power to exceed the powers the constitution has given it; but where a Legislature represents a people which are not yet in a state of sovereign existence, as is the case with the State of Arkansas, and where the representatives of that people agree to a fundamental condition upon which that State is to have a sovereign existence, and the people of that State choose to acquiesce by upholding and continuing the form of government which is thus given to them, it becomes just as much the act of the whole people as it would have been if they had met in convention and agreed to it in form; and that very point is decided, I repeat, in the case I have alluded to, by Judge Story and Judge Washington.

There it was necessary that the State of Kentucky should have had the assent of Congress to making a compact with the State of Virginia, and the argument on the part of Kentucky was that Congress had never given its assent. What was the answer of the court? I have read it to you: that inasmuch as Kentucky received her existence by force of that compact, and by force of the act of Congress which admitted her afterward, to contend that the act of Congress which admitted her was not an agreement to that compact would be to contend that the State of Kentucky had no existence at all. So that, I say, whether the Legislature of Arkansas agree or disagree to a fundamental condition which we choose to impose as the very ground upon which we pass a bill of admission, when that fundamental condition is broken the bill falls; it becomes as if there had never been a bill to admit the State, and the State falls with it if we choose to enforce the forfeiture of the condition. That is my position.

I do not contend that any special force, if my friend will allow me to use a law expression, proprio vigore necessarily arises from the mere act of the Legislature under the constitution in assenting to the condition. I only say that if we put into a bill which gives a State or a corporation life, a condition upon which that life is to depend, if that people choose to accept that condition by acting upon that which we give to them, and go on with their State organization, they take it with the whole burden of the condition, and that it does not lie in their mouths afterward to say, "We assented to only half the law," or "We choose to accept the law without the condition," because the condition is an inseparable part of the law. If the State of Arkansas does not constitutionally exist to-day in an organized form without our will, can we not, as a part of that will, say that only upon certain terms shall that organization be permitted to be set up? And if it is set up, is it not necessarily a tacit agreement to those terms? Is it not necessarily, as was said by the court in the case to which I have referred, an express agreement to the terms, because they are working under the authority, and the authority only, that the law gave to them, which declared that it should be exercised upon, and only upon, certain conditions.

If this was applied to a private corporation, my friend from Indiana would not dispute with me for a moment, I take it; but the difficulty into which he has fallen is in supposing that there is something so sacred and so supreme in the usual attributes of a political community that is invested with the rights of sovereignty, that none of those rights could be parted with under any circumstances whatever. There is the fault in the argument. As it respects us, as it respects coming into the fellowship of States upon terms that we choose to impose, these communities are exactly in the same condition that a private corporation is that wishes a charter from us, subject of course to the provision of the Constitution which declares that they shall always have two Senators and a certain share in the Representatives, &c.

So much for that, sir. I am taking more of the time of the Senate than I feel justified in doing upon this important question of law. Now I wish to say a few words upon the general question.

We have proposed, in the first place, a constitutional amendment, to which I wish to ask the attention of the Senate. This was proposed on the 16th of June, 1866, and is known as the fourteenth article. The second section provides, as we all know, for a diminution in the representation of a State when any part of its male inhabitants shall be denied the right of the elective franchise; and we all know that it was intended as the foundation safeguard of this whole question of restoration. We all know that it was considered as of the most vital importance to the future welfare and prosperity of the whole country, as well as to the social order in the southern States, that that article should become a part of the Constitution of the United States, because then it would be above the temporary excitements and changes of party; it would be beyond the changes of administration; it would be beyond all changes of policy; it would be above any overt act by State authority in the localities where it applied. It was regarded, and justly regarded, as the key which should finally hold safe the great treasure of liberty and equality that we had wrung from the rebellion. I regard it so yet, not merely in that respect, but in the respect provided in the fourth section, which is as follows:

"The validity of the public debt of the United States, authorized by law, including debts incurred for payment of pensions and bounties for services in suppressing insurrection or rebellion, shall not be questioned. But neither the United States, nor any State, shall assume or pay any debt or obligation incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion against the United States, or any claim for the loss or emancipation of any slave; but all such debts, obligations, and claims, shall be held illegal and void."

I regard that still as of great importance, as of the highest importance at this moment, higher than any temporary injury, or suffering or inconvenience that can happen to the people of Arkansas, by waiting for a month or six weeks before they are admitted to representation in this body.

Now, what do we propose to do? We propose to admit the State of Arkansas; and I do not say by alluding to these considerations that I shall finally vote against the admission of that State; I hold that in reserve. I only allude to it now to show what appears to me to be the very high importance of not forgetting in our zealous haste the very groundwork upon which we have undertaken to establish this restoration. What do we propose to do? We propose to admit Arkansas, although we gave notice to that people that they must first have a convention and frame a constitution, must submit it to their people, must send it to us, must have it in such a condition that it shall meet our approval, and that then and afterward, before they should be entitled to a complete State organization and to representation as a State, this fourteenth article to which I have called your attention should become a part of the Constitution of the United States; not that the people of Arkansas alone should agree to it, which, to be sure, as my friend from Illinois [Mr. TRUMBULL] says, was all they could do, but we told them in unmistakable terms that they must do all that, and then they must wait until that article should have become irrevocable beyond the chances of fortune, beyond the chances of violence, beyond the chances reconsideration. Has it become so? I ask my honorable friend from Illinois has it become so? My friend is unwilling to say that it has. I do not know what his individual opinion is. I can scarcely say that I know what my own is.

To be sure, it is contended by some statesmen and by some jurists that three fourths of the States which must assent to this article of the Constitution means three fourths of the States which had legal and loyal and represented governments at the time the article was proposed. It is contended by another class of statesmen and jurists, whose purity is not to be questioned, that the Constitution plainly means that three fourths of the States are three fourths of all the States, and, therefore, in order to have it become a part of the Constitution, you must have twenty-eight States assent to it, instead of nineteen, or whatever the number otherwise would be. I confess, Mr. President, that the inclination of my mind is, if it is of any value to anybody to know it, in favor of the latter proposition. I hold myself ready to change my opinion if I shall be convinced, or that inclination if it shall turn out to be wrong. But inasmuch as it is a subject of dispute at least, of fair and honest dispute, are we to throw over to the mere chances of futurity the fourteenth article upon such a doubt and dispute? That is the question. Is there so little of value and of virtue and of security to the peace of this country in the years to come in this article which we framed with so much care and submitted to the States, as to make it worth our while to hazard it upon any chance whatever?

Mr. MORTON. I should like to ask my learned friend one question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will hear it with pleasure.

Mr. MORTON. It is, how the final adoption of the fourteenth article is put in peril by the admission of a State that has already ratified it itself?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will answer you presently. I am now merely endeavoring to call the attention of Senators to the transcendent importance to the country that we should make no mistake and run no hazard on this question. That is as far as I have gone so far.

And now I wish to call the attention of Senators and the country once again to the fact that we are not guilty of any want of faith whatever to the people of Arkansas, or of any other southern State, in saying to them, as we said in 1867 when we passed the law under which they have organized, "when you have organized and have adopted, so far as you can, that fourteenth article, you shall then wait until enough of your fellows have adopted it to make it absolutely secure." Where is the injustice in that? Where is the bad faith in that? Have we held out any other inducement to them? Have we invited them to organize and to arrange their State affairs and to come here upon any other terms? By no means. What, then, is meant by Senators when they say, "Why are you keeping them out; have they not done all you asked them to do? You are committing bad faith against them." Is it bad faith, in a matter of this grave importance, to say to these people when they have taken one of the steps that we require as a condition precedent, to wait until the other shall be taken also? I fail to see it.

Now, my friend from Indiana inquires (and I hasten to that because I do not wish to occupy time) where is the danger, where is the hazard of losing this constitutional amendment any more by letting this State in than by keeping her out? I will tell my friend where it appears to me to be; and I trust my friend will believe me when I tell him that, if I know myself, I am as sincerely anxious to restore these people, and all the other people of the South, to their primal relations to this Union as he is, or as any other gentleman on this floor; but I am anxious, at the same time, to do it so that it will be a restoration and remain a restoration.

My fear is this—and I confess that it is not to my mind a light fear—I hope it will not happen—that when the State of Arkansas, which is, perhaps, a fair sample of all the others, shall have been admitted to representation, and shall have then put on the full robes of statehood, as my friend from New York [Mr. CONKLING] very happily expressed it the other day, she will have then become entirely free from the operation of our military government, she will be no more the subject of military control, of military surveillance or military aid, than the State of Vermont or the State of Indiana is. Her only rightful aid in preserving the new institutions which she has set up against the opposition that we know exists there from those who have been in rebellion against the Government will be the aid and support that she gets from the President of the United States. We all know that. My friend knows that. By the Constitution and the existing laws the State of Arkansas will have no anchor to tie to and no rock to lean upon but that of Andrew Johnson, the President of the United States, the moment she ceases to be in the condition she now is and becomes a State of the Union.

It is therefore worth a little while to inquire what is the position of the President of the United States as it respects this State government that we are about to set up in Arkansas. How does he feel toward it? What are his views of its legality? Sir, we are not left in the dark about that. We know that in his opinion the whole scheme of restoration, as it exists in the laws of Congress, is totally and grossly unconstitutional; and we know that it is the opinion of many Senators on this floor that if he believes that he may set those laws at defiance with impunity; that there is no power in the land to punish him for it; that there is no power in the land to hold him to the execution of them, so long as acting in good faith, he believes he is doing his duty by undertaking to overturn them!

Now, therefore, when the government of Arkansas under this bill is set up, and the bill is passed over the veto of the President of the United States—if he should still be of the opinion that he has been, that all this is unconstitutional, and should act upon that opinion—what will be the condition of affairs? He will be bound to believe that this government thus set up is a usurped government, and that the true government of Arkansas is the one he instituted in 1865, and that the true voters of Arkansas are the white men and rebels, and nobody else. If he has that belief as an officer of the Government, what will he believe it to be his duty to do? His friends must answer for him; I cannot. I only mean to say that I have great fear in trusting to the President of the United States, and I am not now impeaching his motives in the least degree; I am only alluding to his opinions as they are represented to us by himself—I have great fear in trusting to the President of the United States to uphold this new government of Arkansas against the rebels that are in it and around it and of it.

Now then, to follow my friend's question a little further, suppose it should happen that there should be a domestic tumult in Arkansas, or there should be such a pressure against the organization of this new government, when it is first organized, as to make it impossible for it to go on without military aid, and the new Governor should call upon the President for that aid, what would the President say? If he is true to his history and true to his opinions, as he has represented them to us, he will say "Go away; I know you not; you are a usurper yourself; you do not represent any State of Arkansas; it is another man who is the Governor of that State, and not you." Suppose he fails to say that; suppose he only yields to that Governor a slow, dilatory, reluctant support, such as he has yielded—if he has yielded any—to the reconstruction measures that we have passed, where will the new State government of Arkansas find itself then do you suppose? I fear, Mr. President, that it will find itself upside down. If it does find itself upside down, and a new Legislature comes in elected by what they call "the white man's party of Arkansas," which is another name for "the rebel party," before this article becomes a part of the Constitution, and then they retract, as Ohio and New Jersey have done, where are you then? You have her Representatives here, very good men I dare say; but like Ohio and New Jersey, whose Representatives you have, very good men here, she has taken the back track.

I know it is said by good lawyers that a State having once assented, cannot retrace her steps. I doubt that, Mr. President. That is one of the debatable questions which remain to be decided, and if there is any value in prophecy, I assume to prophecy that the Supreme Court of the United States, as it is now organized, will, as certainly as the day comes, decide that they have a right to take back their assent at any time before the assent of three fourths of the States finally closes the thing into the Constitution. My fear, therefore, is that the haste we are making in reconstruction, in the way that we are now proposing to make it, will be a haste that will prove to be a haste backward; and that is the kind of haste I do not wish to make.

Not to be misunderstood, Mr. President, I repeat that the developments of a few days may satisfy me that this risk is worth taking; but I am not satisfied of it yet. I wish Senators to think of it seriously, to prognosticate as far as they can the future, and before they set up a State government in any of these States, let them feel assured as far as they well and safely can be, that that government has either in itself the power of self protection, as perhaps some of these States have, or else that they will receive it from the source from which they are entitled to receive it, the United States. I do not know that either of these propositions is true now.

Therefore, Mr. President, what I desire to do—I do not know that it will meet the approving opinion of a single other Senator—is to put the government of Arkansas as now elected immediately into the hands of the persons who were elected to administer it, but to put it into their hands under the same military protection and aid that exists there now, so that the hand of Congress and the law will uphold that government as it has upheld order there hitherto, to be administered by those loyal men who are elected, and not by the rebels who are appointed by the President, until they shall have had time to get themselves into practical working order; until, as the shipbuilders say, they shall have made a trial trip; and in the mean time this constitutional amendment being adopted by the Legislatures of the other States, as to whom I would make the same provision, will have become a part of the Constitution of the United States, and then we can admit their Senators and Representatives to these Halls without any fear of the consequences; because then if a State government is overthrown there will be the hard-pan of the Constitution of the United States under their feet, and you will touch bottom somewhere. These being my fears, and having taken more time than I ought to have done, I make this motion, which expresses my opinion: that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary with instructions to report the same so amended as to provide for the immediate inauguration of the officers elected under the new constitution in Arkansas, and for the immediate termination of the functions of all persons now and heretofore exercising civil duties in said State, and so as to provide for the continuance of the present military government in aid of said officers until said State shall be admitted to representation in Congress, and to provide for the admission of said State when the article proposed as article Fourteen shall become a part of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. CONKLING and Mr. WILSON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York.

Mr. CONKLING. May I inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts his purpose in seeking the floor?

Mr. WILSON. My purpose was to follow the example of some of my associates here, and say a few words on the general question.

Mr. CONKLING. I beg pardon of the Senator. I thought he wished to make a motion touching another matter, in which case I would yield.

Mr. President, if any member of this body should discuss such a question as the Senator from Vermont has been treating without some examination and reflection, certainly I ought not to do it. Nevertheless, in view of the allegations we have heard from the Senator from Vermont as to the lessons taught by the legislative and judicial history of the country concerning the pending proposition and the grave question it involves, I venture without meditation to express my dissent from his understanding of the precedents and authorities.

I deny that the history of the Government in any of its branches warrants the assertion that a condition such as is now before us imposed by Congress on a State is authorized or binding after the State assumes her statehood in the Union. I venture to go farther, and to affirm that there is but one single instance in the history of the country, and that a very recent instance, in which the experiment has been tried. The other day, when some allusions were made to this subject, it was said that there were several instances of this sort; two, at all events, precisely in point and of recent occurrence. It was suggested that the case of Missouri, as the first case in time, furnished an example, and shed light directly upon this question. I pause a moment to comment first upon the proviso in the act admitting Missouri. I do not mean to repeat what was said so clearly by the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BUCKALEW;] but passing beyond the point he stated, I wish to call attention to the fact that no attempt was made there to do any part of what is here proposed. There was no attempt to change the constitution of Missouri, or to interfere with the people of Missouri in any change they might in future propose. No attempt was made to contract or dictate as to any matter pertaining to the rights or powers of Missouri. But falling short of all this, and of a different character altogether, was a provision that a certain construction should not be put upon a specified clause of the constitution, which construction was forbidden by the Constitution of the United States.

Not having the language at hand, I state that the resolution in the case of Missouri provided simply that a provision in the proposed constitution should never be construed to mean, nor should any law in pursuance of it be passed, that any citizen of the United States should be deprived of any immunity or right to which he was entitled by the Constitution of the United States. If the Senator from Wisconsin has it under his eye, I ask him whether I am not right.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Substantially.

Mr. CONKLING. I will ask the loan of the book one moment, if the Senator will oblige me.

Let us observe that it was not a proposition that Congress should obliterate one line or letter of that constitution, nor that Congress should change the constitution in any respect; nor was it a proposal that the people of Missouri, in their legislative capacity, or in their primary capacity, sitting in convention, or in any other way, should assent to a change of the constitution which they proposed; nor that they should submit to any part of the constitution being made unchangeable, but it was that a particular provision pointed out—

"Shall never be construed to authorize the passage of any law, and that no law shall be passed in conformity thereto, by which any citizen of either of the States of this Union shall be excluded from the enjoyment of any of the privileges and immunities to which such citizen is entitled under the Constitution of the United States."

I take it that, with or without this provision, the Congress of the United States, the United States themselves, speaking through any appropriate Department of the Government, had the same right to insist upon this that they had to exist as a Government.

The requirement was that a State should do nothing depriving any citizen—leaving the question entirely open who was and who was not a citizen—of any right to which that citizen was entitled by the Constitution of the United States. The whole scope of the enactment was, that in all cases, to be legally ascertained, of citizens of the United States entitled as such by the Constitution of the United States to given rights or immunities, no law of Missouri should come between the Constitution of the United States and the objects of its operation and protection. I submit, then, upon the bare statement of the provision, aside from the reasons for it, clearly assigned by the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania, the Missouri case does not aid us in support of the pending proposition.

The Senator from Pennsylvania well said that the object aimed at in the case of Missouri was not to destroy, but to establish her equality with the other States. I go still further, and say that in pursuit even of this object Congress did not resort to the means here proposed, or to means in any sense equivalent or similar.

But then we come—and I am following the legislative and judicial precedents together—to a class of cases to which the Senator from Vermont has so elaborately alluded; and we are told that they reflect light upon the question whether you can admit a State into the Union, and in the same breath pronounce a perpetual prohibition against her exercising functions falling exclusively within State power and prerogative. We are told, inferentially, at least, that the Supreme Court of the United States as long ago as 8 Wheaton decided in the case of Green vs. Biddle, reviewed with so much apparent minuteness by the Senator, that such an anomaly was supposable, and could be legally consummated. I wish to call attention to that case, and see whether, indeed, it decides anything in the direction of the argument of the Senator from Vermont. In the first place, let me read two or three brief paragraphs of the head note to show what it was the court was talking about:

"The compact between Virginia and Kentucky was a contract within the eighteenth section of the first article of the Constitution of the United States."

Here is a misprint, one of various things showing that this case is loosely reported, and was, in the first instance at least, rather loosely treated in court; I may as well say just here, it was an ex parte case, argued only on one side. The landlord alone appeared in the case; the tenant did not appear at all, and no argument whatever was made in the first instance, which led Mr. Clay, as amicus curiæ, being present, to request a reargument, not as I understand the Senator from Vermont to think, for fear the prerogatives of the State of Kentucky would suffer, but because he said confusions were likely to arise in land titles. This led Mr. Clay to request that the case might be argued on both sides before it was finally decided, and it was so argued. The head note is a misprint in referring to the eighteenth section of the first article of the Constitution. There is no such section. The reference undoubtedly is to the tenth section, ordaining that States shall not make compacts without the consent of Congress. But to proceed with the head note:

"The compact between Virginia and Kentucky was a contract, within the eighteenth section of the first article of the Constitution of the United States."

"It is not necessary that the consent of Congress to a compact between two States should be expressed in any particular form; and when Congress consented to the separation of Kentucky, and its erection into a State, it must be taken to have consented to the compact by which the separation was agreed to be made.

"It is not a valid objection to the compact that it restricts the exercise of the legislative power of Kentucky in certain particulars."

There were two questions certified by the circuit court, and the case was argued, no counsel appearing for the defendant, and Judge Story says, in the outset of his opinion:

"This question depends principally upon the construction of the seventh article of the compact made between Virginia and Kentucky upon the separation of the latter from the former State, that compact being a part of the constitution of Kentucky. The seventh article declares," &c., "reciting it."

Let me say at this point the bearings of the case. A compact had been made between two States which related to the title to lands and to betterments, (the court say it is impossible to separate the two elements,) and the objection was made, first, that States could not be parties to contracts, and that, if they made compacts with each other, the consent of Congress was necessary, and that such consent had not been obtained. The court held a provision as to contracts applied to States; that these two States had made a compact to which the consent of Congress had been given—not formally and specifically given at the time, but sufficiently given by the act being ratified and affirmed. Now, turn to the opinion of Mr. Justice Washington, and see whether I am right:

"1. The first objection, says the judge, is founded upon the allegation that the compact was made made without the consent of Congress, contrary to the tenth section of the first article, which declares that 'no State shall, without the consent of Congress, enter into any agreement or compact with another State or with a foreign Power.' Let it be observed, in the first place, that the Constitution makes no provision respecting the mode or form in which the consent of Congress is to be signified, very properly leaving that matter to the wisdom of that body, to be decided upon according to the ordinary rules of law and of right reason."

Having disposed of that, he says:

"A slight effort to prove that a compact between two States is not a case within the meaning of the Constitution, which speaks of contracts, was made by the counsel for the tenant, but was not much pressed."

Disposing of this second suggestion, he comes to the conclusion of his opinion. How can it be argued from this case that the court decided or intended to intimate anything on the question whether Congress may fasten shackles upon a State in advance and have them remain there. The only thing in the whole opinion to which the honorable Senator from Vermont referred, that I can find is this casual expression of Judge Story, which, as I read it and understand it, does not make in the direction in which the Senator argued:

"As far as we can understand the construction of the seventh article of the compact contended for by those who assert the constitutionality of the laws in question, it is that it was intended to secure to claimants of lands their rights and interests therein by preserving a determination of their titles by the laws under which they were acquired. If this be the true and only import of the article it is a mere nullity; for, by the general principles of law, and from the necessity of the case, titles to real estate can be determined only by the laws of the State under which they are acquired. Titles to land cannot be acquired or transferred in any other mode than that prescribed by the laws of the territory where it is situated. Every Government has, and from the nature of sovereignty must have, the exclusive right of regulating the descent, distribution, and grants of the domain within its own boundaries."

And now come the words which the Senator read:

"and this right must remain until it yields it up by compact or conquest."

Taking the passage together as far as it is a declaration of anything except by way of preface to the utterance the judge was about to make, it seems to me a declaration against the inference derived from it by the Senator from Vermont. Suffice it to say there was no point in judgment like the point here, and the case did not, and could not, decide anything material to this discussion.

But the Senator referred to a variety of other cases. He referred to what the State of Ohio had done, and although he did not name the case, I conclude he referred to the case of the Piqua Bank vs. Knoop, the treasurer of Miami county, Ohio, which was argued on one side in the Supreme Court in recent years by one of the oldest members of the other House, Mr. SPALDING, of Ohio. What was that case? I understood the Senator from Vermont to argue that it tended to show that in some way a State may be divested of its constitutional sovereignty, or of a portion of it. I have just sent for the case, and will read the head note:

"In 1845, the Legislature of Ohio passed a general banking law, the fifty-ninth section of which required the officers to make semi-annual dividends, and the sixtieth required them to set off six per cent. of such dividends for the use of the State, which sum or amount so set off should be in lieu of all taxes to which the company, or the stockholders therein, would otherwise be subject."

That was the case; and the question upon which the struggle occurred was this—a point even more remote than that suggested by the part of the head-note I have read—whether, having granted a charter containing the provision stated, and the stockholders having accepted it and gone into operation under it, and set aside their six per cent. in lieu of taxes, vested rights had ensued inasmuch that they were protected by that provision of the Constitution of the United States which says that no State shall pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts. That was the point in the case, because the Legislature of Ohio sought to recall this stipulation and to subject the banks, like other individuals and corporations, to a discretionary taxation, and the banks said, "No; we have accepted this charter, and the charter, together with our acceptance, completes a contract, which is sacred, according to the Constitution of the United States, and until the charter has run out, and we have derived its benefit, you cannot lay your hands upon us;" and they went to the Supreme Court upon that ground, and the court held that they were right in saying that it was a contract and they were protected by the provision of the Constitution to which I have referred.

But, sir, does this case shed any light upon the question of fundamental compacts or conditions embracing political powers imposed by the Government of the United States upon particular States? I submit not; and yet it leads to a class of legislative precedents supposed to be in the line of this discussion. It leads to those cases like the Maryland case and several others—the Cumberland road, I believe, is one; I speak from general recollection—where Congress said and the State said that certain property, land in some instances, in some instances stage coaches running over certain lines, should not be taxable by the State, or should be taxable only in one way or another. There are many of those cases, and they go back to a principle as old as Maryland vs. McCulloch, in 4 Wheaton, where the court said, as they have always said to this day, without any compact, without any act of Congress, that by the Constitution of the United States, a State could not tax the mint, could not tax the custom-house, could not tax the property and instrumentalities owned by the United States, by which the Government of the United States carried on its affairs. Upon somewhat analogous reasoning it was that when stage coaches ran on certain lines and carried the mail, the suggestion was made that they ought not to be taxed, and should not be taxed, and it became a matter of contract and understanding. So of the public lands. All this is, however, upon a principle distinguishable from this case, and presenting a question the elements of which do not enter into the question we are now discussing.

So the cases referred to by the honorable Senator from Nevada, [Mr. STEWART,] where acts of admission have said that non-residents should not be taxed invidiously, more onerously than the residents of the State, they are just like the case in that respect of the Piqua Bank and the Treasurer of Ohio. The power of taxation is undoubtedly one of the high illustrations of sovereignty; but in certain quantities, in particular instances, in its application to particular subjects, it may be regulated or exercised by contract, and so the Supreme Court has held over and over again. I recollect a case argued by the honorable Senator from Maryland before me, [Mr. JOHN-SOX,] a case to which, if I mistake not, he referred not a great while ago in the debate in the case of Nebraska. I will read a remark made by the Senator from Maryland. The Senator from Vermont on that occasion suggested "but taxation is a sovereign power." The Senator from Maryland said:

"A right, too. She had a right to tax. She is to judge herself whether she will execute the power; but the power necessarily involves the support of the State. The State government must be supported, and the only mode of supporting it is through some form of taxation. It was contended in the two cases to which I have referred, that the State could not part with the taxing power. The answer which the Supreme Court gave, and the answer was satisfactory to the whole bench on each occasion, was, that the State could enter into a contract in relation to any subject which did not impair her sovereignty and take away her ability to hold an equal place among her sister States; and as she could do it in relation to the two subjects to which I have adverted after she came in, she could do it the moment of coming in."

That is, she can agree to say to a particular corporation, or class of corporations, or individuals, "In lieu of undetermined and fluctuating taxes, we will accept so much," or she may say to a certain class of individuals, as the State of New York has said: "If you will enlist as soldiers and form uniformed companies, your property to the extent of five hundred or one thousand dollars shall be exempt for seven years, or forever." Does anybody doubt that the State of New York had the power to say that? The question arose there as it did in the case of Ohio, whether having said it, and a subsequent Legislature having repealed the act, the act of repeal was constitutional or not; in other words, whether the transaction had become a contract which was sacred by the Constitution of the United States; but as to the power of the State—

Mr. BUCKALEW. How was it decided?

Mr. CONKLING. Well, sir, I regret to tell the Senator how it was decided, as I made a very long struggle myself in the case and succeeded until we reached the court of appeals, and the court of appeals held that it was not a case falling within the principle of the Ohio case, but that it was an act constantly subject to revision and repeal, and that although the militiamen were exempt, while the law stood, from taxation, as everybody admitted they were, a subsequent Legislature having stepped in and repealed it, all after the repeal fell under the ordinary obligation to pay taxes. But in that case no man, judge, or counsel, ever challenged the right or power of the State to part in so far, while it chose, with its right to tax these individuals, or this class of individuals. It is an illustration which never occurred to me in this connection until this moment, but it brings out, it seems to me, the distinction between the cases of which the Senator from Vermont has been speaking, and such cases as he must find in order to vindicate the position assumed for the pending proposition.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to say a word more, particularly about other passages in the legislative history of the country. It was said the other day by some Senator that Nevada was an instance, if Missouri was not, of the imposition of fundamental conditions like this. Sir, that is an entire mistake. The statement was accepted at the time; but I have looked, and I find the case of Nevada was simply this: an enabling act for Nevada was passed, which act provided that, upon a constitution being presented, and other things being done, the President of the United States should issue a proclamation, upon which the State should be deemed admitted to the Union; and such became the historical fact. The enabling act provided as a condition-precedent—mark the distinction; there are other distinctions, but this one is abundant for the purpose—that the constitution—no, sir, I beg pardon; not even the constitution; it did not go so far—that the convention, by an ordinance, should declare first, second, and third, specifying, among other things, that involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, should not exist in the State. There, you perceive, was an enabling act giving notice to these people, "If you wish to be admitted you must come with a constitution declaring so and so." If the ordinance in that case is to be treated as equivalent to the constitution, and, for the sake of argument, I will admit that it is, "You must come with a constitution which, at the time it speaks to us, holds this language in these respects;" but not "You must come with a constitution which Congress decrees shall, like the laws of the Medes and Persians, be immutable forever in such respects as Congress shall point out." There was no such language as that, although had that been done it would not present this precise question. But that was the case of Nevada, and that is all of it in this behalf.

Now, we come to the next case in the order of history, and nobody has referred to it in this debate. I suggest it to the attention of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. SUMNER.] Sometime ago the State of Tennessee, which had been in the category of these other States—there are ten now; there were eleven then—came here for admission, and this same proposition was presented, of imposing upon Tennessee fundamental conditions identical in substance with the fundamental condition here proposed, and the honorable Senator from Massachusetts offered such a proposition which I have before me. These are its words:

"Provided, That this shall not take effect except upon the fundamental condition that within the State there shall be no denial of the electoral franchise or of any other rights on account of color or race, but all persons shall be equal before the law, and the Legislature of the State, by a solemn public act, shall declare the assent of the State to this fundamental condition, and shall transmit to the President of the United States an authentic copy of such assent whenever the same shall be adopted, upon the prompt receipt whereof, he shall, by proclamation, announce the fact, whereupon, without any further proceedings in the part of Congress, this joint resolution shall take effect."

The Senate was then intent upon a very interesting juncture, a very grave measure; Tennessee was the pioneer returning State of the eleven which had been deranged. The form of substance of her restoration to relations with the Union was very fully discussed upon its merits, both of law and fact; and how think you, Mr. President, the judgment of the Senate stood then upon the propriety, the power, the wisdom of attempting to impose such a provision? Four Senators, and four only, voted in the affirmative, and thirty-four voted against it on a call of the yeas and nays. I have no idea that the argument in truth is any stronger now than it was then, nor have I any idea, without any disrespect to the State of Tennessee, that any greater risk, if risk there be, is to be run in the case of Arkansas, looking to the ultimate future, than was incurred in the case of Tennessee.

Mr. MORTON. I should like, with the permission of the Senator from New York, to ask him a question which I shall be glad to have him answer.

Mr. CONKLING. I shall be glad to do it if I can.

Mr. MORTON. Suppose, when Florida comes here for admission, being small in population and without prospect of very rapid increase, we should say to Florida, "These small States have too much power in the Senate and we will agree to admit you only upon condition that you shall never send but one United States Senator here." I ask if she would not have as much right to agree to that condition of admission as to agree that she will surrender her right to regulate the elective franchise.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I make this response: the Senator need add but one element to his question to make it a self-evident proposition. He need only include in his premises the supposition that the Constitution of the United States gives to a State the right to control the elective franchise as clearly as it confers equal representation in the Senate and the demonstration is absolute. The only way to avoid the logic of his inquiry, it seems to me, is to deny that the right to regulate the elective franchise is one of the prerogatives of a State. This is my answer. If it be true that regulating the right to vote within certain limits, which I will endeavor to define in a moment, falls within the province of a State, then I should be compelled to answer that any argument which would prove the right and the validity of the condition here proposed would prove the possibility, if not the propriety, of the encroachment suggested by the honorable Senator from Indiana.

Mr. President, as I have no secrets about this matter in any of its phases, although I had no intention of saying anything about it, I have no hesitation in stating my opinion upon the whole matter of the question of the Senator from Indiana. Without going back of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution, be it ratified now or about to be ratified, it seems to me clear that by the unmistakable force of its language the regulation of suffrage in the States belongs to the States themselves. I know there are Senators who differ with me; I know there are Senators here who believe that the guarantee clause of the Constitution goes so far as to justify them in differing with me, and their argument, if I understand it, is this: the Constitution of the United States provides that the United States shall guaranty to every State a republican form of government; ergo, whenever Congress sees in a State such a regulation of suffrage as, in the judgment of Congress, is anti-republican, Congress may interpose as it pleases; in this instance, of course, by means of what is called a fundamental compact, to correct the evil. Now, sir, in all instances it is easy to put extreme cases; and the advocates of this doctrine, with very little ingenuity, can put cases which, I think we should all agree, sustain their proposition. Suppose, for example, some State should enact that voting at elections should be confined exclusively to men worth $5,000, 000 and upward, or should establish some other test of the right to vote which palpably would exclude the great mass of mankind in that State, would leave in the State of New York, for example, twenty men to exert the whole elective power of the State; there would be a case so strong, not because it related to suffrage necessarily, but because of the practical effect produced, as to enable a fair tribunal to say, "this is anti-republican; it is a condition of things which calls upon the United States to interfere, not because it relates to the suffrage necessarily, but because the practical effect of it is to transform this Government from a republican Government, operating by general suffrage, into an aristocracy so extreme and odious that its character is unmistakable." In such an event I think my honorable friend from Indiana will agree with me, a case would arise to which the guarantee clause of the Constitution would apply, but not, I repeat, necessarily because the particular instrumentality resorted to to subvert republican government and establish aristocracy was the elective franchise, but because by some reason, by some means, no matter what, that effect had been produced and that end had been accomplished.

But, Mr. President, I was proceeding with the legislative history of the country, which we have been told in the course of this debate has sanctified the bill before us; which, we have been told, has repeatedly affirmed the power now insisted on, and which, one Senator added, had always been treated with respect and received with acquiescence. I have been endeavoring to show, coming down to the case of Tennessee, that no such thing appearing in the annals of the country as far down as I have traced them, has been maintained successfully, except in reference to questions of taxation, public property and the like which, for obvious reasons have no bearing upon this case. I wish to come now to the case of Nebraska, which, as I understand it, constitutes the solitary exception to the proposition I affirm. In the case of Nebraska there is a condition, between which and that in this bill there is a very general similarity, although it resembles more nearly, I think, the amendment proposed by the honorable Senator from Missouri.

Mr. DRAKE. That amendment of mine is in terms the same as the Nebraska act.

Mr. CONKLING. My recollection was that the terms were alike or equivalent. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words about the Nebraska case. While it has stood, it has been treated with respect, no doubt, in so far as a precedent is treated with respect which is very modern and which has never been drawn in question one way or the other; I have no memory of the Nebraska case being quoted as authority anywhere except in the hurried debate which sprang up the other day in the House of Representatives upon this very bill, or one like it. The Nebraska bill was in charge of the honorable Senator from Ohio who sits now as the Presiding Officer of this body. It was reported from the Committee on Territories without any such proviso or condition. The fundamental condition, as it is so often called, came in that case originally from the then Senator from Missouri, Mr. Brown, although in the way in which it was eventually adopted it was offered, I think, by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. WILSON.] It led to a very animated and very searching debate, which I have traversed rapidly since, in which many Senators took part, and took part repeatedly, and no man can read it and doubt the earnestness and sincerity of those who conducted it. The honorable Senator from Michigan, not now in his seat, [Mr. HOWARD,] was among those who, in the strongest language, which I have before me and which I think would repay the reading if I had not occupied so much time, with great diversity of illustrations scouted the idea that this compact was to be of any, the slightest, obligation upon the State of Nebraska. So did the honorable Senator from Ohio, the present Presiding Officer of this body, and in language as strong as he could command demonstrated, as I think, that the same principle which would enable this to be done would lead to results just as anomalous and startling as those now suggested by the honorable Senator from Indiana in the question he asked a moment ago.

The bill went to the House of Representatives, and was there denounced by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Mr. WILSON of Iowa, and by Mr. BINGHAM of Ohio, by Mr. SHELLABARGER of Ohio, and by the first lawyers in the House who discussed it; and that the proposition, thoroughly assailed as it was, was defended by only one member in either House except upon very general considerations of expediency, no one undertaking to argue it upon the law, as far as I have observed, except the honorable Senator from Vermont, who then stated views similar to those which he has delivered to the Senate to-day. I think no man can read this debate and not see that the balance of argument and the balance of authority was altogether against the proposition. It passed eventually upon the declaration of several Senators, very much in the language employed by the honorable Senator from Connecticut [Mr. FERRY] a day or two ago in reference to the condition in this bill, that they deemed it mere waste paper, and that they would let it pass as such.

Mr. President, that is a very convenient argument. I have had it addressed to me in private several times in reference to this bill, and I have made an effort, I confess, to entertain it and be satisfied with it, thinking that if a sufficient number of doubts could so accept it the bill need not go back to the House of Representatives, and we might relieve ourselves and the other House of the embarrassment and trouble of a disagreement. But I am inclined to think it will hardly do for the Congress of the United States to make a blank motion, and not only to make a blank motion, but to do a thing, confessedly in the estimation of those who are thus called upon to yield their convictions, in violation of the Constitution of the United States. It may be said that this phrase, "upon an equal footing with the other States," is borrowed from some act of Congress; phraseology picked up from some source not of high or commanding authority. No matter, sir; usage makes law, and I do not stop to inquire the origin of this phrase. We all know that inwrought with the genius of our Government, imbedded in our organism, written in the Constitution again and again, is the equality of the States in all the attributes attaching to States as such.

I hardly see, with the convictions I have on this subject, how I can give a vote, the logic of which, as I understand it, affirms, in this instance, only that we may require that the elective franchise shall not be regulated, that the term of residence of a voter is not within the power of a State Legislature, but which to-morrow may affirm, in the case of another State, that in other particulars equally vital, if particulars equally vital can be found, we will withdraw perpetually from the State still other portions of its sovereignty.

And let me say here I am reminded of a remark made the other day by the honorable Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] a remark that the proposed condition, as it stands, would not prevent the State of Arkansas from lengthening the residence of those entitled to vote; and he read the provision that no citizen or class of citizens, now entitled to vote, shall ever be deprived of that right; and he said that persons living in Arkansas now under a provision that six months of residence should suffice would not be a "class" within this language, nor would they be citizens whose case would fall within it. I will not stop to argue that; but I differ entirely with the Senator. This bill provides in the first place that no citizen whatever entitled to vote when this constitution speaks, and that is all the time, shall be deprived of the right. I take it a constitution is not like a will which speaks at a certain moment, when the testator dies, and its meaning is fixed by that, but it talks all the time; it speaks continuously. How, then, can the Senator say that no citizen entitled to vote at any time while this constitution lasts shall ever be deprived of that right, and no class of citizens shall ever be deprived of it, and yet at the same time contend that the Legislature of Arkansas may, the day after she comes in, repeal the provision that six months' residence shall suffice, and say that hereafter a man must live in the State two years before he can vote? I assume then, for this purpose, that that very case would be clearly within the provision, and passing beyond the legal question, making it a mere consideration of practical safety and utility, I confess that it seems to me most objectionable to provide, even if we had the power, that no State, no matter what be her exigencies of advantage or necessity, shall be permitted to regulate by length of residence in the State or in the county or in the precinct, or by any other one of the numerous tests or elements which enter into the qualifications of voters, the rights of citizens, or classes of citizens as to their right to vote.

I see in a vote for this proposition a vote the logic of which affirms that it is optional with Congress to select the State and to select the subjects of State prerogative and sovereignty upon which conditions, fetters, and prohibitions should be imposed.

There is one other suggestion about this. Three views are presented as affirmative views upon this proposition. One is that Congress may require the people of an incoming State, represented by the Legislature or in organic convention, to agree to a given thing, and that it then becomes a compact. Another view is that Congress may, by its own act alone, obliterate or expunge a certain portion of a constitution, or change it as it pleases. And the third proposition is that Congress, without changing, may, by its own act alone, provide forever against such changes as the people may wish to make. It is enough to say of the original proposition before us that it does not even rest upon the theory embraced by the honorable Senator from Missouri. He, excepting that he makes the Legislature the representative of the people, adopts the idea that consent is to be given by the State, and that in virtue of that consent the arrangement is to be binding. The bill before us does not do that; but it trusts to the ipse dixit of Congress alone this future binding obligation.

I can dispose sufficiently of all my own views on this subject in very few remaining words. I have no doubt that Congress has the power in all instances of a State applying for admission to make objection to the constitution presented, and to refuse upon that constitution to admit the State, and then the people applying for admission at their peril must go back and reform their constitution, and adapt it to the requirements of Congress. I have no doubt of that power. I have no doubt of the power of Congress to say, as it said in the case of Nevada, we offer you an enabling act under which you may organize, but we give you notice in advance that it will be idle for you to knock at the door of the Union unless your constitution, in addition to being republican in form, in a general sense, contains this provision, and another provision, and a third or fourth provision, or as many as you choose. I have no doubt, as a question of power, that Congress may do that. But, sir, I have yet to hear the argument which convinces me that Congress has power to make a constitution for a State in any form, either pro tanto or in toto. I do not believe that Congress has the right to take up the constitution of Arkansas and say, first, we treat you as if you had never been in the Union—granting, for the sake of the argument, that Arkansas stands on all fours with Colorado, for example, in this respect—you have made a constitution under which we will not admit you; and, second, we say that we will make a constitution for you as to all parts which we deem objectionable, or, as in this case, you have made a constitution very well as far as it goes, but we will now say to you, for your benefit and for ours, that that constitution shall never be changed in all such respects as we choose to specify.

I do not believe we have the right to say that if experience shall demonstrate the fallacy or improvidence or misfortune of this constitution, in any respects which we choose to specify, or in all respects, (because it is a question of power; if you can do it as to one thing falling within the power of the State, you can do it as to all,) no matter how ill-devised you find these provisions, no matter how onerous they become, when the people of Arkansas reassemble in organic convention and present a new constitution, and all the people in the State of Arkansas vote to ratify it, that constitution shall be paralyzed and null in advance. I do not see why it is not a power just as high as that of making a constitution partial or total for the State. As a question of power I see no distinction. The whole force of the objection to it is that to the people of Arkansas, and to no other earthly tribunal, belongs the right, so long as they continue their government republican in character, to modify it, to change it, to rearrange it, to adapt it, as they please, to the wants which, from time to time, present themselves.

If you are going to invade and deny this power it seems to me you may just as well do it by introducing into their constitution new provisions, as by striking out the provisions which they contain, or by providing that the provisions with which they began shall stand immutable forever. It is a different exertion, a different application; but it is the same power all the time.

And, Mr. President, that I need not be misunderstood upon this matter, let me say that if a State should come as Missouri came, if a State should come as it will be found one of these States has come, with matter in its constitution repugnant to the Constitution of the United States, adequate action may, no doubt, be taken. It may be said that it is unnecessary to do it, but I can see no objection to giving notice in advance, as was done in the Missouri case, to providing in advance in any form that may be deemed appropriate that this portion of the State constitution, because repugnant to the higher authority of the Constitution of the United States, will not be recognized, and that the understanding must be on the threshold that no attempt is to be made to give vigor or effect to that part of the State constitution. I can see how that can be done, and for a reason palpable and distinguishable from the reasons which enter into the present consideration.

So, too, we may send such a constitution back altogether by refusing to accept it until it is reformed.

It may be said, as was said of the Missouri case, it is unnecessary to say anything about it; if they ever attempt to do it Congress and the courts and all other tribunals will put the seal of disapprobation upon it; it will be null, because the Constitution of the United States makes it so; and when you declare by act of Congress that it is so, you do not insure its condemnation when the time comes any more certainly than that would be insured without an act. That is a criticism in substance that such a congressional provision would be surplusage; but it cannot be criticised upon the grounds which I am arguing here.

So that, Mr. President, to leave this question, (begging pardon, as I do, of the Senate for the time which I have occupied,) I am constrained to think that the judicial history of the country affords no warrant for this, that the legislative history of the country affords no warrant for it except in the recent example of Nebraska, and the force and value of that precedent is greatly impaired in my estimation by the fact that it has been in no way approved or tested since, and that the debate at the end of which it occurred, along with the avowals of the grounds on which Senators allowed it to become law in form, leaves it upon a precarious footing; and turning from the past to the future, looking at this as a question of practical wisdom and utility, it seems to me that it is the inauguration of a practice which may be greatly perverted, which is likely to be of no benefit, but which is introducing a new element of disturbance and of danger into the Commonwealth.

Mr. YATES. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. CONKLING. Certainly.

Mr. YATES. I wish to ask the opinion of the Senator from New York on a point which I think is pertinent. The ordinance of 1787, styled the Jeffersonian ordinance, required slavery to be prohibited in all the States to be formed out of the Northwest Territory, and the five States formed out of that Territory came into the Union with constitutions, each of which declared that it was consistent with the ordinance of 1787. Thus each of those States came into the Union under the condition imposed by Congress that slavery, except as a punishment for crime, should never exist therein. Afterward petitions were sent to Congress, and especially a petition from the Territorial Legislature of Indiana, praying a suspension of this provision of the ordinance for ten years, so that slavery might be introduced in Indiana during that period; but all these applications were refused by Congress, and I think it is a part of the history of the country that we are indebted to that condition imposed by Congress in the ordinance of 1787 for those five free, flourishing, and prosperous States. But for it slavery would have as inevitably gone into Illinois as into Missouri. They have the same climate, the same kind of soil, and everything was as inviting to slavery in Illinois as in Missouri; but here was a condition imposed by Congress that the States formed out of the Northwest Territory should come into the Union with a prohibition of slavery. It seems to me that the same principle applies here.

While I am up, if the Senator from New York will allow me, I would refer to the Missouri compromise of 1820 as another instance of a condition imposed by Congress, under which all the territory north of the parallel of 36° 30' north latitude was to be forever free, and to that we are indebted for the free State of Kansas and the free State of Nebraska. What is the difference in principle between the condition thus imposed on the States of Illinois, Ohio, Kansas, and Nebraska, and which actually kept slavery out of those States, and the condition which is now proposed in this bill as to Arkansas? I should like to have the Senator's response on that point.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, if my honorable friend from Illinois and I were discussing this question before a jury, and I did not know him as well as I do, I should almost suspect him of that of which I acquit him now, namely, a disposition to get up a question which, although it has not much to do with the real point, appeals so far to the prejudices of the hearers as to be useful for that reason. I know the danger in this body, and everywhere else, of discussing questions relating to slavery in their abstract relations, because it is impossible to separate the moral qualities from the other qualities of the question; but let me see. The Senator refers to what is sometimes called the Jeffersonian ordinance—the ordinance drawn in 1784 by Nathan Dane, anterior to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. SUMNER. In 1784 by Jefferson; 1789 by Nathan Dane.

Several SENATORS. Seventeen hundred and eighty-seven.

Mr. SUMNER. Seventeen hundred and eighty-seven I meant.

Mr. CONKLING. When all the scholars and critics of the Senate agree upon the particular matter on which I should be set right, I will submit with great deference. In the mean time I repeat, that Nathan Dane drew this ordinance in 1784, I think, and Thomas Jefferson in 1787, and I shall acknowledge myself liable to correction whenever my honorable friends produce the evidence.

Mr. SUMNER. It is just the reverse; in 1787 Mr. Jefferson was in Europe representing the United States.

Mr. CONKLING. So be it. It is dangerous to differ with the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, but I think we can all agree upon one thing, and that is of how little it is to the purpose to which I was proceeding, whether Jefferson drew it in 1784, and Nathan Dane in 1787, or whether it was vice versa. So let me go on to say that it became conspicuous in 1787, and that the Constitution of the United States was not then in existence, that the Government was going on under the Articles of Confederation with the Congress of the Confederation. My recollection is further, that the terms of this ordinance were embraced in the deed of cession by which the State of Virginia ceded the lands northwest of the Ohio river.

Mr. MORTON. I think the Senator from New York is clearly mistaken in that. The deed of cession from Virginia to the Congress of the Confederation is silent upon these questions. I have examined it.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Indiana may be right, although I have the recollection of several Senators around me fortifying my own. My recollection was that this provision, in substance, was in the deed of cession; but I will not dogmatize about that. However, the point at which I am driving is this: the inception of that ordinance was anterior to the Constitution of the United States. It did not, therefore, arise under the Constitution of the United States. I think I might stop here in speaking of this illustration, because already the bearings and the elements of the question are so changed that I think my honorable friend from Illinois will agree with me that there is no accuracy of deduction or analogy to be derived from it. But, sir, more than that, the Senator knows as well as I do how frequently and how successfully even that instrument, standing behind the Constitution as it does, has been challenged and criticised. Surely he knows this, and therefore it seems to me that if he cites it as a precedent merely for the weight to which it is entitled as a precedent, it is an unfortunate illustration, because it comes incumbered and impaired with innumerable criticisms and innumerable denials. But it is enough for me to say that it did not arise under the Constitution of the United States, and that it did not present at all the question which is presented to the mind of my friend and to the mind of every other lawyer upon the bill now before us.

Mr. MORTON. Will the Senator from New York allow me at this time to correct a statement of the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CONKLING. Certainly.

Mr. MORTON. I remember well the history of those petitions in regard to suspending the ordinance of 1787 for ten years. They were sent up in 1806 and in 1807, and were reported against by John Randolph; but they were sent up while Indiana was a Territory and confessedly under the government of the Government of the United States.

Mr. CONKLING. Certainly; and in that same connection the Senator from Indiana might have added that, in point of fact, it is of disgraceful notoriety that slavery did exist wherever anybody chose to have slavery exist, despite this ordinance and in the Territory to which it applied. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. YATES] says he denies that, but he says it in a tone so mild and so low that I think he hardly means to deny it. I understand the historical fact to be undisputed, not that slavery as a general and universal thing existed; I do not mean that; but that instances occurred all the time of slaves being held in the territory northwest of the river Ohio, the ordinance to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If the Senator from New York will allow me, I will state that they held what they called French slaves, and bought and sold them in Illinois long after it became a State, and that they have what they called indentured servants under the territorial laws—a species of slavery in fact existing there for a long time.

Mr. SUMNER. In defiance of law.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That is my opinion, but still it was so in point of fact.

Mr. CONKLING. I beg pardon of the Senator from Massachusetts; but the statement he has just made is what logicians call a petitio principii. That is just the point upon which dispute would arise, and did arise, whether it was in defiance of law or not.

Mr. YATES. Will the Senator allow me to state that as a matter of fact, as my colleague will remember, there were not one thousand slaves at any time in Illinois.

Mr. TRUMBULL. A very small number.

Mr. YATES. A very small number; but slaves were taken to Missouri, and it became a slave State, while Illinois became a free State under the ordinance of 1787, but for which it would have been settled by slaveholders as Missouri was. Now, the question I desired to suggest was this: after Illinois or any other State formed out of the Northwest Territory came into the Union under the ordinance of 1787, would it have the right to change its constitution and become a slave State? That question was raised in the argument on the repeal of the Missouri compromise, namely, whether Congress could, by a fundamental condition, so determine the character of a State and control its legislation as to prevent a State from having slavery after its admission into the Union.

Mr. CONKLING. Let me ask the Senator did any of those States attempt to do it?

Mr. YATES. There were attempts in Illinois repeatedly to make it a slave State.

Mr. CONKLING. What I mean is, did the people of Illinois ever attempt it by establishing a slave constitution?

Mr. YATES. No; but it was the doctrine of one of the political parties that Illinois had the right to settle the question for herself notwithstanding the ordinance of 1787, and in defiance of the power of Congress. What I mean to say is that in those cases Congress imposed a prohibition or condition similar in point of principle to that which has been proposed in the House of Representatives and attached to this bill. I see no earthly objection to it, and I think the precedents are in favor of it, and I mention these two which I think applicable.

Mr. CONKLING. Let me say a word to the Senator, if he will allow me. In the first place, I think he will admit that his first precedent, in the light of all that we agree upon now as to the facts, is so badly damaged and encumbered that it does not amount to very much. In the next place, he will admit that neither Illinois nor any other State ever made the attempt by adopting a slave constitution to establish slavery, and nothing of the kind occurred unless he goes into political conventions and reads the resolutions of politicians. Suffice it to say they never erected slave constitutions in the five northwestern States, and therefore the question never arose in any tangible form. But let me bring him down to a time when it did arise, a time when the Wilmot proviso was offered in Congress and when the land rang with a similar discussion which revived the echoes of those which had gone before.

Does not the Senator remember that the most enthusiastic supporters of the Wilmot proviso put it upon the ground that there would be virtue and effect in it so long as the Territories to which it applied remained Territories, but that the sovereignty of a State would accrue, and the proviso would cease to operate when they became States; and did not they argue in Illinois and everywhere else that then, despite the Wilmot proviso, those States would have the same sovereignty that Illinois has, and could establish such a constitution as they pleased? Most certainly they did. That was the ground taken by the most radical men, if I may use that expression, who were the advocates of the Wilmot proviso. It was always conceded that that was the doctrine; and when Mr. Webster undertook to argue that the Almighty had placed his proviso, as I think he expressed it, upon our Territories, and had established an isothermal line north of which, for reasons of climate and of race, negroes could not live, and they had better let it be, he was met by the argument, among others to which I have referred, that this proviso ought to be applied to those Territories for abundant caution, and leave it to their discretion as States, when they became States, to the laws of climate and other things to regulate their eventual institutions. Is not that so, sir?

And was it not in the face of the concession commonly made, that the proviso would cease when the Territories became States, that the ground was taken that Congress ought not to admit any more slave States?

Now, let us go to the Missouri compromise for one moment—I shall be very brief in answering the questions which I am very glad to answer, propounded by the Senator as to the Missouri compromise. First of all what has become of the Missouri compromise in the legal tribunals of the country? I hear gentlemen latterly in this body, on all sides, disposed to concede that the Supreme Court is the supreme and final arbiter of all constitutional questions to bind all the coordinate branches of the Government. That doctrine seems to be greatly in fashion just now; in fashion to a degree which surprises me, I admit, but in the light of the prevailing doctrine as to the function and dominion of the Supreme Court upon these questions, I ask the honorable Senator from Illinois what becomes of the illustration furnished by the Missouri compromise?

The proviso in that resolution which we have been discussing has never been drawn in question, and it stands in fact, however it may in theory; but the Missouri compromise has been drawn in question not only in the Supreme Court, but there has been a grapple for the mastery on this floor over the Missouri compromise, and in that grapple that compromise fell, and great was the fall of it. I do not say that this result was right, far from it; I am not expressing my opinion about that now; I am speaking of the historical fact in the face of which the Senator asks me to yield to the Missouri compromise as a precedent—a precedent how? A precedent historically, legally, and judicially, when we know that, weighed in all three of these balances, it has been found wanting by those who at the time had the power, however much they abused it, to determine whether it was wanting or not. That is my answer in part; I could go more fully into the Missouri compromise, but suffice it to say that both these attempts at compacts have been of doubtful success, and that they are not in principle like the proposition before us. Their violation was wanton and wicked, and sad enough in the later case; but these are the facts, and history, we are told, repeats itself.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President—

Mr. CONNESS. Will my friend give way for a moment? I should like to call up the resolution to fix a day of adjournment, so that we may work accordingly.

Mr. WILSON. To fix the day of adjournment?

Mr. CONNESS. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILSON. I hope the Senator will not ask that of us. At the rate we are going on at the present time we shall not be able to adjourn on the fourth Monday of December. [Laughter.] Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. It was understood that the question was to be taken on this bill to-day, but it is evident now that we cannot do it.

The motion was agreed to.

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION REPORT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before the doors are closed the Chair will present the annual report of the operations of the Smithsonian Institution for the year 1867.

Mr. TRUMBULL submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That five thousand additional copies of the report of the Smithsonian Institution for the year 1867 be printed, three thousand for the use of the Senate, and two thousand for the Institution; and that said report be stereotyped: Provided, That the aggregate number of pages of said report shall not exceed four hundred and fifty, without illustrations except those furnished by the institution.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. CRAGIN. Before the doors are closed I desire to make a motion that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday, for the purpose of allowing the carpets to be taken up and matting put down. ["No!" "No!"] I merely submit the motion; the Senate can do as they please.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It requires unanimous consent to receive the motion. Will the Senate entertain it at this time? ["No!" "No!"] Objection is made, and the motion is not received.

The galleries were cleared and the doors closed; and after an hour and a half spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 29, 1868.

The House met at twelve m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOXTON.

Mr. MORGAN. Is it in order, Mr. Speaker, to rise to a question of privilege before the reading of the Journal?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

The Clerk began the reading of the Journal of yesterday; but before concluding,

Mr. DAWES asked that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with by unanimous consent.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I object.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the Journal.

Before concluding,

Mr. FARNSWORTH asked that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

No objection was made.

CHARLES W. WOOLLEY.

Mr. MORGAN. I rise to a question of privilege, and submit a preamble and resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The SPEAKER. The preamble and resolution will be read, after which the Chair will rule upon it.

The Clerk read the preamble and resolution, as follows:

Whereas it has been the practice in all parliamentary bodies, when the liberty of a citizen was involved by the investigation or report of a committee, to give each political party representation upon such committee; and whereas in no instance heretofore has an American citizen been deprived of his liberty by the report of a strictly partisan committee; Therefore, to vindicate the character of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States from such seeming partisan investigation:

Be it resolved, That the Speaker be instructed to add two members of the Opposition party of this House to the committee, to investigate the facts in the case of Charles W. Woolley.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MORGAN] that if no resolution of this kind had been previously introduced he would regard this as a question of privilege. But precisely the same resolution, so far as regards the number of the minority members of this House to be appointed on this committee, was introduced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BOYER.] That resolution was entertained by the Chair as a question of privilege, and the House laid it upon the table. That, however, does not preclude the gentleman from Ohio from asking unanimous consent to offer this resolution, or from presenting it when his State is called for resolutions, when he has a right to offer a resolution.

Mr. MORGAN. I will modify my resolution so as to provide for the appointment of three members of the Opposition upon this committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the resolution, as modified, is a privileged resolution, being different from the one laid upon the table.

Mr. BUTLER. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that a single objection cannot prevent the reception of a privileged resolution.

Mr. UPSON. I raise the question of the consideration of this resolution by the House at this time.

The SPEAKER. That question will be submitted to the House.

Mr. MORGAN. Is not the consideration of a privileged question always in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will have read the rule upon that subject, to be found upon page 71 of the Digest. That rule has been frequently read. The gentleman from Ohio will see that the rule applies to a question of privilege, as well as of other questions.

The Clerk read as follows:

"When any motion or proposition is made, the question 'Will the House now consider it?' shall not be put unless it is demanded by some member or is deemed necessary by the Speaker; and it is competent for a member to raise the question of consideration upon a report even though a question of privilege is involved in the report."

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The question of consideration is not debatable, it being a question relative to priority of business.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to make a single remark. I had the floor when the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. UPSON] rose. He was out of order, not I. While I was on the floor, he had no right to take it from me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is incorrect. Upon the question of consideration a member may, under the rule, take another member from the floor. The gentleman will remember that rule having been applied, some days ago, to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. ROBINSON.] The Chair then ruled, in accordance with the rulings of previous Speakers, which were at that time cited from the Journal, that the question of consideration must be raised instantly upon the introduction of the resolution; that it could not be raised at any subsequent time.

Mr. MORGAN. I can well understand why the majority object to a fair investigation.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House consider the resolution?

On the question there were—ayes 39, noes 46; no quorum voting.

Mr. BURR. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The question is not debatable.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I do not desire to debate it; I wish to make a suggestion to the gentleman who offers the resolution.

The SPEAKER. A suggestion is debate if it be objected to.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I understand that it may be in parliamentary phrase, but not necessarily so. I wish to say that I think there will be no objection on this side to the substance of the resolution; but I think its form ought to be modified.

Mr. UPSON. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, are the preamble and resolution divisible?

The SPEAKER. Not on the question of consideration. If the House should determine to consider it, then the question will be on the resolution; and the preamble and resolution can be divided.

Mr. BROOKS. Perhaps the House might be willing to consider the resolution but not the preamble.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MORGAN] has the right to modify his resolution before the question is taken on considering it.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Is it in order to move an amendment?

The SPEAKER. Not pending the question of consideration. The resolution is not yet before the House.

Mr. INGERSOLL. If it should come before the House would it be in order to move to amend the resolution?

The SPEAKER. It would be, unless the House should second the previous question.

Mr. MORGAN. I withdraw the preamble, so that the House may vote directly upon the consideration of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The preamble is withdrawn. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. UPSON] still insist upon the question of consideration?

Mr. UPSON. I do.

Mr. HARDING. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is not yet before the House. It cannot be laid on the table.

The question was taken on considering the resolution; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 53, nays 65, not voting 71; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Archer, Baker, Barnes, Beck, Boyer, Brooks, Burr, Cary, Dixon, Eldridge, Ferry, Getz, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Griswold, Grover, Haight, Higby, Hill, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Jones, Johnson, Jones, Kerr, Ketcham, Knott, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, Marshall, Marvin, McCormick, Morgan, Niblack, Nicholson, Orth, Phelps, Pike, Poland, Pomeroy, Robertson, Ross, Sitgreaves, Smith, Stewart, Stone, Lawrence S. Trimble, Van Trump, Elihu B. Washburne, Wood, Woodbridge, and Woodward—53.

NAYS—Messrs. Ames, Beaman, Beatty, Bingham, Blaine, Blair, Boutwell, Bromwell, Broomall, Butler, Churchill, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Covode, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Eggleston, Ela, Ferriss, Fields, Halsey, Harding, Hooper, Hopkins, Hunter, Judd, Julian, Kelley, Koonz, William Lawrence, Lincoln, Loughbridge, Mallory, Maynard, McCarthy, McClurg, Mercur, Miller, Moore, Moorhead, Morrell, Mullins, Myers, O'Neill, Paine, Perham, Plants, Polsley, Price, Shellabarger, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Taffe, Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Burt Van Horn, William B. Washburn, Welker, William Williams, John T. Wilson, and Windom—65.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Allison, Anderson, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Bailey, Baldwin, Banks, Barnum, Benjamin, Benton, Buckland, Cake, Chandler, Cook, Cornell, Cullom, Daves, Eckley, Eliot, Farnsworth, Finney, Fox, Garfield, Gravelly, Hawkins, Holman, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Kelsey, Kitchen, Loan, Logan, Lynch, McCullough, Morrissey, Mungen, Newcomb, Nunn, Peters, Pile, Pruyn, Randall, Raum, Robinson, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Selye, Shanks, Spalding, Thaddeus Stevens, Stokes, Taber, Taylor, John Trimble, Twichell, Van Aernam, Van Auken, Robert T. Van Horn, Van Wyck, Ward, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Henry D. Washburn, Thomas Williams, James F. Wilson, and Stephen F. Wilson—71.

So the House refused to consider the resolution.

Mr. BUTLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to consider the resolution; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BOYER. I rise to a question of privilege. I desire to submit the following resolution, which will, perhaps, better meet the wishes of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That three members of the House who voted against the impeachment of the President be added by appointment of the Speaker to the committee authorized to investigate the alleged corrupt means employed to influence the determination by the Senate upon the impeachment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair rules this is not a question of privilege. It is substantially the same as the resolution which the House has just refused to consider.

Mr. BOYER. The other resolution did not refer generally to the committee, but merely to the case of Charles W. Woolley.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is substantially the same, an addition to the same committee of three members from the Opposition side of the House.

BRIDGE AT ST. LOUIS.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, at the request of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. PILE,] to move that the Committee on Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of House bill No. 631, amendatory of an act approved July 20, 1866, entitled "An act to authorize the construction of certain bridges, and to establish them as post roads," it having been referred to that committee by mistake, and that it be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

CARRIAGE OF PASSENGERS IN STEAMSHIPS.

Mr. O'NEILL. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Commerce a bill (H. R. No. 1100) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the carriage of passengers in steamships and other vessels, and for other purposes," to move that it be ordered to be printed and made the special order after the bill for the protection of American commerce. It is a most important matter.

Mr. SCHENCK. If that bill be set down for a day in June as a special order, when that day arrives will it take precedence of other pending special orders?

The SPEAKER. Special orders by unanimous consent have priority over all other special orders, and when the day arrives for their consideration they will have priority.

Mr. SCHENCK. Will this have priority over the tax bill?

The SPEAKER. It will on that day.

Mr. SCHENCK. Then I object.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. This will be a special order in the House, and the tax bill is the special order in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. O'NEILL. This is a most important bill. It is to protect emigrants who now come here under circumstances that make humanity shudder.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Cannot a majority vote postpone the consideration of the bill if on that day the tax bill is pending?

The SPEAKER. Whenever any special order is reached in the House a majority can postpone it.

Mr. SCHENCK. Under those circumstances I withdraw my objection.

The bill was accordingly received, ordered to be printed, and made a special order for the time indicated.

RECUSANT WITNESSES.

Mr. SCHENCK. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER stated that the regular order of business was on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House adopted the following preamble and resolution, on which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BINGHAM] was entitled to the floor:

Whereas Charles W. Woolley has been brought before the committee and the following questions proposed to him by the committee, to wit:

"Question. The committee desire to know whether on the 6th of May you telegraphed over the signature of 'Hooker' to Sheridan Shook, 'My business is adjusted. Place ten to my credit with Gilliss, Harney & Co., No. 24 Broad street?'"

"Question. Did you also telegraph to Sheridan Shook, over the signature of 'Hooker,' on the 12th of May, 'The five should be had. It may be absolutely necessary?'"

which questions Woolley declined to answer, in the words following, to wit:

"This is a private and confidential communication, passing between counsel and client. It has reference to business in that relation and to nothing else, and has no reference whatever to the trial of the President on the articles of impeachment preferred against him, nor to the conduct or result of the trial, nor the vote of any persons on the trial, nor any allusion thereto whatever. That is my answer."

and whereas Sheridan Shook, the party to whom said supposed confidential and privileged communications are alleged to have been sent, has been examined by your committee, and testified as follows in regard to the money mentioned in said telegram:

"By Mr. BUTLER:

"Question. Do you know Charles W. Woolley?

"Answer. I do.

"Question. How long have you known him?

"Answer. I do not think I have known him over a year."

"Question. Have you had business relations with him?

"Answer. Very little, if any. I do not know that I ever had any transaction with him."

"Question. Did he deposit in your hands last Sunday night any sum of money?

"Answer. No, sir."

"Question. Or during the day Sunday?

"Answer. No, sir."

"Question. Has he ever deposited any sum of money in your hands?

"Answer. I may have borrowed fifty or a hundred dollars of him at a time; but he has placed no sum of money in my hands."

"Question. Have you seen him lately?

"Answer. I have not seen him since the Sunday of which you speak."

and whereas upon the same subject the said Woolley has testified before your committee as follows: [From the testimony of C. W. Woolley, May 19, 1868.]

"By Mr. BUTLER:

"Question. Have you deposited any money, and where, since that time, i. e., May 8?

"Answer. Not in any bank."

"Question. Have you with any individual?

"Answer. No, sir."

"Question. Then why do you say 'not in any bank'?

"Answer. Because it is not to my credit in any bank."

"By Mr. WILSON:

"Question. What do you mean by that answer?

"Answer. I mean to say that I have not put it in a bank. I gave it to an individual who was owing me in New York and told him to keep that money until I arrived there."

"By Mr. BUTLER:

"Question. Who was that individual?

"Answer. Sheridan Shook."

"Question. How much money did you give Sheridan Shook?

"Answer. I think between sixteen and seventeen thousand dollars, as near as I can get it."

"Question. In what?

"Answer. Greenbacks, I think."

"Question. What denomination of greenbacks?

"Answer. Big bills; I cannot tell you. There may have been some $500 bills. I think in one package I gave him some small bills."

"Question. When did you give this to Sheridan Shook?

"Answer. Sunday."

"Question. At what time?

"Answer. In the afternoon; I cannot tell the hour."

"Question. Before or after you were summoned here?

"Answer. Before, I think."

Question. For what purpose did you give it to Sheridan Shook?

Answer. For safe keeping for me as an individual. Let me correct myself there. I gave that money to Shook to take over to New York to keep for me till a day or two, when I intended to go to New York. Then Dunleavy came and asked me to go West and I thought I had better go. I made up my mind to go there instead of going to New York, and I let him carry it along.

Question. Well, you gave it to him finally?

Answer. He kept it from the time I gave it to him.

Question. Has he got it now?

Answer. I guess so, unless he spent it.

Question. Did you take any memorandum for it?

Answer. No, sir; I did not want it.

Question. Supposing he should have been killed?

Answer. I would have taken my chance.

Question. Did you go on with Sheridan Shook in the same train?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Question. What sort of a package was the money in?

Answer. No package at all.

Question. Did you count it?

Answer. I do not recollect exactly. I kept what I thought I would want myself, and gave him the parcel. If I were to state closely it was about sixteen thousand one hundred dollars. It was not seventeen thousand dollars, I am satisfied.

Question. Where did you get that money that you sent by Sheridan Shook?

Answer. That is a part of the money that came out of the bank.

and whereas your committee believe the reasons given by the witness in declining to answer are wholly untrue and evasive, and the refusal to answer is a deliberate contempt of the authority of the House, and done for the purpose of concealing the fact and embarrassing public justice: Therefore,

Resolved, That said Woolley, for his repeated contempt of the authority of the House, be kept until otherwise ordered by the House in close confinement in the guard-room of the Capitol police, by the Sergeant-at-Arms, until said Woolley shall fully answer the questions above recited, and all questions put to him by said committee in relation to the subject of the investigations with which the committee is charged, and that meanwhile no persons shall communicate with said Woolley, in writing or verbally, except upon the order of the Speaker.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask my colleague to yield to me for a few moments.

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. SCHENCK. I desire to say that last evening when we were endeavoring to obtain an acting majority in this House for the practical purposes of legislation, I felt it to be my duty to name gentlemen of both parties who, having been present at the commencement of the call, afterward left the Hall. I have since ascertained in reference to one of the gentlemen whom I named, the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE,] and I am satisfied that he was called away by an imperative engagement which any gentleman in the House would have felt was absolutely necessary for him to fulfill, and that immediately upon his hearing that the House was involved in a difficulty in getting an acting majority here he returned to the Hall and arrived about the time the House adjourned. And the same information is also communicated to me in reference to the other gentleman from Maine, [Mr. PIKE,] that he was here ready to make his appearance without having been sent for, having come when he received his notice. I do not withdraw any criticism made upon the general habit of members absenting themselves from the Hall, and leaving the House to struggle on in the way we were doing under the call last evening after having answered to their names in the first place; but I thought it due to the two gentlemen I named, to state that I have this information in regard to their cases, inasmuch as it was I who called the attention of the House to the fact that they had conducted themselves as they did.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to delay the House but for a very few minutes in the opening of this discussion, and chiefly for the reason that I desire that gentlemen who stand opposed to this resolution shall be permitted, as far as possible, under the limitation of the rules, to be heard. I desire to say further that it is a matter of great regret with me—as I doubt not it is with all the members of the House—that the witness has by his conduct imposed upon the House the necessity of exercising its undoubted power to commit him to prison until he answers the questions that are put to him in pursuance of the order of the House. I desire to say further that the witness has concluded all parties in this House and out of the House as to the pertinence of the questions that have been put to him and which he has refused to answer.

In that connection I say further, briefly, that, first, independent of the testimony of the witness, by the testimony of Thurlow Weed, and, I may add, the testimony of others not yet published, but by the testimony of Mr. Weed, published to the House, this witness, on the 4th or 5th day of May, 1868, pending this impeachment, was present in the city of New York, along with Sheridan Shook and another, at the room of Mr. Weed, proposing to raise money for the express and avowed purpose of purchasing the votes of Senators in the matter of impeachment and acquitting the President. That is the fact in this case; a fact upon the record; a fact not yet challenged by anybody; and, I undertake to say, a fact never to be challenged hereafter by any witness.

There is one further fact, Mr. Speaker, to show the importance and necessity of this action of the House. The witness having set out voluntarily on the business of raising money for the avowed purpose of purchasing the votes of Senators in the matter of the impeachment of the President, and to work his acquittal, proceeded to raise a large sum of money. The fact appears by his own testimony and the other testimony that, after that date, in the city of Washington, he raised $20,000 in money, and when it became necessary to compel the witness to tell where he got the money and what he did with it, and he was asked what he did with the $20,000, his answer has gone to the country, under his own oath, that he sent $16,000 to Cincinnati to one Straub, or some such person. He was then asked what he did with the remaining $4,000, and his answer is that he cannot tell; that he expended some four or five hundred dollars in feasting certain gentlemen who were interested in the matter of impeachment. Being asked what he did with the residue of the $4,000, he never answered, but on being asked further, "How did you send the $16,000 to Straub?" he said, "By check." "Whose check?" "My check on the Commercial Bank of Cincinnati." "Was it paid?" "Doubtless it was." "Out of what fund?" "Out of my own money deposited in the bank, where I kept twenty or twenty-five thousand dollars." "Having sent your check on the Cincinnati bank for $16,000, what did you do with the $16,000 which you drew here?" "Oh, I sent it to New York; gave it to Sheridan Shook, who carried it to New York. I gave it to him for safe keeping; I gave him between sixteen and seventeen thousand dollars." Sheridan Shook was called. His evidence is set out before the House in this report, and he swears that he gave him nothing, not one cent.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. BINGHAM. No, sir; the gentleman will please not interrupt me.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I wish the gentleman would allow me to ask him as to a matter of fact.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will state the matter of fact before I am done with it. Sheridan Shook comes and answers that Woolley did not deliver to him one cent—not one cent. What does the witness do about it when he finds himself in this strait? He comes before the committee and says that he asks that his testimony shall be stricken out. Why so? Because the chairman of the committee happened to be sick and was, therefore, not present when the oath was administered, claiming that he was not bound to testify truthfully upon the oath being administered by any other member of the committee. The committee had appointed a subcommittee, and the act which misled the witness and his counsel, as gentlemen will see, never did apply to special committees. The power of a special committee to administer oaths is a power conferred not by statute, but by the act of the House by its resolution. Any member of the committee had a right to administer the oath, and any member of the subcommittee had a right to administer the oath. But he comes before the committee and asks that his testimony shall be stricken out. He wants to get rid of it. It is not done. He is called before the committee to answer further. We asked him, Shook having sworn that he gave no money to him, what he did with the money. He refuses to answer. He is brought before the House and committed for contempt. After that commitment he is taken back to the committee, and when before the committee he is asked these questions:

Question. The committee desire to know whether, on the 6th of May, you telegraphed over the signature of 'Hooker' to Sheridan Shook. 'My business is adjusted. Place ten to my credit with Gilliss, Harney & Co., No. 24 Broad street?'

Question. Did you also telegraph to Sheridan Shook, over the signature of 'Hooker,' on the 12th of May, 'The five should be had. It may be absolutely necessary?'

Which questions Woolley declined to answer in the words following, to wit:

"This is a private and confidential communication, passing between counsel and client."

He had already disclosed—informally, perhaps, but nevertheless had disclosed—to the committee that he himself is a lawyer. Who is the client? Nobody but Shook, unless the witness was client to himself. Nobody else appears in the telegrams; nobody else appears in his testimony, or in anybody else's testimony, in this connection. Who is the client? Either himself the client to himself or Shook. What does Shook swear? It is spread out upon this record that there were no relations between them; no business transactions between them; no relations of counsel and client between them. He may have borrowed fifty or a hundred dollars from him, but there were no business relations between them. And yet this man dares, with the testimony of his own confederate staring him in the face, to come before the committee and attempt to put himself under the privilege of counsel and client. It is trifling with his oath, it is trifling with the rights of a great people, it is trifling with the power vested in this House to ferret out and investigate this attempt—it is not necessary to say that any Senator was bribed—this attempt to bribe a Senator to defeat the administration of justice. The House had a right to make investigation. I do not propose further to argue the question; there is the fact sworn to and unchallenged. He set out on the 4th day of May with the avowed purpose of doing that very thing; he follows that up by raising the money; he follows that up by refusing to tell what he did with the money; and he follows that up by sending a telegram from this city four hours before the vote was taken on the 16th day of May, 1868, declaring that the Methodist Church North was defeated, and that impeachment was dead and sent to hell. How did he know anything about it four hours in advance? We want to know what he did with the money.

Mr. BECK. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BINGHAM. No, sir; please excuse me. His answer now is that this is privileged; that it is in the relation between counsel and client. But, nevertheless, he sends a dispatch to Sheridan Shook, signing his name 'Hooker,' which was doubtless a very honest transaction, in which he says: "My business is done." This was on the 6th of May, two days after he proposed to raise money for the purchase of Senators. "My business is adjusted. Place ten to my credit with Gilliss, Harney & Co." Perhaps the record will disclose that $10,000 were placed to his credit there. What was the business that was adjusted? He was with Sheridan Shook when he proposed to raise money to purchase Senators. Sheridan Shook heard the suggestion or proposition and made no objection, although Mr. Weed did object to it. Then the witness was asked this question:

"Did you also telegraph to Sheridan Shook, over the signature of 'Hooker,' on the 12th of May, 'The five should be had. It may be absolutely necessary?'"

"Absolutely necessary" for what? If it is an honest transaction, it cannot do him any hurt to tell us what the word "five" or the word "ten" means, and what the five was necessary for. We have already shown him engaged in the business of raising money for the purpose of bribing Senators in order to secure the acquittal of an accused President upon the impeachment presented by this House. Now, it has been shown that he raised the money. It has been shown that he stated falsely when he said he sent $16,000 of this money to Cincinnati; that he stated falsely when he also said that he had sent $16,000 by Sheridan Shook to New York. We again asked him what he did with the money. He replied that that was a privileged transaction between counsel and client. When we came to ask the client about it, Sheridan Shook repudiated any such relation between them. Therefore, we bring the matter before the House and ask that this Woolley be kept in close confinement, and allowed only such intercourse with others as the Speaker may from time to time deem to be justifiable under the rules and practices of parliamentary bodies, to be so kept until he shall answer what he did with this money, after his declaration that he was raising money for the purpose of purchasing the votes of Senators.

What do his counsel say? That this proceeding is unconstitutional. Gentlemen profess to have great reverence for the Supreme Court of the United States. Sir, I have as much reverence as they have for the decisions of the Supreme Court when they act in the line of their jurisdiction. But I say here that the Supreme Court never had the power to review the action of this House, or of the other House, upon any question of this kind. Now, as I stated in the beginning of this matter the other day, for more than forty years past the question involving these points has been solemnly adjudicated by a decision of the Supreme Court without a dissenting opinion, and has never since been challenged.

Forty-seven years ago, in the case of Anderson vs. Dunn, (6 Wheaton,) the case of an arrest and imprisonment by order of this House, the Sergeant-at-Arms was sued for trespass and false imprisonment. The case went up to the Supreme Court of the United States, and that court solemnly decided that the order of the House of Representatives stood within the authority of the Constitution of the United States, and was conclusive upon all parties. Their decision was that the order of the House, pleaded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, was a bar to any suit for trespass and false imprisonment; not simply a bar in law, but an absolute justification in or out of court. I refer to that decision and stand upon it; and if gentlemen can show that anything has been ruled since by the Supreme Court of the United States which in any manner reverses that decision, I will be greatly obliged to them for the reference. I read from the opinion in that case as follows:

"The idea is utopian that government can exist without leaving the exercise of discretion somewhere. Public security against the abuse of such discretion must rest on responsibility and stated appeals to public approbation. Where all power is derived from the people, and public functionaries at short intervals deposit it at the feet of the people, to be resumed again only at their will, individual fears may be alarmed by the monsters of imagination, but individual liberty can be in little danger."

The court further say:

"But if there is one maxim which necessarily rides over all others in the practical application of government, it is that the public functionaries must be left at liberty to exercise the powers which the people have intrusted to them. The interests and dignity of those who created them require the exertion of the powers indispensable to the attainment of the ends of their creation. Nor is a casual conflict with the rights of particular individuals any reason to be urged against the exercise of such powers. The wretch beneath the gallows may repine at the fate which awaits him, and yet it is no less certain that the laws under which he suffers were made for his security. The unreasonable murmurs of individuals against the restraints of society have a direct tendency to produce that worst of all despotisms which makes every individual the tyrant over his neighbor's rights."

"That the safety of the people is the supreme law not only compels with, but is indispensable to, the exercise of those powers in their public functionaries without which that safety cannot be guarded."

MEMBERS ABSENT WITHOUT LEAVE.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BINGHAM] will suspend his remarks. The hour of one o'clock having arrived, the Sergeant-at-Arms will now execute the order of the House made at its session last evening.

The Sergeant-at-Arms submitted a report which was read, as follows:

Pursuant to the order of the House, I caused the following named members to be brought before its bar for being absent without leave: JOHN D. BALDWIN, READER, W. CLARKE, HENRY L. DAWES, JAMES M. MARVIN, JAMES K. MOORHEAD, DAVID A. NUNN, THOMAS A. PLANTS, LUKE P. POLAND, SAMUEL J. RANDALL, GLENNI W. SCOTFIELD, CHARLES SITGREAVES, WORTHINGTON C. SMITH, P. VAN TRUMP, WILLIAM B. WASHBURN, F. E. WOODBRIDGE, all of whom by vote of the House were allowed to take their seats.

I also had the following members before the bar of the House, as per order, when further action under the call was dispensed with: GEORGE S. BOUTWELL, H. P. H. BROWELL, JAMES A. GARFIELD, THOMAS L. JONES, A. H. LAFIN, HORACE MAYNARD, THEODORE M. POMEROY, E. B. WASHBURN, WILLIAM WINDOM, ASA P. GROVER, S. S. MARSHALL.

The following named members are absent from the city: GEORGE M. ADAMS, JAMES M. ASHLEY, N. P. BANKS, THOMAS CORNELL, DARWIN A. FINNEY, JOHN FOX, JOHN A. GRISWOLD, R. D. HUBBARD, C. T. HULBURD, JAMES M. HUMPHREY, B. M. KITCHEN, HIRAM McCULLOUGH, JOHN MORRISSEY, WILLIAM MUNGEN, JOHN A. PETERS, WILLIAM E. ROBINSON, JOHN P. C. SHANKS, RUFUS P. SPALDING, GINERY TWICHELL, H. VAN AEREN, C. H. VAN WYCK, C. C. WASHBURN, H. D. WASHBURN, S. E. WILSON, JAMES F. WILSON, GEORGE W. WOODWARD, H. L. CAKE.

Mr. PRICE. If this is the proper time to make the statement, I wish to say that I believe my colleague, [Mr. WILSON, of Iowa,] who is reported as absent without leave, has leave of absence.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he has not. He spoke to the Chair about asking leave, but finally concluded not to do so.

Mr. BUTLER. As one who was on the floor during the whole session of the House last evening, I desire to move that all the gentlemen reported as absentees be excused; and I will state the reason. There was a quorum in the House when those gentlemen left, and there was never a time during the evening when the House was without a quorum. If that quorum had acted, there would have been no need of a call of the House. It was an anomalous occasion, and not, I believe, subject to any precedent. Upon my motion I call the previous question.

Mr. HARDING. I sincerely hope the motion will not prevail.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof, the motion of Mr. BUTLER was agreed to.

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the annual report of the Smithsonian Institution; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GARFIELD. I submit a motion for the printing of extra copies.

The SPEAKER. The motion will be referred under the law to the Committee on Printing.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

MESSRS. MARVIN, WOODBRIDGE, BROOMALL, and CHANLER obtained indefinite leave of absence.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. HAMLIN, one of its Clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution (H. R. No. 279) in relation to the breakwater at Portland, Maine.

RECUSANT WITNESS.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I desire to detain the House only a moment longer. I wish to say that the court, in the decision I have cited, expressly declares that the power of the House to commit for contempt extends to imprisonment until at least the adjournment of the body. I desire to read one passage further from the decision in answer to the arguments which are made against the exercise of this power. In commenting upon such arguments the court say:

"The argument obviously leads to the total annihilation of the power of the House of Representatives to guard itself from contempts, and leaves it exposed to every indignity and interruption that rudeness, caprice, or even conspiracy may meditate against it. This result is fraught with too much absurdity not to bring into doubt the soundness of any argument from which it is derived. That a deliberative assembly, clothed with the majesty of the people and charged with the care of all that is dear to them; composed of the most distinguished citizens, selected and drawn together from every quarter of a great nation, whose deliberations are required by public opinion to be conducted under the eye of the public, and whose decisions must be clothed with all that sanctity which unlimited confidence in their wisdom and purity can inspire; that such an assembly should not possess the power to suppress rudeness or repel insult is a supposition too wild to be suggested."

The court therefore hold the defense was a bar to the justification of the alleged false imprisonment.

Mr. BECK rose.

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield the floor now for ten minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, in the very few moments allotted to me it is not possible for me to enter into any discussion of the law further than to say the records of the House show in reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio, that Mr. Woolley, upon the floor of this House, volunteered to appear here and to answer any and every question the House itself might judge to be a proper question to be answered by him. His objection is to the committee of seven who have to maintain the lost cause of impeachment, and are becoming but enraged partisans; and he asked to have an appeal from that ex parte committee, in which he has not a single friend and where his counsel cannot appear. He asked for an appeal from such a secret, prejudiced, inquisitorial tribunal to this House, but that committee of seven refused an appeal to this higher, fuller court. In lieu thereof they proposed to create, and to incarcerate him in, a dungeon in this Capitol.

Sir, there are two resolutions before this House, one being involved in the other, first to create a dungeon and to make it a perpetual prison in the basement, in the underground part of the Capitol, designated, as convict places usually are, not as carpeted committee-rooms, but as "A and B" where, hereafter all offenders of the majesty of the gentlemen from Ohio and Massachusetts are to be cast.

Now, it is falsely alleged, in an order to give dignity to this prison, that these rooms A and B are opposite the rooms of the Court of Claims. It is not true.

Mr. BUTLER. Solicitor of the Court of Claims.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, this is not true as stated in the resolution. The room of the solicitor of the Court of Claims is a very large room in the basement in the western part of this Capitol on the same floor, to be sure, with A and B, with two windows, one looking out upon the beautiful and free grounds on the west and the other upon the south, with a dark dungeon-like wall intervening between the room intended for the prison, in which is only one window to illuminate the prisoner. The only light a man can have is by looking out upon another wing of the Capitol, under which the fires of a blazing furnace to move the engine that ventilates this Capitol, are ever glaring upon him. Room B is a nasty dungeon, with a grate in the door in the hall in front, such as is usual in dungeons intended for the use of prisoners incarcerated within for high crimes, where no air, no ventilation, no open light, no view, save upon the inner and reeking walls of an ill-kept basement of the Capitol. This is intended for his sleeping-room, and it would be fatal to sleep long there this hot weather. It is now wet and moldy from dampness, and is used as a storage house for the lumber of the Capitol. To put him there is to doom him to a living death, with rats only for companions, or cockroaches that are eating up the rotting public documents thereabout.

But what is worse than all this, the managers propose to establish a perpetual prison in this Capitol, intended for any victim that may be designated. This Capitol of a free country is to be turned into a bastille for the future incarceration of all who may or not differ with these seven so-called managers upon what are proper and legal subjects for their inquisition. I understand now why the gentleman from Illinois, early in the session, introduced, in an appropriation bill, a section displacing the Capitol police and substituting therefor soldiers under General Grant to keep guard over the House, but which he afterward withdrew when compelled by an opinion here, not then ready for the bayonet, but now ready for a prison. Hereafter, if under a military régime, we shall come to have soldiers as a guard.

The honorable managers are gratifying a double sentiment—one beyond the creating of a congressional dungeon under the Capitol, over the dome of which, as if in mockery, a bronze statue of Liberty presides; and that sentiment beyond is an insult to a clever young lady to whose genius as an artist the Lincoln party in this House, when it existed, voted some thousands of dollars to mold a plaster cast for a statue of Abraham Lincoln. This young lady, whom I saw for the first time yesterday afternoon, when curiosity to see the intended congressional dungeon prompted me to visit room "A," which, small as it is and bad as it is, she had converted into a studio, made useful by its very dampness for work a few hours a day on a plaster cast, is now to be insulted in that place and turned out of it by the managers of the House—insulted by turning in upon her a male prisoner and turned out with her models and casts and studies. There is no respect even on the part of these managers for their once great idol, for they know or ought to know that a plaster cast in the artistic condition this cast is now in, cannot be moved without its probable destruction; and they are ready to forget and forego all their admiration of Lincoln to punish this young lady because it has been only reported abroad that whatever might be the influence of her talents or personal graces she had exerted them upon one of the Senators from Kansas, to number him with the immortal seven conscript fathers now made as illustrious as the best in the best days of Rome.

It was, I learn—for I know nothing beyond common fame—the fortune or misfortune of the lady to have a mother who took an old Kansas acquaintance, a Senator, to board with her. And because of her connection with that household she is to be held responsible for his vote on impeachment, and is to be punished therefor now by being hunted out of the Capitol, and hereafter by refusing to appropriate the money the Thirty-Ninth Congress contracted to pay for her Lincoln statue. I have not time or temper to dwell upon such petty vengeance wreaked thus upon an innocent girl. I could not dwell upon it if I would, with the decorum imposed upon us by parliamentary law.

All I have to add upon this point is, that though this reception-room "A" may do for a store-room for plaster-work, &c., it is altogether unfit for human habitation, night or day, in hot weather; and to doom this victim of these managers to remain there is to doom him to a living death. He has pledged himself to answer every question this House may ask him, holding the House responsible for forcing him to disclose his private affairs, a responsibility which he feels the seven managers alone cannot excuse him for violating.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk to be read, in reply to the statement of the gentleman from Ohio, the statement of Mr. Woolley, and of his counsel, Mr. Merrick, which is vouched for by Mr. Merrick, so far as he could know what was done in the committee-room, through Mr. Woolley, for no counsel was admitted in the star chamber of that inquisitorial body.

The Clerk read as follows:

"On Tuesday, the 19th of May, Mr. Woolley attended, in obedience to a summons, Mr. BUTLER was the only manager in the room, and assumed to administer an oath and examine the witness. He was rude, abusive, and insulting, and when, in the course of the examination, the witness declined to answer some questions put to him, Mr. BUTLER ordered him in custody of the Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms, giving him directions not to permit the witness to speak to any one. Mr. BUTLER then called in some of the other managers, when the witness was again brought before the managers. Mr. BUTLER continued the examination in the same abusive and insulting manner."

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to interrupt the communication. Is it in accordance with the dignity of the House to allow a prisoner in contempt of the House to—

Mr. BROOKS. I hope this will not come out of my time.

The SPEAKER. A point of order does not come out of the time of a gentleman who has the floor. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Massachusetts is raising a point of order.

Mr. BUTLER. I am raising a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUTLER. My point is, if it is in order in this House, consistent with the dignity of this body, to allow a witness who is in contempt of the House in refusing to meet its process and in refusal to answer questions, and who, upon the record reported to the House, has committed willful and deliberate perjury, whichever way his statement is to be taken, to send a communication through a member of the House, certainly words characterising a member of the committee and a member of the House, in the terms which have just been read?

Mr. BROOKS. What terms? This is a part of my speech—I submit it as my own speech.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman says he makes it a part of his speech. The language is:

"BUTLER was the only manager in the room, and he assumed to administer the oath and examine the witness. He was abusive and insulting."

That language is not parliamentary by any member on the floor addressing the House, and certainly not by a witness who refuses to answer when ordered by the House to do so.

Mr. BUTLER. A single word more.

The SPEAKER. Until the point of order is settled no further debate is in order, except by consent of the gentleman who has the floor.

Mr. BUTLER. I raise the question whether he can proceed at all?

Several MEMBERS. Of course not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has decided that question repeatedly heretofore. When the Speaker decides that a member of the House is out of order the power of the Chair ceases. If any member then objects, he cannot proceed except by leave of the House. The House will determine whether the gentleman from New York shall proceed. It is for the House to decide that, and not the Speaker. The Chair decides the words are not in order.

Mr. BUTLER. I do object; and state, as a reason for my objection, that every member of the committee will bear me out in saying—

Mr. BOYER. I object.

Mr. BUTLER. That the witness thanked us for the courtesy with which he had been treated.

The SPEAKER. If any member objects, the member cannot proceed except by leave of the House.

Mr. BROOKS. I qualify the words.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman proposes to qualify the words. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts withdraw the objection?

Mr. BUTLER. I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the reading.

The Clerk read as follows:

"BUTLER then continued the examination in the same abusive and insulting manner."

A MEMBER. Those are the words that the Chair ruled out.

Mr. BUTLER. I propose now to insist upon the objection. It is an abusive, virulent, vituperative communication, which any gentleman should be ashamed of.

Mr. BROOKS. I cannot be taught gentility by the member from Massachusetts.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Did not the Clerk commence to read the same words which the gentleman qualified?

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. BUTLER. I am submitting my objection. The gentleman cannot change that; that is Woolley's story. Let him withdraw the whole if he wants to go on.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has adopted it as a part of his speech, and as such he has a right to qualify it.

Mr. BUTLER. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will put the question whether he shall be allowed to proceed.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. The gentleman from New York withdrew the words, and the Clerk commenced to read the same words over.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, no.

Mr. BARNES. Do the words "abusive and insulting" occur twice in the communication?

Mr. FIFE. If the gentleman will withdraw the entire letter there will be no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the Clerk read the words, "in a rude and abusive manner." Four or five lines further down the Clerk read, "BUTLER then continued the examination in the same abusive and insulting manner."

Mr. BROOKS. I intended to omit the whole of that language.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House consent to the gentleman proceeding in order?

Mr. UPSON. Does that involve the withdrawal of the letter?

Mr. BROOKS. I withdraw the offensive words, and when I made the first withdrawal I intended to withdraw them throughout the paper, and if I had been reading the paper myself I should have modified them.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman states that he intended to withdraw all the words about "abusive and insulting."

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman had read the communication in advance, and he deliberately put it before the House. He adopted it. The relations between him and me are well known, and should have taught him to treat me with the same courtesy that I treated him with the other day. So I insist upon the objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the relations between members do not affect questions of order. It is presumed by the parliamentary law that the relations between all the members are courteous, and the language used must be language proper in a parliamentary body. The gentleman from New York has made his explanation to the House, and the question is, Will the House consent that the gentleman shall proceed in order?

Mr. HIGBY. I wish to ask a question.

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable.

Mr. HIGBY. I do not wish to debate, but I do not understand the question. I wish to ask if the member from New York has adopted that paper as a part of his speech?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has made his remarks in the presence of the House, and every gentleman has heard them.

Mr. BROOKS. I intended, when the Chair decided the words "abusive and insulting language" to be out of order, to withdraw them and change them to "improper;" and I meant in that withdrawal in good faith to withdraw similar expressions in various parts of the paper, and I should not have read them if I had been reading the paper myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman states that he intended to withdraw the offensive language and substitute for it the word "improper."

Mr. BROMWELL. I would inquire—

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman making an inquiry?

Mr. ARNELL. I object.

Mr. BROMWELL. I only wished to know if the gentleman claimed—

The SPEAKER. Further debate is objected to.

The question was put on allowing Mr. Brooks to proceed in order; and there were—yeas 44, noes 65.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BLAINE. The question is not understood here.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has endeavored to make it plain.

Mr. BLAINE. Is it that the gentleman shall proceed in order without having the communication read? For one, I am perfectly willing that the gentleman shall have his time, but I am not willing that the communication shall be read.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is just the question.

Mr. BROOKS. That is all I ask—that you shall give me my time.

Mr. BLAINE. If the paper is withdrawn, the gentleman can have unanimous consent to go on.

Mr. BROOKS. I withdraw it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BINGHAM. I understand that the paper is withdrawn, and there is no question before the House.

The SPEAKER. The objection of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] is not withdrawn. The gentleman from New York withdraws the paper. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts withdraw his objection to the gentleman proceeding?

Mr. BUTLER. Do I understand the gentleman to withdraw the paper?

The SPEAKER. He so stated to the Chair.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I am willing he shall go on.

Mr. BROOKS. Suppose I go on and read the paper, and leave out all the objectionable words?

Mr. BUTLER. Then I do not withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] must state to the Chair whether he does or does not withdraw his objection. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. BROOKS] is allowed to proceed, he will have three minutes in which to speak.

Mr. BUTLER. Unless he withdraws the paper entirely, and does not refer to it, I must object.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I desire to ask a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER. That requires unanimous consent.

Objection was made.

The question was then taken upon allowing Mr. Brooks to proceed in order; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 51, nays 69, not voting 69; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Archer, Baker, Barnes, Beck, Benton, Blair, Boyer, Burr, Cary, Chanler, Churchill, Cornell, Culom, Driggs, Eldridge, Ferry, Getz, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Griswold, Grover, Haight, Hill, Hotchkiss, Ingersoll, Johnson, Jones, Kerr, Knott, Koontz, George V. Lawrence, Marshall, Marvin, McCormick, Morgan, Niblack, Nicholson, Phelps, Poland, Ross, Sitgreaves, Stewart, Stone, Lawrence S. Trimble, Van Aukon, Van Trump, Elihu B. Washburne, Windom, Wood, Woodbridge, and Woodward—51.

NAYS—Messrs. Ames, Arnell, Beaman, Beatty, Bingham, Boutwell, Bromwell, Broomall, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Coyode, Dawes, Eggleston, Ella Farnsworth, Ferris, Fields, Garfield, Harding, Higby, Hooper, Hopkins, Chester D. Hubbard, Hunter, Judd, Julian, Kelley, William Lawrence, Lincoln, Loan, Loughridge, Mallory, Maynard, McCarthy, McClurg, Mercer, Miller, Moore, Morrell, Mullins, Myers, Newcomb, Nunn, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Pike, Pile, Plants, Poisley, Pomeroy, Price, Raum, Sawyer, Schenck, Seofield, Shellabarger, Smith, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Taffe, John Trimble, Trowbridge, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, William Williams, and John T. Wilson—69.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Allison, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Bailey, Baldwin, Banks, Barnum, Benjamin, Blaine, Brooks, Buckland, Butler, Cake, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Eckley, Eliot, Finney, Fox, Gravely, Halsey, Hawkins, Holman, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Jenckes, Kelsey, Ketcham, Kitchen, Ladin, Logan, Lynch, McCullough, Moorhead, Morriss, Munger, Peters, Prunty, Randall, Robertson, Robinson, Selye, Shanks, Spalding, Thaddeus Stevens, Stokes, Taber, Taylor, Thomas, Twichell, Upson, Van Aernam, Van Wyck, Ward, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Wilker, Thomas Williams, James F. Wilson, and Stephen F. Wilson—69.

So Mr. Brooks was not allowed to proceed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BINGHAM] is now entitled to the floor for thirty-five minutes.

Mr. BINGHAM. I now yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDRIDGE] for ten minutes.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I do not know, Mr. Speaker, whether in speaking upon this question I can conduct myself so orderly as to be allowed to proceed. I will remark, however, that in regard to this individual, Mr. Woolley, I am impelled by no motive of friendship or even of acquaintance toward him in making the remarks which I intend to make. I never saw to my recollection the gentleman before he was brought here the other day in charge of the Sergeant-at-Arms. And any remarks I may make will be as applicable to any other individual, under like circumstances, as to him.

I insist first, upon the record as it stands before this House, as presented by the committee, and the answer made by Mr. Woolley here, that he is not in contempt of this House; that he has done no act and said nothing which should bring him into contempt of this House.

I know very well that I cannot argue the questions growing out of this resolution, in the ten minutes accorded to me under the arbitrary and imperious ruling of the majority of the House, but must content myself with barely stating the proposition. I assert that the refusal of the witness to answer improper questions, or alleged improper questions, does not constitute a contempt of the House. But when the committee come before the House, and obtain an order of the House, which order the witness fails or refuses to perform, then he is in contempt of the House, and not until then. Unless this be so, the witness is subject absolutely to the will and caprice of whatever committee may be authorized to examine him. He may be subject to their ill temper, hatred, malice, or whatever other passion may inspire them in their investigation. I now read from Cushing's Parliamentary Law, page 383:

"The only course proper for a witness to pursue, in such a case, would be either to answer the question substantially, and without regard to its form, or to decline answer and to refer it to the House for their consideration."

"In regard to the phrasology of the questions which are put to a witness, and the language of the answers returned by him while under examination, it is to be observed on the one hand that the witness is in the protection of the House, that no question ought to be permitted to be put to him which is couched in disrespectful terms, and that no insulting or abusive language or conduct toward him ought to be allowed."

Now, I say that if the witness alleges that he has been subjected to insulting and abusive treatment, or has had language of that character addressed to him, he has a right, either through his counsel or in person, or by a member of this House, to come in here and state that ill treatment, and make his proper complaint; and I contend that even the communication from the witness, Woolley, which the gentleman from New York [Mr. BROOKS] undertook to read, or have read, as part of his speech, was perfectly legitimate and proper to be read here; and it was the duty of this committee, whenever the witness found fault with their questions or their treatment of him, and made a proper objection thereto, to present to this House, truthfully, carefully, and exactly, what occurred, that the House might pass upon the matter and determine the propriety of the conduct of the committee.

I read further from the authority to maintain this position:

"And any member, counsel, or party who, in examining a witness, should insult or abuse him, would subject himself to the censure and punishment of the House."

How else is the witness, if he be insulted, abused, or ill-treated, to present his case to this House except through a member of the House? But I cannot dwell upon that point.

This is a very important question, involving no less than the personal liberty of a citizen; but I do not know whether this House will pause, will deliberate, will consider; but in a case of this kind under consideration in the Parliament of Great Britain, it was said, "The House ought to pause before they come to a decision upon a point in which the liberty of the subject is so materially concerned." I say that this House ought to pause, ought to deliberate, ought not to act passionately, ought not to act as the committee act, if they are inspired by passion or anger or disappointment or mortification at the failure of impeachment, or by any feeling of animosity or hatred toward this witness, whether personal or political.

Sir, let us see what is the precise question between the committee and the witness. If there is any contempt on the part of the witness charged in the resolution, it is in refusing to answer with regard to this telegram. Let me read the facts as stated in the resolution:

"Question. The committee desire to know whether on the 6th of May you telegraphed over the signature of 'Hooker' to Sheridan Shook, 'My business is adjusted. Place ten to my credit with Gilliss, Harney & Co., No. 24 Broad street?'"

"Question. Did you also telegraph to Sheridan Shook, over the signature of 'Hooker,' on the 12th of May, 'The five should be had. It may be absolutely necessary?'"

"Which question Woolley declined to answer, in the following words, to wit:

"This is a private and confidential communication, passing between counsel and client. It has reference to business in that relation and to nothing else, and has no reference whatever to the trial of the President on the articles of impeachment preferred against him, nor to the conduct or result of the trial, nor the vote of any persons on the trial, nor any allusion thereto whatever. That is my answer."

This is the only real issue between the witness and the committee. The refusal to answer the question with regard to this telegram is the only contempt charged by the committee. This is the only question he is alleged to have declined to answer. He has answered all the others; at all events, this is the only refusal shown by the report.

The witness may have answered the others falsely or evasively; he may have failed to answer as the committee wanted him to answer; but he has answered the question in reference to the money. He has answered, if you please, in his own way. If there is a contradiction between this witness and Sheridan Shook it can make no difference—he may have testified falsely, or Shook may have testified falsely. If the committee had doubts upon this question, their duty was to bring those witnesses before them face to face, and there examine them to see which of them tells the truth. I repeat, that the only question is with reference to this telegram; and the witness puts his refusal upon the express ground that the communication, the telegram inquired about, was private and confidential, passing between counsel and client. Where is the contradiction? It is a mere inference from some statement of Shook. And in a mere contradiction between these two witnesses the House cannot decide between them until the witness has had an opportunity to explain or some testimony additional to show which is right. To this point I read again from Cushing:

"In the House of Lords, where witnesses are sworn and examined on oath, false testimony amounts to the legal crime of perjury, and is punishable as such by prosecution in the courts of ordinary criminal jurisdiction. Hence it does not appear to be customary there to punish false evidence as a contempt."

So here, if these witnesses, or either of them, have testified falsely, he is guilty of perjury by our law, and subject to the penalties of perjury. But if either has perjured himself, how is this House to determine which it is? Certainly we cannot presume, in the absence of proof, that it is Woolley.

The contradiction between these witnesses, therefore, is no contempt. The only contempt, if any, as I said before, is in refusing to answer with reference to this private and confidential telegram. Now, on the subject of confidential communications, I read from Greenleaf on Evidence:

"And in the first place, in regard to professional communications, the reason of public policy which excludes them, applies solely, as we shall presently show, to those between a client and his legal adviser; and the rules are clear and well settled that the confidential counselor, solicitor, or attorney of the party cannot be compelled to disclose papers delivered or communications made to him, or letters or entries made by him in that capacity.

"This protection," said Lord Chancellor Brougham, "is not qualified by any reference to proceedings pending or in contemplation. If, touching matters that come within the ordinary scope of professional employment, they receive a communication in their professional capacity either from a client or on his account, and for his benefit in the transaction of his business, or, which amounts to the same thing, if they commit to paper in the course of their employment on his behalf matters which they know only through their professional relation to the client, they are not only justified in withholding such matters, but bound to withhold them, and will not be compelled to disclose the information or produce the papers in any court of law or equity, either as party or witness."

If such communications were not protected no man, as the learned judge remarked in another case, would dare consult a professional adviser with a view to his defense and the enforcement of his rights, and no man could safely go to court to obtain redress.

There is much more on this subject, but the lawyers of the House are familiar with it. I insist this right of confidential communication between the attorney and client is a sacred and well-settled right, and ought not to be violated by this House any more than by a court of justice. If this be not so I ask you, Mr. Speaker, and I ask this House, what is this committee ruled by? What rights have they not? Can they not ask any question they please? It has been so contended by the gentleman from Massachusetts that they are the sole judges of what questions may be asked and what shall be answered. Such is not the law. I assert this cannot be so. If it be then the sacred relations between husband and wife may be investigated before this committee. Its most holy and sacred communings may be made public. If this be so the relation and communion between penitent and priest may be pried into and exposed by this "smelling committee," and the sacred office of the spiritual adviser is destroyed. All confidential intercourse, business, social, conjugal, and sacerdotal, are broken up.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's ten minutes have expired.

Mr. BINGHAM. I now yield ten minutes to my colleague, [Mr. MORGAN.]

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for his courtesy. I wish to submit a few considerations on the grave matter now pending before the House. This question, sir, does not alone involve the rights and liberties of Charles W. Woolley, but the rights and liberties of every American citizen; and the blow struck by the managers at him, if it be parliamentary to say so, is a blow intended to be struck by them at the rights and liberties of the whole people.

Mr. Speaker, there is an old Italian adage, that has been verified by the history of many centuries, "That war makes thieves and that peace hangs them." And, speaking of this Italian adage, it recalls the history of the republic of Venice. Venice, like our own Republic, was once free, and the rights and liberties of her people, like those of our own countrymen, were overthrown, and all the powers of the Government were usurped by the Doge and his Council of Ten. He had a council of ten, not a committee of seven, and although the numbers differ, the powers usurped are the same. Now, I do not say that this committee are the equals of the Doge's council as tyrants, for it might be unparliamentary to say so, and those who know our committee, those who have watched their actions, would never dream that they could be guilty of tyranny.

Nor, sir, is this the first time in the annals of nations that the Capitol of a free country has been turned into a prison-house. Beneath the council chambers of Venice were dungeons for the confinement of the once free citizens of that republic, and there as here they were denied all the rights which belong to a free people; and here as there similar dungeons, to be used for similar purposes, are to be established in the Capitol of a country which once boasted of its freedom. In Venice, the bridge which crossed above the dark and pestilent dungeons, where citizens were incarcerated without trial, is to this day known as "the Bridge of Sighs;" and the name of the Doge and his council are only remembered to be accursed of all mankind.

Sir, I say it with deference to this honorable body that the action of the House in this matter is in violation of all the parliamentary precedents of this and of every other free Government. A strictly partisan committee has been appointed with inquisitorial powers to hold as a prisoner any citizen who refuses to divulge the most sacred relations of life, and that, too, when they have not the remotest pertinence to the pretended subject under investigation. And although the members of this House represent the whole people, yet has this honorable body twice refused to allow this inquisitorial committee to be composed, as other committees are, of members representing both of the great political parties of the country. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, I ask the managers themselves, whether they are free from grave suspicion when they seek to shield themselves behind the screen of absolute secrecy? The gentleman from New York, [Mr. Brooks,] who was denied the right to conclude his remarks, struck down in the exercise of the right of debate, said that the action of this committee was intended to violate the rights and liberties of American citizens; and were I speaking of any other body than this House I would say that the action in regard to the lady referred to is unmanly, ungenerous, and discreditable.

My honorable friend from New York [Mr. Brooks] referred to the fact that the rooms now occupied by Miss Ream were to be converted into dungeons for the incarceration of American citizens, although their use was assigned to her by the authority of this House. It is claimed by certain gentlemen that no portion of the national Capitol should be used as a studio. And yet, sir, it is well known to every member on this floor that at this very moment there is a studio in this Capitol occupied by a man; but the managers do not propose to disturb him in his quiet possession.

Now, sir, in this connection, I am going to state a fact which I regret the necessity of stating, because it concerns an honorable gentleman on this floor. I am glad he is here to defend himself should his name be asked for and given. The only reason assigned by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Brooks] for this action in regard to Miss Ream is that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Ross] is the friend of her family. A member of this body, as I am informed, went to her studio and told her she was charged with having used her influence in favor of the acquittal of the President. She replied no, she had not. The gentleman then said: "You ought to use your influence in favor of his conviction." She replied that she could not take any part one way or the other; and the member then told her that if she did not it would be the worse for her, or words to that effect. Now, sir, comes the magnanimous, manly act of vengeance.

Several MEMBERS. Name the member.

Mr. MORGAN. I will name him if he asks to be named.

Mr. BROOKS. Not unless he asks it.

Mr. MORGAN. I will say further that I stand ready to prove what I say. And if this court of inquisition is changed into a parliamentary committee, if the gentlemen in the majority will dare to meet a fair investigation and have the facts brought to light, as they exist, I will prove that a distinguished Republican member of this House had a conversation with Miss Ream and threatened that if she did not use her influence with Senator Ross to secure the conviction of the President it would be the worse for her.

Mr. BROOKS. From what State?

Mr. MORGAN. My friend asks from what State. It was a member from the State of Indiana, a gallant State, many of whose were comrades of mine in the field.

Mr. ORTH. I ask the gentleman to yield.

Mr. MORGAN. If it does not come out of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has two minutes remaining. Will the House allow him to yield without its coming out of his time.

No objection was made.

Mr. ORTH. I understand the gentleman to refer to a member from Indiana. I ask if he alludes to me.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not.

Mr. COBURN. Does the gentleman allude to me?

Mr. MORGAN. I am happy to say to my friend that I do not mean him.

Mr. HUNTER. Does the gentleman from Ohio allude to me?

Mr. MORGAN. I do not allude to the honorable member.

Mr. JULIAN rose.

Mr. MORGAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JULIAN] propound to me a question?

Mr. JULIAN. I want to know what the gentleman asserted.

Mr. MORGAN. It affords me great pleasure to repeat what I said. I stated that a distinguished member of this House, on the Republican side—and, at the suggestion of a friend, I afterward said he was from Indiana—had gone to the studio of Miss Ream and told her it was understood she was trying to influence Senator Ross in favor of the acquittal of the President; that she replied that she had not used her influence either way; that then the gentleman from Indiana said to her that she ought to try and influence that Senator in favor of conviction; that she declined; that thereupon the gentleman threatened her—I cannot give the exact words—by saying that if she did not try and influence Senator Ross in favor of conviction it would be the worse for her, or words to that effect.

Mr. JULIAN. I now ask the gentleman whether he alludes to me in making that statement.

Mr. MORGAN. I do allude to the gentleman, and I derived my information from Miss Ream, than whom no woman in this land, no mother, wife, daughter, or sister of any member on this floor, is more entitled to the respect of honorable men.

Mr. JULIAN. The gentleman, of course, will now allow me to make my own statement in reference to this matter. At the suggestion of two or three members of this House who had heard rumors that Miss Ream was using—

Mr. MORGAN. Will the honorable gentleman allow me to ask him a question. Will he be kind enough to name the gentlemen he speaks of?

Mr. JULIAN. I prefer to make my statement in my own way before I answer any questions. It was told to me by some of the members of this House that Miss Vinnie Ream was understood to be using her influence to secure the vote of Mr. Ross for the acquittal of the President; and it was suggested to me, inasmuch as I was acquainted with her, that I should state the matter to her, as the rumor was calculated to injure her in the estimation of the public and of members of Congress. I stated that I did not believe the story; but that, as I knew her, I would mention it to her for the purpose of giving her an opportunity to make such statement as she might see fit under the circumstances. I did so, and did it jocularly, not at all in a way to show that I believed the story myself, for I did not, and she laughingly denied it; but on a moment's reflection she made the denial earnestly and scouted the accusations. That is the whole of what took place between her and me, as I distinctly recollect it. I made no threats; I intimated no threats in any shape or form. On the contrary, I accepted her statement at the time as true, and felt no longer any interest in the controversy.

I ought to state, however—perhaps I ought to state it, since my private conversations have been referred to here without any authority from me—that in connection with her denial of using any influence over Senator Ross, she stated that Senator Ross was going to vote to convict the President of the United States, [laughter;] and that on meeting Mr. Ross, accidentally, I think the next day, he confirmed to me the statement of Vinnie Ream, and complained of the injustice that had been done him in taking it for granted that he meant to vote to acquit the President, and in seeking to dragoon him into a vote of conviction; declaring that the acquittal of the President would be a calamity to the country from which there could scarcely be any hope of its recovery. [Laughter.]

That is the statement that I make, and so far as any statements purporting to come from Vinnie Ream, or anybody else, are concerned, in conflict with what I now state, I brand them as deliberate and intentional falsehoods.

Mr. MORGAN resumed the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has two minutes of his time still remaining.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, the joke perpetrated by the honorable member from Indiana was a very serious one, as the denouement of it has proved. I repeat that I stand good to prove, before a committee properly constituted, what I have stated to be true; the memory of the honorable gentleman, which seems to be at fault, to the contrary notwithstanding—for I do not wish to impeach his word.

Now, Mr. Speaker, allow me to make a suggestion to the honorable managers. Is there not danger that the country will believe that they are seeking to create a dust behind which to escape from the just indignation of a wronged and outraged people? Through them three months of legislation have been lost; defeated in the Senate, humiliated before the American people, by making a cloud of dust they cannot evade the censure they so well deserve. And they are mistaken if they suppose that they can escape from the judgment which is as certain to come down upon them as if ordered by the fiat of the Almighty.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will yield the remainder of my time to my colleague on the committee from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has fifteen minutes.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire, with the leave of the House, to call their attention to some of the facts and precedents bearing upon the arguments to which this resolution has been discussed. The first point of attack is the composition of the committee. We are told that there never was a parliamentary precedent for constructing a committee of investigation when the minority were not represented. I might answer sufficiently that there never was such a parliamentary case as this of alleged corruption in a court of impeachment, and therefore it may well be without precedent.

But I do not content myself with that reply. I remember the history of the Democratic party. I remember when a Senator from my State was voted off of every committee in the Senate of the United States, because, in the declared opinion of the majority there, he did not belong to "any healthy political organization." A bad precedent, I grant you; but it does not lie in the mouths of gentlemen upon the other side to say anything to us on the subject.

And let me say, that if Mason, Slidell, and those men of the old Democratic party, whose humble successors these gentlemen are, creeping where they walked, crawling where they marched—if they had had the charge of this impeachment, forty-eight hours would not have passed over the head of the President they undertook to impeach before he had gone out in spite of all the women in the rooms of the Capitol, or all the "whisky rings" in the States.

Now, why is it sought that the other side should have a place on this committee? When this impeachment proceeding was begun, out of which this proceeding grows, every man of them refused to take any part in it or place on a committee in regard to it. We offered them a place on the committee to begin with—the committee to draw up the articles of impeachment; we offered them an opportunity to take part in that proceeding, and they refused. And it was not until the fugleman of George H. Pendleton was brought up here for perjury and contumacy that they ask for a place on the committee to protect and defend him.

Mr. WOOD. Were not all the managers selected in a Republican caucus?

Mr. BUTLER. I speak of the committee to draw up the articles of impeachment. As to the selection of the managers, if the gentleman had read a little more upon the subject, he would have known that managers are always selected from one side. They are the prosecutors, and are always from the side of the prosecution.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. That is just what we complain of.

Mr. BUTLER. A little more learning on this subject would save gentlemen a great many more questions. Let me say to the gentleman, those gentlemen refused to take part in the proceedings. Having so refused, what did they do? And what do they now do? They throw every obstacle in the way of an investigation; they show that they do not mean to have a fair investigation. They show the country that they will not investigate fairly, because they kept us here last night for six hours filibustering, to keep the House from voting on a resolution to compel a witness to answer questions which the House had ordered that he should answer, and he had contemptuously refused so to do.

Now, some of my friends here, good and true men, some whose judgment I respect, and some whose judgment I do not so much respect, on this side of the House and on the other, have come to me and said, "Why have this investigation ex parte in its character?" Sir, is not every grand jury an ex parte investigation? We are now attempting to find the evidence which will establish a prima facie case of crime to be hereafter adjudicated by the Senate, or the House, as the case may be. We are acting the part of a grand jury in this investigation, and of necessity for the purposes of justice the investigation should be ex parte, as all such investigations ought to be, and in practice everywhere else are, in order that the secrets of the prosecution may be preserved from the criminal. Who ever heard of the friends and defenders of a supposed criminal being put on a grand jury to aid in investigating his crimes? And a request, in my judgment, to have gentlemen on the other side put on this investigation would be as impudent as it would be for Ali Baba, if he was before a grand jury, to ask to have some of his "Forty Thieves" put on that grand jury.

Mr. BROOKS. I call the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] to order.

The SPEAKER. If the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts were applied to any member on this floor, then they are not in order.

Mr. BUTLER. I applied the remarks—

Mr. MARSHALL. I ask that the words be taken down.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the words to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARSHALL] has objected.

The Clerk read as follows:

"And a request, in my judgment, to have gentlemen on the other side put on this investigation would be as impudent as it would be for Ali Baba, if he was before a grand jury, to ask to have some of his 'Forty Thieves' put on that grand jury."

The SPEAKER. The Chair rules this language out of order on two grounds; first, on account of the use of the word "impudent;" and secondly, on account of the reference assimilating gentlemen on the other side to the "Forty Thieves."

Mr. BUTLER. I intended neither the one nor the other to apply to the members on the other side.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has stated his opinion. The gentleman from Massachusetts can appeal if he desires.

Mr. BUTLER. I disclaim any intention of making such a personal reference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the language of the gentleman is susceptible of the construction he has stated.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I insist that the gentleman shall not go on without the consent of the House.

Mr. BUTLER. I withdraw the language if the Chair thinks it is not in order.

Mr. BROOKS. The gentleman would not allow me to withdraw.

Mr. MARSHALL. I object to the gentleman from Massachusetts proceeding unless the House so decides.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BROOKS] and to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARSHALL] that no objection prevents a member from withdrawing his words. The action of the House can be determined afterward.

Mr. BUTLER. I withdraw the language as an imputation; for I intended none upon any of the gentlemen.

Mr. GETZ. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the gentleman proceed in order?

Mr. MARSHALL. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 101, nays 18, not voting 75; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ames, Archer, Baker, Barnes, Beaman, Beatty, Beck, Benton, Bingham, Blaine, Boutwell, Boyer, Bromwell, Brooks, Broomall, Burr, Cary, Chanler, Churchill, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Coburn, Cornell, Covode, Cullom, Donnelly, Driggs, Ela, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Ferris, Ferry, Fields, Garfield, Getz, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Grover, Halsey, Hill, Hooper, Hopkins, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Jencks, Jones, Judd, Julian, Kelley, Kerr, Knott, Kootz, Ladd, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Marvin, Maynard, McCarthy, McClure, McCormick, Mercer, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Mullins, Myers, Niblack, Nicholson, Nunn, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Phelps, Pike, Pile, Poland, Polisy, Ramsey, Price, Robertson, Sawyer, Seaford, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Stewart, Stone, Lawrence S. Trimble, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Auken, Burt Van Horn, Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, William Williams, John T. Wilson, Windom, and Woodward—161.

NAYS—Messrs. Arnell, Harding, Hunter, Mallory, Marshall, Morgan, Newcomb, Plants, Randall, Starkweather, Robert T. Van Horn, Van Trump, and Wood—13.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Allison, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Bailey, Baldwin, Banks, Barnum, Benjamin, Blair, Buckland, Butler, Calk, Cobb, Cook, Dawes, Dixon, Dodge, Eckley, Eggleston, Elliot, Finney, Fox, Gravely, Griswold, Hawkins, Higby, Holman, Asahel H. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hulbard, Humphrey, Johnson, Kelsey, Ketcham, Kitchen, Lincoln, Logan, Loughbridge, Lynch, McCullough, Moore, Morrissey, Munger, Peters, Pruyn, Baum, Robinson, Ross, Schenck, Selye, Shanks, Smith, Spalding, Aaron F. Stevens, Thaddeus Stevens, Stokes, Taber, Taffe, Taylor, Thomas, John Trimble, Trichell, Van Aernam, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Henry D. Washburn, William D. Washburn, Welker, Thomas Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, and Woodbridge—75.

So the House decided that Mr. BUTLER be permitted to proceed.

Mr. BUTLER. With thanks for the courtesy of the House, I beg to assure them that I did not intend to be outside of the rule of parliamentary debate. I only meant to make a strong comparison.

Allow me to resume. We say on our side there has been an attempt to interfere with the course of public justice. That is not a party question. It ought never to have been made a party question, and it is only the course of the minority in filibustering in favor of the person in contempt of the House that has ever caused it to seem to be a party question.

Mr. GETZ rose.

Mr. BUTLER. I have no time to yield. We propose to go on with the investigation. What is the objection in that investigation to having some of these gentlemen on the committee? It is this. We investigated the assassination of Jefferson Davis through a committee of this House with gentlemen of the other side on the committee.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I did not know that he had been assassinated.

Mr. BUTLER. Of Lincoln by Jefferson Davis. I am glad to be corrected by the other side, who seem to know all about it.

When that investigation took place every fact, every circumstance before the committee was known to the witnesses outside long before the report to this House was made. So it was when the Judiciary Committee took the testimony in regard to the impeachment of the President; and while I do not make any charge against any gentleman on the committee—for I know some of them to be honorable men—yet it so happened that every fact, everything testified to was at once made known to the public, and the witnesses came here and squared their testimony accordingly. Now, then, the reason why I do not want some of the gentlemen on the other side of the House upon the committee is that I am afraid of the testimony being known to them immediately in the course of their dinners, in private and confidential communications or otherwise, it will be imparted so as to get to the witnesses, and the witnesses will thus be able to square their stories by it.

Why do I say this? Because one of the Astor House conspirators has already attempted to approach one of the employes of the House to get at the testimony before you so as to square his testimony by it. Let me repeat it. One of the Astor House conspirators, who got together for the purpose of consulting upon raising money to buy Senators' votes, has attempted to bribe an employé of the House to get the telegrams we had of his and to know what evidence we had in regard to him. He does not want to testify before the committee any more than Mr. Woolley until he knows what we have got against him. It is to keep the secrets of state, to keep the matter of evidence undivulged from men who are holding out until by the efforts of friends on this floor they can get to see the testimony before the committee, that none of the gentlemen on the other side should be allowed on the committee.

This same Mr. Woolley refused to answer, when last called before us, unless he could see what he had answered before. That was the first thing he asked when he came before us. Next, he wanted a lawyer. I told him that he did not require a lawyer in order to know how to tell the truth. I thought that was not the province of a lawyer. [Laughter.] I have known that a man could tell the truth without a lawyer. I believe Woolley is now holding out until he can find out what testimony we have against him, so as to square his story with it.

I have heard of his probable explanation of the flat contradiction between himself and Sheridan Shook. He says he gave the money to Shook, and Shook says he did not get it. What is to be the explanation made before the committee, as I am informed, if the exposure does not prevent it? That a Mr. Fitzhugh, finding both drunk, took the money out of the pocket of Shook, so that Woolley can swear he gave it to Shook, and Shook can swear he has not got it, and both thus appear to tell the truth. If they could only find out what other testimony we have they would fit their stories accordingly.

But, sir, passing from this, we are told by the honorable gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. MORGAN,] who has just preached his funeral sermon [laughter]—

Mr. RANDALL. The people will resurrect him.

Mr. BUTLER. We are told by him that we are making a bastille of the Capitol and that we are outraging all precedents by so doing. Why, sir, in the very Second Congress our fathers brought up William Duane, a newspaper editor—and I commend this to some newspaper editors on the other side—and put him in prison in the Capitol for days until he answered for libeling the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. William J. Duane was never an editor.

Mr. BUTLER. I call attention next to the case of Mr. Walcott, of Massachusetts, whom this House confined in a jail, in a dungeon, if you please, for more than eight weeks, as my memory serves me, and simply because he would not answer what? They proved $87,000 in his hands, and the allegation was that he bribed members to vote for the tariff bill. He answered that he used it for his own private purpose, and would not criminate himself, and because he would not tell what he did with it he was kept in jail until the session came to an end. A law was then passed that no witness thereafter should be allowed to shield himself under the plea that he might give evidence tending to criminate himself.

Again, this House took Mr. Simonton and thrust him down into the coal-hole of this Capitol and kept him there until he answered where he got the President's message which he had published before the time.

Again, we took a high diplomat, Chevalier Wykoff, put him in that same coal-hole, and kept him there twenty-eight hours, and until he answered.

And this has been done by all the Congresses, commencing from the First down to to-day. So that we are doing in this case exactly what every House of Representatives has done.

They say we are providing to make a bastille in the Capitol. Why, sir, I went down to see that coal-hole, and I thought it was not a fit place to put any man into in its present condition; hence I asked the Sergeant-at-Arms to provide a place in which to hold Woolley, and he said he had no authority to provide a place.

Mr. BOYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. I have not time; if I had I would. I say I saw the place where Wykoff was confined was not now a fit place for such purpose, and so I asked to have the place mentioned in our resolution provided for this purpose. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Brooks] complains these rooms are not fit for any man to stay in, and in the next breath complains that we are maliciously turning a lady out of them. [Laughter.]

Now, if anything that has been charged by my friend from Ohio [Mr. MORGAN] against my friend from Indiana [Mr. JULLIAN] had any foundation in truth, or if we accept the version of the gentleman from Indiana, it is very clear that these rooms ought to be cleaned out, and at once; because, without saying a word about the woman, whom, I believe, I never saw, she ought not to be left in rooms in this Capitol, where she is exposed to such suspicion. Let her and everybody else who visits her there be cleaned out, and if the statue of Mr. Lincoln, which she is supposed to be making, is spoilt in so doing, as one of his friends I shall be very glad of it, for, from what I hear of it, I think it is a thing that will do neither him nor the country credit.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BINGHAM. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I demand the yeas and nays. I was going to ask the gentleman to allow an amendment that Mr. Woolley's wife, who is here, may be allowed to see him.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that he would not hesitate to grant permission to the counsel and wife of Mr. Woolley to visit him under this resolution. He would not exclude the wife under any circumstances, unless he was ordered by the House to do so.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I did not know but the managers might control the matter.

The SPEAKER. It is to be by order of the Speaker, who holds that the prisoner's wife and counsel should be admitted.

Mr. BINGHAM. The resolution is rightly interpreted by the Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 100, nays 34, not voting 55; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ames, Arnell, Baldwin, Beaman, Beatty, Benton, Bingham, Blaine, Blair, Boutwell, Bromwell, Butler, Churchill, Reader, W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Cornell, Covode, Culom, Dawes, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Eggleston, Ela, Farnsworth, Ferriss, Ferry, Fields, Garfield, Griswold, Halsey, Harding, Higby, Hill, Hooper, Hopkins, Chester D. Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Judd, Julian, Kelley, Ketcham, Keontz, Laffin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Lincoln, Loan, Logan, Loughridge, Lynch, Mallory, McCarthy, McClurg, Mercor, Miller, Moore, Moorhead, Morrill, Mullins, Newcomb, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Pike, Pile, Plants, Poland, Polesley, Pomeroy, Price, Raum, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Smith, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Stokes, Taffe, Thomas, John Triunbe, Trowbridge, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Robert F. Van Horn, Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Welker, Thomas Williams, William Williams, John T. Wilson, and Windom—100.

NAYS—Messrs. Archer, Barnes, Beck, Boyer, Brooks, Burr, Cary, Chanler, Eldridge, Getz, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Haig, Hotchkiss, Johnson, Jones, Kerr, Knott, Marshall, McCormick, Morgan, Niblack, Nicholson, Phelps, Randall, Ross, Sitgreaves, Stewart, Stone, Lawrence S. Trimble, Van Auker, Van Trump, Wood, and Woodward—34.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Allison, Anderson, Delos E. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Bailey, Baker, Banks, Barnum, Benjamin, Broomall, Buckland, Cake, Cook, Dodge, Eckley, Eliot, Finney, Fox, Gravely, Grover, Hawkins, Holman, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hulburt, Humphrey, Kelsey, Kitchen, Marvin, Maynard, McCullough, Morrissey, Mungen, Myers, A. Nunn, Peters, Pruyn, Robertson, Robinson, Selye, Shanks, Spalding, Thaddeus Stevens, Taber, Taylor, Twichell, Van Aernam, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Henry D. Washburn, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, and Woodbridge—55.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DUTIES ON COPPER.

Mr. DRIGGS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1127) to provide for specific duties on copper, copper ore, and regulus imported into the United States; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

CONTESTED ELECTION—DELANO VS. MORGAN.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I rise to a privileged question. I wish to give notice to the House that on Tuesday next, immediately after the reading of the Journal, I will call up the contested-election case of Delano vs. MORGAN.

Mr. KERR. Before the sense of the House is taken on that proposition—

The SPEAKER. No action of the House is required. It is simply a notice.

Mr. KERR. Then I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he will not consent to take up some other one of the contested-election cases first? There are more than one. I will state the reasons.

Mr. PILE. I object to debate.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana that I have no control over any other case reported by the Committee of Elections.

CONSTITUTION OF FLORIDA.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit to Congress the accompanying documents, which are the only papers that have been submitted to me relative to the proceedings to which they refer in the State of Florida.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 27, 1865.

The SPEAKER. This relates to the constitution of the State of Florida.

The message and the accompanying documents were referred to the Committee on Reconstruction, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SCHENCK. I propose that the House go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the purpose of getting the Indian appropriation bill out of the way, and taking up the tax bill.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order, except by unanimous consent, as there has been no morning hour yet.

Mr. SCHENCK. Gentlemen appeal to me to give way for the morning hour, and I therefore demand the regular order of business, and I hope gentlemen will stay here and assist in getting the Indian appropriation bill out of the way.

JOHN A. NEUSTADTER.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has commenced, and this being Friday the regular order of business is the consideration of reports from committees of a private nature. The House resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1082) for the relief of John A. Neustaedter, which was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PILE] on the 16th of May, and was pending at the expiration of the morning hour on that day.

The bill was read. It directs the Paymaster General of the Army to pay to John A. Neustaedter, late a captain of artillery, out of any money now appropriated or that may hereafter be appropriated for the pay of the Army, the full pay and emoluments for a captain of artillery in the Army of the United States, from March 25, 1862, to August 28, 1862.

Mr. PILE. This bill was debated and fully explained, I believe, when it was last before the House for consideration. It is a bill to compensate this officer for services rendered for some four months. Official orders accompany the bill showing that he was on duty for the whole of this time in the field. I think there can be no objection to the bill.

Mr. MILLER. Did he perform the duties of the office?

Mr. PILE. He did, every day and every hour.

Mr. PAINE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PILE. I yield for a question.

Mr. PAINE. I had not the pleasure of hearing the debate on this case, and I desire to ask a question to see whether any new principle is to be adopted in this bill. I wish to inquire whether this officer was an officer of the regular Army, commissioned by the President of the United States, at or before the date from which the pay is to run, and if the object of the bill is simply to give him pay from the date of the commission antecedent to muster, or whether he was an officer of some State organization, and we are to give him pay under some State commission previous to muster?

Mr. PILE. I will answer the gentleman by stating that he was neither. Captain Neustaedter was commissioned by General Frémont. A provisional commission was issued to him while Frémont was in command of the department of Missouri. He was mustered in under that commission, and did service and was paid. After Frémont was removed from the command of the department of Missouri an order was issued by the War Department directing certain officers appointed by General Frémont to be mustered out unless retained by competent authority. Captain Neustaedter, at the time of the issue of that order, was on duty at Pittsburg Landing, in front of Corinth, on the staff of General C. F. Smith as an artillery officer. He was not mustered out in accordance with that order, neither was he retained by a specific order retaining him. Owing to his name being overlooked at the department headquarters, he was allowed to remain there, and served in the field for four months. The paymaster declines to pay him for that time. This bill is to pay him for the time he actually did duty, under his commission, all the time in the field, every day in service. The orders directed to him are here on file.

Mr. PAINE. One more question, which will probably cover all inquiries I desire to make. Does this bill provide for giving this officer any pay for the time which elapsed before he was mustered by a United States officer?

Mr. PILE. None at all; simply for the time between the date of the order directing these officers to be mustered out and the time when he was actually mustered out. It was an oversight of the department headquarters that this officer was not either retained by special order or mustered out by orders.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I desire to call the attention of the House to this matter before they pass upon this bill, because I am apprehensive that, if it shall be passed, it will be drawn into a precedent for the payment of a very large number of persons. I am somewhat familiar with these matters in Missouri, because I was on a committee of investigation which sat in Missouri, and we had occasion to know a great deal in relation to these appointments by General Frémont. There were a large number of these officers made without any authority whatever; and the parties have no right whatever, as against the Government, for any pay. I do not say that this particular person may not have a good claim; I do not say it may not be proper to pay him. But I do say that if this bill shall pass in the form in which it now stands, it will be drawn into a precedent to pay an immense number of these men who were appointed by General Frémont, and who never did any duty whatever.

Mr. PILE. In reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] I desire to say—

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. PILE. For how long?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Merely for a few words. At a former session, when I was a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, a great many of these claims were presented, and in every instance we refused to report favorably upon them, for they were the claims of persons appointed by General Frémont and other officers on their staffs without any authority whatever; or as officers of regiments without commissions from their State or from the General Government. This bill would set a very bad precedent, as my colleague says.

Mr. PILE. I desire to say—

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. One word more.

Mr. PILE. I decline to yield further.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The gentleman will certainly not decline to hear an important statement.

Mr. PILE. In answer to the two gentlemen from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN and Mr. FARNSWORTH] I desire to say that the War Department, or the Government through the War Department, directly sanctioned these appointments by General Frémont, and issued an order covering the time they had served, directing certain of them to be mustered out and certain of them to be retained by competent authority. This cannot be made a precedent in any other case.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. If the gentleman will yield to me I will offer an amendment to the bill, which may obviate some objections to it.

Mr. PILE. I will hear the amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to amend by the addition of the following:

Provided, That this act shall not be drawn into a precedent for the payment of the other officers holding appointments from General John C. Frémont.

Mr. PILE. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. If this bill is going to pass at all I want it to pass with the amendment I have offered, though that will not commit me to the support of the bill.

Mr. HARDING. I desire to say that I think the proposition of my colleague [Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois] is very unjust. If it is right to pay one of those officers, it is right to pay all of that class.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Is my colleague in favor of paying all?

Mr. HARDING. No, sir; I am not in favor of paying any of them.

Mr. PILE. I know a large number of these officers. A majority of them ought not to be paid. I was on duty in that department, and I have personal knowledge of this matter. Many of the officers were on the staff of General Frémont in the city; but this man was at the front exposing himself to danger, giving to the Government the best efforts of his brain and muscle. He ought to be paid. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered, which was upon the amendment of Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add to the bill the following:

Provided, That this act shall not be deemed a precedent for the payment of other officers holding appointment from General John C. Frémont.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question being on the passage of the bill,

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The bill was passed.

Mr. PILE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JUSTIN A. GOODHUE.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report back the papers in the case of Justin A. Goodhue. The committee are of opinion that no legislation is needed in this case, and I move that the parties be allowed to withdraw the papers that the case may be settled at the Departments.

The motion was agreed to.

HENRY KOLB.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Committee on Military Affairs have also directed me to report back adversely joint resolution (H. R. No. 252) providing for the admission of Henry Kolb to the Soldiers' Home, no legislation being necessary.

The bill was laid on the table.

ISAAC WATTS.

Mr. GARFIELD also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1128) for the relief of Isaac Watts; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, provides that the proper accounting officers of the Treasury and Paymaster's Departments be authorized and directed to pay to Isaac Watts all arrears of pay, bounty, or other allowances due from the United States to his adopted son, Samuel Watts, late a private of company H, eighty-first regiment infantry, Ohio volunteers, in the same manner in all respects as if the said Samuel Watts had been the son of Isaac Watts.

Mr. GARFIELD. I can explain this bill in a very few minutes. Samuel Watts, a soldier who was killed in battle, was, when a child two years of age, taken and adopted, not legally but actually, as the son of Isaac Watts, being so treated all his life. But no legal steps were ever taken to make the adoption valid in law. Samuel Watts has left no surviving relatives to settle his affairs. This bill, therefore, authorizes his father by adoption to settle his affairs and receive the back pay due him.

Mr. PAINE. Does this bill undertake to settle any question as to any disputed claim?

Mr. GARFIELD. Not at all. It simply directs the accounting officers to settle with Isaac Watts as though he were the real father. I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GARFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HENRY DRENNING.

Mr. BOYER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, with an amendment in the form of a substitute, a bill (H. R. No. 425) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to settle the account of Henry Drénning, late of company K, fifty-fifth Pennsylvania volunteers.

The substitute was read. It states that Sergeant Henry Drénning, late of company K, fifty-fifth regiment Pennsylvania volunteers, was killed at or near Cold Harbor, in Virginia, on the 3d of June, 1864, leaving no widow or heirs, lineal or collateral; and further, that he was the adopted and foster son from childhood of Mrs. Mary A. Filler, and directs that Mrs. Mary A. Filler shall be entitled to receive the back pay Sergeant Henry Drénning, at the time of his death, would have been entitled to by law, and that she shall have the same rights and benefits in all other respects as if she were the natural and lawful mother of said Henry Drénning.

Mr. BOYER. Mr. Speaker, this bill is precisely like the one which the House has just acted upon favorably. In this instance the person for whose relief this bill is drawn adopted Henry Drénning when a child one or two years old and brought him up, educated him, and maintained him until he enlisted in the United States service in the late war, in which he was killed, leaving no widow or lineal or collateral heirs. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the substitute was adopted.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BOYER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. BOYER, from the same committee, reported adversely upon the following, and they were laid on the table:

A bill (H. R. No. 84) for the relief of W. H. Weaver, late captain company D, twelfth regiment Pennsylvania reserve corps; and

The petition of N. B. Mason, for money taken while he was a prisoner of war in 1865.

MARTHA E. KING.

Mr. BOYER, from the same committee, reported back House joint resolution No. 256, for the relief of Martha E. King, with a substitute.

The substitute directs the Paymaster General to pay to Martha E. King, widow of Clinton King, late of Carroll county, Tennessee, a sum equal to the pay of a first lieutenant of cavalry from September 15, 1863, to March 10, 1864; and it also directs the Secretary of the Interior to place her name upon the pension-roll at the rate provided for the widows of first lieutenants of cavalry who die in the military service from wounds received or disease contracted in the line of duty.

Mr. BOYER. Mr. Speaker, Clinton King, the husband of Martha King, for whose relief the bill provides, raised forty-five men in August, 1863, for the military service of the United States, who were uniformed, armed, and equipped, and mustered into actual service, and attached as a company to a Tennessee regiment of cavalry, which company was commanded by King as captain until, while upon duty in actual service, he contracted a disease of which he died on the 10th of March, 1864, leaving his widow, Martha E. King, and several children surviving him. He never received any pay, nor have his family received any since his decease. The number of men he raised and commanded were not enough to entitle him to a captain's commission, but were enough to entitle him to be mustered into service as a first lieutenant. The confusion attendant upon the distracted condition of things in Tennessee in 1863 prevented, in his case, as in many others, a commission from being issued. Afterward commissions were issued to the surviving officers in like position by the Governor of Tennessee as of the date when the service began. King being then dead no commission was issued in his case, nor any relief up to this time afforded to his family.

The substitute was adopted.

The joint resolution, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BOYER moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. ELLA E. HOBART.

Mr. BOYER, from the same committee, reported a joint resolution (H. R. No. 280) for the relief of Mrs. Ella E. Hobart; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution provides that Mrs. Ella E. Hobart shall have the full pay and emoluments of a chaplain for the time during which she performed duty as chaplain of the first regiment of Wisconsin heavy artillery.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BOYER moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. RAUM, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported adversely on the following cases; which were laid on the table:

The petition of Samuel Noah, asking pay for services rendered in the war of 1812;

The petition of William Whitely, formerly orderly sergeant company G, seventh regiment Connecticut volunteers;

The petition of Leusianah Sizemore, for relief; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 162) for the relief of John T. Cox, late regimental quartermaster of first regiment Indiana home guards.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. RAUM, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution for the relief of Ritchison Hartgrove, a soldier in the late war; and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

JAMES A. MULLIGAN.

Mr. SITGREAVES, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1129) for the relief of the widow and children of the late Colonel James A. Mulligan, deceased; which was read a first and second time.

The preamble recites that on the 15th of June, 1861, Colonel Mulligan was mustered into service of the United States as colonel of the twenty-third Illinois infantry, known as the Irish brigade; that he marched to the front in July, and from that time, excepting two months, when he was a prisoner of war, he was actively engaged in the service, until he fell on the battle-field at Winchester, on the 26th of July, 1864; that during two years of that military service he was assigned to the command of brigades and divisions, and performed the duties of brigadier and major general, but received only the pay of colonel, and that the widow and children of Colonel Mulligan are justly entitled to, and need for their support, the amount of pay which he would have received had he been commissioned according to his respective commands in the field. It therefore directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the widow the sum of $5,000, to be paid out of the money appropriated for the pay of the Army.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I believe this bill makes an appropriation.

The SPEAKER. It is not an appropriation bill. It is to be paid out of any money appropriated for the pay of the Army, which must be contained in the Army appropriation bill. It does not itself take money out of the Treasury.

Mr. SITGREAVES. Mr. Speaker, I have a brief compilation of the services of Colonel Mulligan at the commencement of the rebellion, upon which I mainly base the merits of this bill, and to which I call the attention of the House.

At the commencement of the rebellion James A. Mulligan, then captain of the Shields Guards of Chicago, raised a regiment of Irishmen for the war, but in consequence of the large number of volunteers in Illinois who had rallied in defense of the old flag, the regiment was not accepted by the State. Urged by an irresistible impulse to serve his country in the field, James A. Mulligan hastened to Washington bearing a letter from the dying Douglas to President Lincoln, urging the President to accept the Irish regiment. The application was successful. He returned to Chicago and was made colonel of the regiment. He marched with his regiment from Chicago in June, 1861, and was actively engaged until ordered to reinforce and defend Lexington, in Missouri. He entered Lexington on the 9th of September and took command of that post. The troops under his command, besides his regiment of eight hundred men, consisted of the thirteenth and fourteenth Missouri, eight hundred and forty; first Illinois, five hundred; home guards, five hundred; total two thousand six hundred and forty, with one four, three, six, and one twelve pounder.

By order of General Mulligan the troops immediately commenced the construction of an earthwork ten feet in height, eight feet in width, inclosing an area sufficient to contain a force of ten thousand men, with their horses, teams, and munitions of war. The troops, inspired by the spirit of their commander, worked without ceasing until the 12th, when the post was attacked by the enemy, and from that time until the 21st there was one continuous battle day and night. The summons of General Price on the 17th at the head of ten thousand men to surrender, was answered by the heroic Mulligan in these memorable words, "If you want us, you must come and take us;" and on the 21st, and not until the water was gone, the ammunition was gone, and the intrenchments strewn with the dead and dying, did the garrison surrender to an overwhelming force of men and guns. Yet even in that surrender we see the indomitable spirit of the gallant Mulligan, to the salutation of the rebel chief, "Colonel, you have surrendered!" He replied, "It is no surrender on my part; I will take fifty of my men and fight a hundred of yours in an open field to decide this matter. I only cease firing because I have fired my last cartridge."

Mr. Speaker, in that eventful fight Colonel Mulligan exhibited a bravery, a recklessness of danger, which has been equaled, but certainly not excelled by any officer, of any grade, in any battle of the rebellion. While his post was plowed with shot from a battery in front, a battery on the right, a battery on the left, and a battery in the rear, a writer says:

"He disdained to walk in the trenches, but trod the high ground where bullets flew like hail-stones, heedless of the entreaties of the soldiers who sent up shouts of acclamation at his noble daring."

I do not advocate this bill because Mulligan was brave in battle—for bravery is the common inheritance of the American people, bravery is the rule among us, cowardice is the exception—but I advocate the passage of this bill because the services of Colonel Mulligan in raising that regiment and fighting that battle were peculiar to himself alone. He enlisted a regiment of men who were not legally bound to defend the honor of our flag; he was the means of inspiring them with an ardor, an enthusiasm in the march and camp and battle which was responded to by alien residents throughout the whole land. There was a moral power and effective force in that regiment of brave men when they marched from Chicago bearing twin banners emblazoned by the ladies of that city, one with the stars and stripes, the other with the Irish sun-burst.

There was a moral power with these men when they baptized the trenches of Lexington with their blood in defense of these stars and stripes, which told upon the nation and the world. England then and there learned that the Irishman who trod our soil would defend that flag with all the native ardor and reckless bravery of his race. The world there learned that the aliens among us would rally around that flag and march side by side with the naturalized and native-born citizen to defend it against every foe.

Sir, who can calculate the important results to the nation from the enlistment of the Irish brigade and the battle of Lexington? I may overrate these important results, but I sincerely believe that they stand as a wall of fire against foreign aggression and foreign war; for the response to the burning appeals of Mulligan and the gallant bearing of the Irish brigade teach the world now and will teach it for a century to come to fear the power of a Republic whose native effective military force is strengthened and increased by a continuous foreign immigration which in numbers has no parallel among the nations of the earth.

Sir, let us cherish this great element of progressive power, greater a hundredfold than is possessed by any other nation under heaven!

At the outset of the rebellion, when men doubted the unity of the North—when that unity was all important, when it was all important to secure every element of power—the Irish brigade stood forth as the representative men of the foreign born, and their voice was heard by the whole nation; every act of representative men at that time was of vital importance. When the heart of the North thrilled with horror at the dastardly murder of Ellsworth, almost simultaneous with that thrill was heard the voice of the Irish brigade:

"Whereas, we have heard with pain and profound regret the intelligence this morning of the assassination of Colonel E. E. Ellsworth, of Chicago, by the secessionists of Virginia; and whereas in this crisis of our national affairs one of the noblest of the young volunteer soldiers to rally to the endangered flag of our country, one of the foremost to inspire by his example and patriotism the unexampled devotion which is now thronging the capital of the nation with the armed chivalry of our country, was our gallant fellow-soldier and citizen, Colonel Ellsworth; Resolved, That we respectfully demand of the Secretary of War, claiming as our due as the immediate brother soldiers of the honored dead, the right to take the advance post in vindicating our lost and noble brother and restoring to the homes of the Republic their happiness and security."

And when they proved their sincerity at Lexington, and returned from that bloody advance post, just defeated but not dishonored, and when Mulligan returned from a rebel prison, he proclaimed in their name to the thousands who had gathered to welcome him home at Joliet and Chicago:

"I can simply say for myself and command that we, one and all, will anxiously await the day when we can again stand together in our own loved Irish brigade, with our faces set against rebellion and toward Missouri. I hope that day is not far off when I may again unfurl that flag intrusted to my keeping, and plant it upon some height as dangerous as Lexington. For my companions I can pledge you, sir, that while the Constitution is violated, while laws are broken, while rebellion flaunts its banners, no man of them will rest until the last blow is struck which shall restore our united nationality."

"Coming, too, as I do, with the experience gained in those trying hours, I pledge myself and the whole Irish brigade, that while there is a fireside here threatened or a home endangered their lives will be cheerfully given in defense of that fireside and that home. I am for the Union, and for the Union until death."

Sir, words like these from representative men in the hour of doubt and danger give a moral tone to a cause and a moral strength to a principle more efficient in their defense than ten thousand bayonets.

But I am not alone in my views of the peculiar services of Colonel Mulligan at the outset of the rebellion. I read a letter from General Grant:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 12, 1868.

DEAR SIR: In behalf of Mrs. Mulligan, who has had claim for extra compensation before your committee for services rendered by her husband during the rebellion, I would say that Colonel Mulligan held a command above his rank for a good portion of the time he was in service. He was a gallant and commanding soldier. His early entrance into the service secured to the Army, no doubt, many who otherwise might have been led in sympathy in opposition to the man. His untimely death in the service of his country has left a helpless widow and orphan children poor and dependent.

I think Mrs. Mulligan's case is one appealing to the sympathy of Congress.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
U. S. GRANT, General.

Hon. J. A. GARFIELD,
Chairman Military Committee of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I have spoken of the peculiar services rendered by Colonel Mulligan to the Union at the outset of the rebellion as a reason for the passage of this bill. I might add as another reason his dying words, so like in spirit to those dying words of Decatur, which have been, as it were, the motto of our tars in every conflict on the ocean. The dying words of a patriot are treasured as a priceless legacy by the patriots of every nation. At the battle of Winchester Colonel Mulligan was mortally wounded. While being carried off the field, seeing that the colors of his brigade were endangered, he ordered his bearers to lay him down and save the flag, and upon their hesitation he repeated the order, "Lay me down and save the flag." The order was then obeyed—he was laid down weltering in his blood, and the flag was saved.

Sir, such words under such circumstances will educate the patriot of future generations when he shall read their record in the history of the great rebellion. It has been said that "the blood of the religious martyr is the seed of the church." Surely the words of the patriot, when pouring out his life blood for his flag, are the seeds of future patriotism.

I have prepared a table showing that if Colonel Mulligan had been commissioned and paid according to his commands he would have received a larger amount than is given by this bill:

Pay of United States Army officers, including subsistence, forage, &amp;c., showing the difference between the pay of a colonel of infantry and a brigadier and major general.
Colonel, per month.....	$212 00
Brigadier general, per month.....	326 50
Major general, per month.....	481 00
Excess of pay of brigadier general, per year.....	1,374 00
Excess of pay of major general, per year.....	3,228 00
Average excess for one year.....	2,301 00
Average excess for two years.....	4,602 00
Average excess, with four years' interest.....	6,706 00
Principal, with four years' interest to make $5,000.....	4,032 00
Excess pay of brigadier general from September 1, 1861, to August, 1864.....	6,711 00

I read a letter from James W. Sheahan to Senator YATES:

TRIBUNE OFFICE, CHICAGO, April 6, 1867.

DEAR SIR: Mrs. Mulligan, the widow of the commander of the twenty-third Illinois infantry, of whose history you and all other Illinoisans are so proud, visits Washington on business, and I am sure will find in you a friend and advocate.

Mr. Lincoln, at the time of Colonel Mulligan's death, appointed him brigadier general by brevet. Colonel Mulligan had for more than a year commanded a major general's division, and that, too, in active duty in the field. His widow wishes to have his services acknowledged by a brigadier's commission dated back to Lexington. I am sure that you will aid her by your influence and advice.

Your friend,
JAMES W. SHEAHAN.
Hon. RICHARD YATES, United States Senate.

Mr. Speaker, who will get the benefits of this bill? Those whom Mulligan, next to God and his country, loved best, and loved with all the ardor of his great and magnanimous soul. Marian Mulligan, the wife of the hero, and her children—one widowed and the others orphaned by rebel shot. Marian Mulligan, the loved, the devoted wife, whom Mulligan would not suffer "the winds of heaven to visit too roughly," who, unless the bill becomes a law, will be houseless. I read an extract from a sketch of the life and services of Colonel Mulligan, by James W. Sheahan, esq., the biographer of Douglas:

"During all his campaigns his young and devoted wife accompanied him. She followed his march, and when he stopped she and the little ones joined him. When danger threatened or a fight took place she merely retired to a place of safety, that she might be near, and in case of casualty that she might hasten to his side. When he was besieged at Lexington she was in the vicinity, and when he was carried off a prisoner she followed him into captivity, and stayed with him during these long months, sharing his prison fare and life. Upon the appearance of the rebels in Western Virginia, Mulligan and his command marched out to meet them; she remained watching and praying for his safe return. The news of the fight and retreat and her husband's wounds and capture reached her in her place of refuge. Prompted by a wife's devotion, and with all the hope and anxiety of a mother, she, on foot and on horseback, without a moment's delay, sought the enemy's lines, and by a woman's tears she was permitted to enter. She hastened on, but, alas! too late. The eyes that so often looked upon her in love had been closed by stranger hands in the enemy's camp—the father of her children was dead. Nor did that blow fall alone. By the side of her brave and gallant husband fell also her brave and noble brother. Both fell at the same time upon the same field. Noble, daring, fearless soldiers, they gave to their country their own lives and the happiness of their loved ones forever."

I read also two resolutions of the citizens of Chicago, through their committee of funeral arrangements:

"Resolved, That this meeting deplore the sad calamity which has fallen upon Chicago in the loss of one of her most gifted sons, which has fallen upon Illinois in the loss of one of her ablest citizens, on the country in the loss of one of her bravest and most patriotic soldiers."

"Resolved, That to the noble-hearted widow of the gallant Mulligan we offer our tenderest consolation. She has shown by her devotion to her husband through the campaign a sacrificing spirit worthy of the patriot she loved, and worthy of that devotion that such a gallant soldier and noble-hearted man bestowed upon her. We pray for permission to mingle our tears with her's over the tomb that will enshrine her husband and brother. Chicago's children—their country's braves."

I also read a letter from General Grant to President Johnson:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES,
WASHINGTON, April 18, 1867.

SIR: I have the honor to recommend Colonel James A. Mulligan, twenty-third Illinois volunteer infantry, for promotion to the rank of brigadier general of volunteers, to date from September 1, 1861. From the above date to the date of his death Colonel Mulligan exercised a command at all times, I believe, equal to that of a brigadier general. In August, 1864, he was killed, leaving a widow and several children to mourn his loss, and who will be much benefited by this recognition of the services of Colonel Mulligan.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
U. S. GRANT, General.
His Excellency, A. JOHNSON,
President of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, the passage of this bill will be approved by the General of the Army; will be approved by the people as an act of justice due from the Government to the widow and children of him who was the means of so materially aiding the Union in its hour of peril, and who died a martyr's death in its defense.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SITGREAVES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

O. P. SHIRAS.

Mr. GARFIELD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back House bill No. 1077, for the relief of O. P. Shiras, with a recommendation that it do pass.

It directs the paymaster to pay to Oliver P. Shiras, lately commissioned as first lieutenant in the twenty-seventh regiment Iowa volunteer infantry, the full pay and emoluments of a first lieutenant of infantry from the 10th of August, 1862, to the 28th of February, 1863.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed unanimously.

Mr. GARFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. DODGE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported adversely on the following cases, and the same were laid on the table: The petition of members of the seventh Iowa cavalry, asking allowances for transportation, &c.; and

The papers relating to the claim of E. E. Woodman, late captain company B, thirteenth Wisconsin volunteer infantry.

A. W. BALLARD.

Mr. DODGE also, from the same committee, reported back House bill No. 553, for the relief of A. W. Ballard, with a substitute.

The substitute, which was read, directs the Quartermaster General to allow and settle the claim of Captain A. W. Ballard, late captain thirteenth regiment United States colored infantry, for value of lost vouchers for corn issued by Benton Stearns, lieutenant of twenty-second Michigan volunteer infantry, late assistant quartermaster at Washington, Arkansas, November 15, 1865, the same being now suspended under act of Congress of February 19, 1867.

Mr. ROSS. I would like to have the report read.

Mr. DODGE. The facts are simply these: this officer was in charge of the freedmen there and turned over to the proper quartermaster the corn that was raised on the farms. He received from that quartermaster a voucher, and when that voucher came to the Department it here for settlement, under the law quoted in the bill, it could not be allowed. There is no money in the bill. It simply allows the vouchers. I ask the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DODGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CLOTHING FOR UNITED STATES TROOPS.

Mr. DODGE, from the same committee, reported a joint resolution (H. R. No. 281) authorizing the issue of clothing to company F, eighteenth United States infantry; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution authorizes the Secretary of War to issue to thirty-three enlisted men of company F, eighteenth regiment United States infantry, clothing in lieu of and equal in amount to that lost by them in crossing the North Platte river in June, 1866.

Mr. DODGE. The facts of the case are, that this company were crossing the North Platte river in a ferry-boat. Their clothing was in a Government wagon. The boat was sunk and the team lost, with all their clothing. Heretofore there has been a law allowing the reissue of clothing in some cases, but that act expired with the end of the war. The War Department asks for the passage of this resolution, authorizing a reissue to the men of the clothing they lost. I ask the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DODGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

H. G. AUKENY.

Mr. DODGE, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1130) for the relief of H. G. Aukeny, late captain fourth Iowa infantry; which was read a first and second time.

The bill instructs the Secretary of War to reimburse H. G. Aukeny, late captain fourth Iowa infantry, $299.59 out of any appropriation made or hereafter to be made for the recruiting service of the United States Army.

Mr. DODGE. This is a case where vouchers for recruiting services were lost. This officer brought to the Army some sixty recruits, at an expense of a little over five dollars apiece, or $300. His vouchers were lost after the battle of Pea Ridge on the way from Pea Ridge to headquarters at St. Louis, and though duplicates of everything were shown to us, this is the only method in which the officer can get pay for the money he advanced to get the recruits there. I move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DODGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PETER J. BURCHELL.

On motion of Mr. GARFIELD, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 744) for the relief of Peter J. Burchell, of Kane county, Illinois, and the same was referred to the Committee of Claims.

J. E. ST. CLAIR.

Mr. GARFIELD, from the same committee, also reported adversely upon the petition of J. E. St. Clair, for the payment of a company of men exempt from draft, organized at Columbus, Ohio; which was laid on the table.

SOLDIERS' BOUNTIES.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have been instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to make an adverse report upon the petition of sundry soldiers for bounty, &c., as we expect to report a general bill on the subject.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Do the committee expect to report a general bill to cover the principle in the Mrs. Mulligan case?

Mr. GARFIELD. Not with my consent.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. They will have to do it to carry out the precedent in that case, and that will involve the expenditure of several million dollars.

Mr. GARFIELD. That was the report of a mere majority of the committee. I move that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the petition in relation to soldiers' bounties, &c., and that the same be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

JONATHAN G. HORTON.

Mr. KETCHAM, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported adversely upon the petition of Jonathan G. Horton, for relief; which was laid on the table.

WILLIAM A. HOWARD.

Mr. KETCHAM, from the same committee, also reported adversely upon the memorial of William A. Howard, late lieutenant colonel of Maine artillery and colonel of the thirteenth United States heavy artillery, praying for relief from the stoppage of his pay as an officer on account of informal muster; which was laid on the table.

FORT LEAVENWORTH RESERVATION.

Mr. DODGE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, with a recommendation that the same be passed, House bill No. 938, to authorize the sale of twenty acres of land in the military reservation at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The preamble to the bill states that on the 13th of November, 1860, the Secretary of War, on behalf of the United States and in accordance with the previous practice of the War Department, executed to Samuel Denman, William H. Russell, and Thomas Ewing, jr., and their assigns, a lease of twenty acres of land in the military reserve at Fort Leavenworth, in the State of Kansas, for the term of sixteen years thereafter, with a preference to them of an extension of the term and with an exclusive right to them to mine for coal in the lands of the said military reservation; that the said lessees and their assigns accepted said lease, and upon the faith thereof have prosecuted their mining operations under many difficulties and at great expense, and have finally succeeded in striking the deep coal beds of that geological region after having expended their entire capital to the amount of $40,000.

The preamble further states that it is now discovered that the said lease is invalid because the Secretary of War was not authorized by law to make the same, by reason of which the said lessees are deprived of their right to proceed, and are threatened with the total loss of their money and are without redress; that in view of the incalculable benefit to be derived, not only by the State of Kansas, but by the whole country adjacent thereto, from the development of the coal strata of this region, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Kansas, on the 18th of January, 1868, concurred in a joint resolution reciting the foregoing facts and respectfully requested this Congress to act in the premises; and that the House of Representatives of the United States have heretofore passed an act directing the sale, in small tracts, of a body of land in the said military reserve.

The first section of the bill provides that the Leavenworth Coal Company, being the successors and assignees of Samuel Denman, William H. Russell, and Thomas Ewing, jr., under the lease referred to in the preamble, shall have the right to purchase from the United States twenty acres of land lying in the military reserve at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, and described as follows: beginning at the intersection of the south line of the military reserve with the Missouri river, running northwardly thence along the west bank of said river, thence westwardly in a line parallel to the south line of the military reserve, thence southwardly on a line at right angles with the south line of the military reserve, thence eastwardly on the said south line to the point of beginning; said lines to be run so as to make the form of the twenty acres as nearly square as practicable. The Leavenworth Coal Company are to pay therefor the sum fixed by the commander of the department, the chief commissary, and quartermaster of the department; and the lease is extended sixteen years from this date.

The second section provides that, upon the payment of the purchase money, the Secretary of the Interior shall issue to the Leavenworth Coal Company, its successors and assigns, a patent for the lands, each patent granting the exclusive right to mine for all coal underlying the lands now comprised in the military reserve.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I trust this bill will not be passed without some satisfactory explanation.

Mr. PAINE. I would like to put a question to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. DODGE,] if he will yield to me.

Mr. DODGE. Certainly.

Mr. PAINE. I would like to know the date of that lease.

Mr. DODGE. I will explain. This lease was made November 13, 1860, by the Secretary of War.

Mr. PAINE. What was the name of the Secretary of War? I believe it was John B. Floyd.

Mr. ROSS. I would like to know why it is proposed to sell the land. I understood that this was originally intended to be a lease, and that on account of some informality the lease was not legal. Now, why not renew the lease, instead of selling the land? I understand that this bill proposes to sell the land to this company.

Mr. DODGE. I will explain. The company went under this lease and sunk a shaft about six hundred and fifty feet. Then when the renewal of the lease was asked, being approved by the present Secretary of War and Quartermaster General, it was discovered that the power to make a lease had been taken from the War Department and placed in the Interior Department. I should state that before that time the lease had been extended. Since that time a bill has passed this House authorizing the sale of this reservation; and the coal company now asks to have a priority in the purchase at such a price as the commander of the department, the chief commissary, and chief quartermaster shall fix, and that the lease, which has been extended, shall be confirmed. The company have spent upon their improvements about forty thousand dollars. The company claim that they have expended over fifty thousand dollars; and it appears from the statement of the chief quartermaster of the department that they have certainly spent about forty thousand dollars. It is believed that the operations of this company will be a great advantage to the Government.

Mr. ROSS. Why could not the land be sold subject to the lease? Are not these officers who are to make the appraisalment interested in the mining operations?

Mr. DODGE. I should think not, from what I know of the officers.

Mr. ROSS. It seems to me the property ought to be put up at public sale, subject to the lease.

Mr. DODGE. If it were sold to other parties subject to the lease, it would be a wrong to these parties who have spent $40,000 upon their improvements, which would then go to the benefit of others.

Mr. ROSS. Other parties could not take advantage of those improvements until the lease had expired. The lease is all the Government has ever contracted to give this company.

Mr. DODGE. This lease was first extended by the War Department. Afterward it was found that the authority to lease had been taken away from the War Department and given to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. ROSS. But I understand that the lease has been extended by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. DODGE. Not at all; it was extended by the Secretary of War.

Mr. ROSS. Then let the lease be extended according to the original contract.

Mr. DODGE. The bill does that.

Mr. ROSS. It proposes to sell the land to the company.

Mr. DODGE. It proposes that these parties shall come in and buy the land at a price to be fixed by the commander of the department, the chief commissary, and the chief quartermaster.

Mr. ROSS. I think that that is unfair toward the Government.

Mr. COBB. I wish to ask when it was discovered that this leasing of Government reservations was taken from the War Department and vested in the Department of the Interior, and why these men did not apply to the Department of the Interior? Does he not think that Thomas Ewing, jr. had influence enough to get the power confirmed?

Mr. DODGE. They are not the lessees now. They had the original lease, but turned it over to another company.

Mr. COBB. They sold out?

Mr. DODGE. Yes, sir; they sold out.

Mr. LOGAN. I think I know as much about this matter as the committee. I believe I am tolerably conversant with it, and I will explain it in a few words. There was a law taking away the right of the War Department to lease lands of this character, and putting it in the hands of another Department of this Government. Thomas Ewing and others, leased from the War Department, and at the time it had not the right to grant a lease under the law. They sold out to the Leavenworth Coal Company. One of the gentlemen who belongs to that company resides in Cincinnati. I know him well. He bears my own name—Dr. Charles Logan. They purchased from Thomas Ewing & Co., innocent at the time, so far as any knowledge was concerned of the right of the Department to lease these lands.

Some time during this session, when they had sunk shafts, it was referred to Thomas Logan, the attorney of the company, to examine the lease and give his opinion; and his opinion was that the Secretary of War had no right to lease this land. He was of the opinion that they had no right or title to the land by virtue of that lease. They then came here. A bill was introduced by the gentleman from Missouri providing for the sale of this land. The bill passed. The attorney of the company came here and placed his case before the committee, asking them to report a bill to protect the rights of the Leavenworth Coal Company. They had no rights at all after having expended their money upon the land, and he asked that they should be protected. This provides, inasmuch as the land is to be sold under the bill we have already passed, that, when the land is appraised, they shall have the right, after having spent $40,000 on it, to take the land in preference to anybody else. That is all there is of it.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Who is to make the appraisalment?

Mr. GARFIELD. General Sheridan, the commander of the department, General Easton, the chief quartermaster, and the chief commissary of the department. If the gentleman can suggest any who are better I shall be glad to accept them.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. It does not refer to General Sheridan or General Easton by name. I have the greatest respect for them. But they may not be there when this appraisalment takes place. Both General Sheridan and General Easton, are excellent men, in whom I have the greatest confidence.

Mr. GARFIELD. The committee selected those officers and named them in the bill by their rank.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. They may not be there when the appraisalment is made, and those there, who take their places, will make the appraisalment. I do not know but this is just and right, but the names of the parties who are to be the appraisers should be put in the bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman will suggest any other officers I am willing to put them in.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I will prepare an amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman will prepare an amendment to throw any further guard around this bill I am prepared to accept it.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I will suggest the judges of the United States district court for the States of Kansas, Missouri, and Illinois.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not think we can devolve such duties upon them without their consent.

Mr. PAINE. We can if we can devolve them upon military officers.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will let the amendment be offered, and then demand the previous question.

Mr. PAINE. If that be voted down will it then be in order to recommit this bill?

The SPEAKER. It will.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question was first on the amendment of Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, to strike out all after the word "sum," at the end of the first section, and insert the words "fixed by the United States district judges of the State of Kansas, the eastern district of Missouri, and the northern district of Illinois."

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I ask leave to modify by adding to the foregoing the words, "whose reasonable expenses shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated." It imposes an important duty upon these judges, which we all know they discharge faithfully, and let us pay them their necessary expenses.

No objection was made to the modification, and the amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question being put on the passage of the bill, there were—ayes 37, noes 23; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered.

The Chair appointed Messrs. DODGE and ROSS.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 58, noes 38.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. DODGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL MONDAY.

Mr. CARY. I rise to a privileged motion. As to-morrow has been set apart for the purpose of visiting the graves of our fallen heroes, and strewing them with flowers, I move that when this House adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday, so as to enable members to participate in the interesting exercises at Arlington.

Mr. SCHENCK. I hope the House will allow me to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SCHENCK. I am exceedingly desirous of taking up the internal tax bill to-morrow. We had an understanding that we should go into Committee of the Whole and get the Indian appropriation bill out of the way this afternoon for that purpose. Now, I think I have as much respect for the memory of the soldiers as my colleague, and I know he will not underrate it. I am perfectly willing that gentlemen who prefer to attend that ceremony, interesting as it will be, and glad as we all should be to be present rather than to listen to a very long, but as full and clear an explanation as I can make of the tax bill, with a view of getting the business of the country done, should be permitted to go without an adjournment. But I hope the House will not adjourn for any object whatever, but remain and attend to its own proper business. The best thing that these soldiers would claim at our hands, if they could look down upon us, as I suppose they do, would be to discharge our duties to the living.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. I desire to move a substitute for this motion.

The SPEAKER. It is not subject to amendment. If the gentleman's proposition relates to the subject he must ask unanimous consent to offer it.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. I ask unanimous consent.

Mr. PILE. I object.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. Let it be read.

Mr. PILE. I object.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CARY] will withdraw his motion till we get through the Indian appropriation bill. Perhaps then we will all be in a condition to vote for his motion.

Mr. CARY. It seems to me it is perfectly proper we should decide now whether we will adjourn till Monday or not. I do not claim any more devotion to the fallen heroes than others; certainly not more than the living hero who has just spoken, [Mr. SCHENCK;] but I desire that the House of Representatives should set an example of—

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, and Mr. PILE objected to debate.

The question being put on agreeing to the motion, there were—ayes 41, noes 57.

Mr. WARD. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 53, nays 58, not voting 78; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Archer, Arnell, Baker, Baldwin, Barnes, Blair, Bromwell, Cary, Sidney Clarke, Cornell, Dodge, Donnelly, Briggs, Blair, Farnsworth, Getz, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Haigat, Hill, Hopkins, Chester D. Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jones, Kerr, Knott, William Lawrence, Lincoln, Loan, Logan, Lynch, Mallory, Marshall, McCormick, Miller, Morrill, Myers, Niblack, Nicholson, Nunn, Polsley, Ross, Sitgreaves, Smith, Aaron F. Stevens, Stewart, Van Aiken, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, John T. Wilson, Windom, and Wood—53.

YAYS—Messrs. Amos, James M. Ashley, Beaman, Beatty, Boutwell, Butler, Reader W. Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Covode, Cullom, Daves, Dixon, Ferriss, Ferry, Halsey, Harding, Higby, Hooper, Jencks, Johnson, Judd, Julian, Kelley, Ketcham, Koontz, George V. Lawrence, Maynard, McCarthy, Mercur, Moore, Moorhead, Mullins, Newcomb, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Pike, Pile, Plants, Pomeroy, Price, Raun, Robertson, Sawyer, Schenck, Seofield, Selye, Stankweather, Stokes, Taffe, Trowbridge, Upson, Eliah B. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, and William Williams—58.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Allison, Anderson, Deles R. Ashley, Axtell, Bailey, Banks, Barnum, Beck, Benjamin, Benton, Bingham, Blaine, Boyer, Brooks, Brownell, Buckland, Burr, Calk, Chanler, Churchill, Cook, Eckley, Eggleston, Eldridge, Eliot, Fields, Finney, Fox, Garfield, Gravelly, Griswold, Grover, Hawkins, Holman, Hothkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Kelsey, Kitchen, Lafin, Loughbridge, Marvin, McClurg, McCullough, Morgan, Morrissey, Munson, Peters, Phelps, Poland, Pruyn, Randall, Robinson, Shanks, Shellabarger, Spalding, Thaddeus Stevens, Stone, Taber, Taylor, Thomas, John Trimble, Lawrence S. Trimble, Twichell, Van Aernam, Bart Van Horn, Van Trump, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Henry D. Washburn, Thomas Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Woodbridge, and Woodward—78.

So the motion was disagreed to.

INVITATION TO VISIT MOUNT VERNON.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has been requested to lay before the House the following invitation.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Regents of the Mount Vernon Ladies' Association of the Union tender to the members of the House of Representatives an invitation to visit Mount Vernon on Saturday next.

The Steamer Arrow will be waiting at the wharf (foot of Seventh street) at four p. m.

Members will have an opportunity to see Mount Vernon and its surroundings toward sunset and to return by moonlight.

MOUNT VERNON, THURSDAY, May 23, 1868.

The SPEAKER. The invitation will be laid on the table, and gentlemen who feel at liberty to accept it will, of course, accept it.

FRIENDLY INDIANS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a communication from the acting Commissioner of Indian Affairs, relative to the immediate necessity of an appropriation to relieve the wants of certain friendly Indians; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

On motion of Mr. SCHENCK, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BINGHAM until Monday.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, asked and obtained leave of absence for ten days.

On motion of Mr. MOORHEAD, indefinite leave of absence was granted to Mr. WILLIAMS, of Pennsylvania.

INCOME TAX.

Mr. NICHOLSON, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means be instructed to inquire into the expediency of allowing to be deducted from the gains, profits, and income of any person the cost of purchasing and planting peach and other fruit trees.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BLAINE in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of House bill No. 1073, making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1869.

Mr. HIGBY. I ask unanimous consent to go back and correct the phraseology of an amendment adopted yesterday.

Mr. BUTLER. I want to go forward; I cannot consent to go back.

Mr. HIGBY. It is only to correct the language, and not to make any new appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. That can be done in the House.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I object to going back.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending amendment is that moved yesterday by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Brooks,] to strike out the following paragraph:

Navajo Indians in New Mexico:

For subsistence for the Navajo Indians, and for the purchase of sheep, seeds, agricultural implements, and other articles necessary for breaking the ground on the reservation upon the Pecos river, $100,000.

The question was taken; and the amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraphs:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to take charge of certain stray bands of Pottawatomie and Winnebago Indians, in the State of Wisconsin, $5,000.

For salary of a special agent to take charge of Winnebago and Pottawatomie Indians now in the State of Wisconsin, $1,500.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to strike out that last paragraph, and I do it for the purpose of inquiring why it is necessary to have two specific appropriations, one of $5,000 to enable the Secretary of the Interior to take charge of these stray Indians, and one of $1,500 for a special agent?

Mr. BUTLER. There are two laws providing for these two different appropriations. One is to pay for taking charge of these stray bands of Pottawatomies and Winnebagoes in Wisconsin, and the other is for the salary of the agent.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I will state to the gentleman from Tennessee that these Indians have been in the habit of straying all over that country. No longer ago than last winter a band of them came down the Mississippi river to opposite Hanover in my district. They were utterly without means of subsistence and they began preying upon the people on both sides of the river, and if it had not been for this fund we might have been involved in a war. This fund has been appropriated for several years for the purpose of bringing the bands together and carrying them back where they belong.

Mr. MAYNARD. I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill. The following paragraph was read:

For actual necessary expenses incurred, and that may hereafter be incurred by officers of the Indian department in the rescue of prisoners from Indian tribes and returning them to their homes, and for expenses incident to the arrest and confinement within the territory of the United States, by order of such officers, of persons charged with crimes against the Indians, $5,000.

Mr. WINDOM. I move to amend by inserting at the close of the paragraph just read the following:

For completing construction of irrigating canal on the Colorado reservation, breaking and fencing lands, purchase of seeds, teams, and tools, construction of agency buildings, subsistence, &c., $84,500.

I send to the Clerk to be read all the information I have upon this subject, being the statement of Superintendent Dent, of that Territory. The facts he states I think are worthy the attention of members.

Mr. BUTLER. I would inquire of the Chair if it is in order to move such an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is.

Mr. WINDOM. It is for carrying on to completion a work already commenced.

Mr. BUTLER. There is no law for it.

Mr. WINDOM. An appropriation has been made to commence the work, and this is to complete it.

Mr. BUTLER. There is no law for it.

The CHAIRMAN. Works already commenced and in progress are specifically provided for by the rule. The Chair, therefore, rules this amendment to be in order.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask the Clerk to read the paper I sent up a few moments since.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Plats of survey for canal are on file in the Indian Bureau. Estimated cost about one hundred and twenty thousand dollars, but by Indian labor can be done for much less. The canal, now already under course of construction, is thirty miles in length, twenty feet wide, with an average depth of about nine feet. When completed, will irrigate seventy-five thousand acres of land. The work is being prosecuted by the Indians, who work with a will, and it is confidently expected that the entire work will be completed during the present year, affording a home for ten or twelve thousand Indians, and rendering them in the future entirely self-sustaining. Should this appropriation fail fears are entertained that the labor already performed may be lost by reason of rains and overflow of river. This appropriation is asked also for breaking and fencing lands, building of houses, purchase of seeds, agricultural implements, &c.

"There are but two reservations in Arizona—the one on the Colorado river, for which the appropriation is asked, and the Maricopa and Pima reserve on the Gila river. This latter is now self-sustaining, and with an Indian population of six thousand, whose boast is 'that they do not know the color of the white man's blood,' furnished statistical returns of products of last year amounting to $200,000, and during the year have furnished corn for supply of contracts to the Government troops in Arizona (Fort Whipple) at a rate one half less than has ever been furnished heretofore."

Mr. WINDOM. These facts were presented to me by Superintendent Dent. I laid them before a minority of the Committee on Indian Affairs—there were no more present—and they unanimously directed me to offer this amendment. I believe it to be good policy, and that the Government would save money by completing this work, because it would furnish employment to the Indians in the Territory, tending to civilize them, for if they are kept at work, enabled to raise corn, &c., they will be able to take care of themselves, and we would save the cost of keeping a military force there. If this amount, or a portion of it, is not now appropriated, it is said that what has already been appropriated will be lost.

Mr. MILLER. How much has been already appropriated?

Mr. WINDOM. About fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. BUTLER. I will read to the Committee of the Whole all the information upon this subject which was sent to us by the Secretary of the Interior to justify this appropriation. It is from a letter written by Superintendent Dent, of Arizona Territory.

"Referring to the estimate of $84,000 for completing the irrigating canal of the Colorado reservation, I again invite your attention to the insufficiency of the appropriation of $50,000 current this year to accomplish the whole work.

The amount above stated, in addition, I think, will complete the ditch, buildings, &c. I trust that you will concur in this sum, and effect its being appropriated.

Item No. 7, relating to the sum of $20,000 for maintaining Indians on the reservation that may be turned over by the military, I regard as very important. There can be no reasonable doubt but that the considerable force now engaged against the hostiles will conquer bands or tribes during the coming year, and it is highly proper that they should be immediately brought on the reservation, kept there by force, if necessary, and maintained until they can be made self-sustaining."

The proposition, therefore, is to appropriate $84,000, in addition to the $50,000 already appropriated, for the purpose of building an irrigating canal for Indians, a large portion of whom are yet to be caught, and brought in and set to work on the land which is to be thus irrigated.

Mr. WINDOM. The gentleman is mistaken on that point. There are several tribes of Indians there, two of them the largest in the Territory, I believe. They are now industrious, and have never been at war with the whites at all. Only a portion of the Indians, one tribe, is warlike.

Mr. BUTLER. Upon examining the whole matter as well as we could the committee came to the conclusion that this was an expenditure that could wait, and hence struck out the appropriation. The gentleman now proposes to put it in.

Mr. BASHFORD. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to say anything upon this amendment proposed by the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs. That committee made, so far as they were able, a careful examination into this subject, and although there was not a full attendance, the members present were unanimously in favor of the amendment now offered. Now, Mr. Chairman, as the representative on this floor of Arizona Territory, I wish to state what I knew in regard to the Indians of that country after a residence there of some five years.

This amendment proposes to bring together some ten thousand Indians who now have no local habitation, no home, and put them upon a reservation. During the discussion upon this bill I have heard a great deal about our Indian policy. It has been urged that the policy now pursued by the Government is unwise. But, sir, can any better Indian policy be adopted than that contemplated by this amendment, which is to give the Indians a home, to put them upon a reservation where they can be self-sustaining?

The principal difficulty in making treaties with the Indians has been that when you have made a treaty, the Indians having no home, you have not been able to enforce it. You cannot punish them when they violate their treaty obligations. But when you put them upon a reservation, where they gather about their families, their horses, their cattle, where they engage in the cultivation of their fields, they always keep their treaties, because they can be punished when they violate them. Sir, the true Indian policy to be pursued by this Government is to place these Indians upon reservations.

Now, sir, this canal is some thirty miles long, some nine feet deep, and some twenty feet wide. It will irrigate land enough for all these Indians and some more—not Indians to be picked, as the gentleman from Massachusetts has said—but some Indians known as the River Indians, who are friendly when they are properly treated; who have always been friendly as a general rule. And, sir, they have only been hostile as the result of such a policy as is contemplated by this bill without the proposed amendment. Ever since the acquisition of this Indian country by the United States the Government has, through its representatives and agents, held out to these Indians the prospect that they should be placed upon reservations and cared for, as contemplated by this amendment. By failing to carry out this policy, you render the Indians hostile; and, sir, I say, not for the purpose of affecting the result of this vote, that the safety of the people of the country would be endangered if these ten or twelve thousand Indians should join hands with the Apaches.

Upon this reservation all the Indians of that country can be supported and cared for; and instead of being our enemies they will be our friends. We have heretofore raised companies of Indians to fight the Apaches, who have been our foes, stealing our property and murdering our people. I presume that this amendment was not properly presented and pressed before the Committee on Appropriations, otherwise they would have been in favor of it. I know that it contemplates the only policy which the United States can wisely pursue in regard to the Indians in that far off country.

Mr. BUTLER. I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that in this bill we appropriate $35,000 to take care of the Indians of this Territory. According to the official returns there are seven thousand of them. We appropriate $15,000 to take care of ninety-three hundred and thirty Indians in Idaho. Now, the amendment asks an appropriation to build a canal. A canal nine feet deep, instead of being merely for purposes of irrigation, looks to me like a manufacturing project. Somebody, I imagine, wants to get water power. It is an immense work, and must cost quite a large amount. I think it had better wait a year. The Indians always have been without it, and in my judgment they can live without it another year. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move the following amendment:

After line fourteen hundred and ninety-five insert the following:

For this amount to pay the expenses of two commissioners appointed to appraise the Cherokee neutral lands under the 17th article of the treaty of July 19, 1866, with the Cherokees, or so much thereof as may be necessary, $4,550.

Mr. Chairman, this small amendment carries us back in the history of that tribe to the time when they occupied a portion of the country I have now the honor to represent upon this floor. The history of the troubles with the Cherokee Indians is part of the history of the country thirty or forty years ago. They resulted in that tribe of Indians being removed, under the operation of a treaty made with them, beyond the Mississippi, and certain lands were assigned for them; and they were assigned under the special and specific provision that never in all future time should any portion of these lands be embraced within the limits of any State. When Kansas was admitted in the Thirty-Sixth Congress her boundaries embraced a portion of the Cherokee lands known as the "neutral lands." Those lands, by the treaty of 1866, which I have before me, were to be transferred to the United States for a consideration, and commissioners were appointed to appraise their value.

I submit that in view of the difficulties which have grown out of our treatment of these Indians, the best and saddest comment upon which is the many thousands of graves, the result of troubles in our own times, which honey-comb almost every foot of land from Lookout mountain to Chickamauga—I say in view of our past history and negotiations with this people and any possible future conflict which may arise from violations of the treaty then made—that it is proper their title should be peaceably and in good faith extinguished. And I think this small appropriation should be made to carry out the treaty made with them by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs since the close of the war in 1866.

Mr. BUTLER. I am glad this amendment has been brought up, for it gives me an opportunity to state to the House the reasons on which the committee have acted. In 1835 these Indians were possessed of certain lands in Kansas. Those lands they exchanged for some further south, known as the "neutral lands." Under the treaty the lands were conveyed to them by patent, with the condition that they might sell them to the United States, but they were never to sell them without the consent of the United States. A treaty was got up with these Indians by which they consented to sell eight hundred thousand acres of land at one dollar per acre. The late Secretary of the Interior negotiated the sale of these lands for $800,000, one dollar an acre, to the Connecticut Emigration Company, some neighbors of mine; but the Connecticut Emigration Company only promised to pay in the future, and the land was to be sold for cash. The present Secretary of the Interior set aside that sale as invalid.

Now, they went and made a treaty by which these lands should be sold again, putting in a proviso that nothing in the treaty should prevent the Secretary of the Interior from selling the whole of these neutral lands in a body to any responsible party for not less than $800,000. Under that the present Secretary of the Interior sold these lands for $800,000 to one Joy, and those lands to-day are worth five dollars an acre. A responsible party tells me that he will give five dollars an acre for the whole of them, and that many acres are worth fifteen and twenty dollars an acre—that some of them are the most valuable coal lands west of the Mississippi river.

Why, sir, this very day I am told that the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs in the Senate has reported a confidential treaty by which this sale is to be confirmed. The Connecticut Emigration Company and Mr. Joy have struck hands, and all of these lands are to go into the hands of Joy. By that treaty eight hundred thousand acres of land, worth to-day at least $4,000,000, are to be put in the hands of a body of speculators. For that reason we concluded not to pay any money for surveying. That is all we could do for the present.

Now, why do they want a survey? There are certain settlers on the land, and they want to appraise the improvements so as to buy the settlers out. They want us to pay for doing it, and I am not quite ready. It seems to me to be one of the worst jobs ever put up by this Government. We have a treaty with the Indians that they shall not sell the land to anybody except the United States. We can open a land office to-day and sell that land for at least $4,000,000, if we do not want to sell it at $1 25 an acre, or give it to actual settlers. Now, by this arrangement it is proposed to put eight hundred thousand acres into the hands of men who will make four, five, or ten million dollars, for aught I know, out of the operation.

A responsible gentleman told me yesterday that he had been called to testify, and he swore that he knew the lands were worth five dollars an acre. He said, "Give me ninety days to raise the money, and give me a good title, and I will pay $4,000,000 for them." And he would, no doubt, make millions out of it then.

It is not a mere possessory title that comes to the Indians. They hold the lands by conveyance from the United States, subject to the provision that they shall not sell to anybody but the United States, or without the consent of the United States; so that we can have them if we please. But here we are asked to provide money for the purpose of disposing of them to speculators.

I know I can acquit my friend from Tennessee of any knowledge of this matter, or intending to have anything to do with it. The case was stated to me, I doubt not, in the same way it was stated to him originally; and if it had not been for information brought to me which I followed up I should not have known what I do. And I wish to say again, if we do not stop this scheme in this House or in the Senate it will be carried out.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of saying that the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] in reference to the sale of this land, and subsequent sale by the Secretary of the Interior to Mr. Joy, has no possible connection whatever with the appraisalment.

Now, sir, as to the fact when this treaty was made, there was a provision in it intending to apply to settlers then on these lands. The lands were held by the Cherokees by a fee-simple title, and when it became known that it was the purpose of the Cherokee nation to transfer them to the United States, a large number of settlers immediately took possession of them. During the pendency of that treaty in the Senate, and before it was finally proclaimed by the President of the United States, there was a provision in it that certain settlers on the land at the making of the treaty should be protected, that the land should be appraised by appraisers appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, and that they should be entitled to the land at the appraised valuation. That is all there is of this question.

I do not know that I differ very much with the gentleman from Massachusetts on this question of the sale of this land. The appraisers have been appointed by the Secretary of the Interior under another provision of the treaty. They are well-known citizens of Kansas, and I believe they have performed their duties faithfully, and to the interest of nobody but the settlers who are there in the belief that they are provided for under the treaty to which I alluded—I mean that portion of the settlers who were on the land previous to the making of the treaty.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. Are not the last words of the article of the treaty on this subject these:

"Provided nothing herein contained shall prevent the Secretary of the Interior from selling the whole of it?"

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. That may be, but what possible connection has that with the question of appraisement? It is to be in the interest of nobody but those who are settled there in good faith. This money is to pay for services performed in good faith, and, I say again, has no possible connection with the sale by the Secretary of the Interior. It is another question entirely.

I say again, I do not differ very much with the gentleman from Massachusetts. I hope this whole question of the sale of this large body of land to the Connecticut Emigration Company will be fully investigated. I have not at this time a single word to say in reference to that subject. But I stand here in the interest of a portion of my constituents, of the people of my State, a few of whom are settled on these lands, and who are there in good faith. The lands have been appraised by appraisers, who have performed their duty properly, as I have reason to believe, and who ought to be paid, and whose duties ought not in any respect to be confounded with this sale, whether it was a fraudulent or honest sale, by the Secretary of the Interior, to any party whatsoever.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I quite agree with the gentleman from Kansas that there ought to be an appropriation for paying the expenses of the appraisement to which he has referred in his remarks. But while upon this subject I desire to say a few words in relation to the authority which is being exercised by the President and Senate under cover of the treaty-making power to dispose of the public lands of the Government in the occupancy of the Indian tribes. But first of all, I have some information additional to that presented by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] in relation to the Cherokee neutral lands, which I will state, and it presents the exercise of this treaty-making power in no very enviable light. There are some facts which will be new to the committee. I read this morning a treaty concluded between the Government and the Cherokee Indians, dated April 27, 1868, not yet made public, but communicated to the Senate, and printed with the caption "confidential," disposing of the eight hundred thousand acres of "Cherokee neutral lands." Thus far every provision of the treaty, and every proceeding in regard to it, has been kept secret from the public, from Congress, and from the people, and all who are interested except the parties to the treaty and the purchaser of the lands.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Who made the treaty?

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. The department of Indian affairs with the chiefs of the Cherokee nation brought here for the purpose. On the 19th of July, 1866, a treaty was made between the United States and the Cherokee Indians, which has been referred to by the gentleman from Massachusetts. On the 30th of August, 1866, Mr. Harlan, then Secretary of the Interior, undertook to sell by virtue of a provision of that treaty eight hundred thousand acres of land, known as the "Cherokee neutral lands," to a company called "the American Emigrant Company," for $800,000—a dollar an acre—payable in nine years, with interest, I believe, at five per cent.

Mr. BUTLER. A Connecticut company.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. Yes, sir; incorporated in the State of Connecticut. The Attorney General decided that that sale was not valid, because it was a sale on time, and insisted that the terms of the treaty required a sale for cash down.

Well, sir, on the 9th of October, 1867, Mr. Browning, Secretary of the Interior, made a sale of the same lands for $800,000, to be paid cash down, so as to meet the opinion of the Attorney General. This sale was to Mr. James F. Joy, who doubtless "rejoiced with exceeding great joy" that he had secured this contract. [Laughter.]

That is not all, Mr. Chairman. It was not convenient for Mr. Joy to pay cash down, and he then went to work to get rid of his contract and to modify the treaty, so that he might get the nine years which had been accorded to the American Emigrant Company in which to make payment.

Mr. JULIAN. Will the gentleman allow me to say a word, so that all the facts in regard to our Indian policy may be understood?

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. Certainly.

Mr. JULIAN. There is a treaty now being made between the Great and Little Osage Indians and our special Indian commissioner by which these Indians are to sell to us eight million acres of land, which, by the stipulations of the treaty, are to be granted to railroad corporations in Kansas, without the authority of Congress, and in contravention of the preemption and homestead laws of the United States. It is the most startling example yet given of the utter defiance of the authority of Congress by treaty made with tribes who have no shadow of right to dictate the land policy of the United States.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I quite agree with the gentlemen from Indiana that this is all wrong, and I am opposed to such exercise of the treaty-making power, unwarranted as it is by the Constitution, and a clear usurpation, and for which every man engaged in it ought to be impeached and removed from office if it were possible to impeach anybody.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. I desire to remark that that treaty, if made at all, has been made against my protest, as the only Representative from my State; and as soon as it came to my knowledge I protested in writing to the Secretary of the Interior as being a fraud upon many thousands of men who have settled in my State.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. Now, let me proceed with my statement of facts. On the 27th of April, 1868, a new treaty was made at the Indian department in this city between the Cherokee Indians and the Government, by which it was agreed that this American Emigrant Company should assign their contract to Joy; that Joy's contract with Browning, the Secretary of the Interior, should be rescinded, and that then the contract which the American Emigrant Company had assigned to Joy should be reaffirmed, so that he should have to pay the $800,000 in the nine years which the Emigrant Company would have had if their contract had been carried out. In this manner he escapes his contract with Browning, which compels him to pay the money at once.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. VAN HORN, of Missouri. I renew the amendment to the amendment for the purpose of stating that all this excitement has been got up in a few days past by parties in the interest of this "Osage land grant," as it is called here, being a rival railroad interest to that which is on the neutral lands. That is the cause of all the indignation which has been poured into the ears of members, and has misled them in regard to this whole question.

The fact about these neutral lands is that they belong absolutely to the Cherokee Indians, and the Government has nothing to do with them, except to assent to their sale when sold. They were given to the Cherokee Indians in lieu of $500,000 in gold which the Government agreed to pay them when they removed them from Georgia, Alabama, and Tennessee. The Government has kept these Indians out of the interest on that $500,000 ever since 1835. These are wild lands, unproductive, and separated from the other lands of the Cherokee nation by the lands of the Senecas and other tribes of Indians. Settlers were prohibited from settling on these lands. And members here will recollect the excitement created in 1856 and 1857 by the agent Montgomery, driving off all the settlers and destroying their houses.

These Indians have been trying to get the Government of the United States to take these lands from them and give them the money for it. Within two years a proposition has been before Congress, and strongly urged, for the Government to purchase these lands from these Indians. This House has refused, time and time again, to purchase these lands. After the negotiation of the treaty of 1866 these lands were sold. Congress was asked to purchase them and grant them to the railroad company that has now made the purchase. Congress refused to do it. After the treaty was negotiated authorizing the Secretary to sell the lands, they were sold at the request of the Indians, Congress having refused to make them public lands. These lands did not belong to the United States; they never were public lands, any more than the farm of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] is today. All this sudden movement, all this excitement, is caused simply by interested outside parties, who do not want this road built down there so as to develop these lands.

As to the lands being worth fifty dollars an acre, all I can say is that not an acre was settled upon two years ago. The nearest market is some one hundred and ten miles away. You can to-day buy for five dollars an acre lands one hundred miles nearer the market than these lands are. This whole excitement is got up on false grounds. When the House comes to understand the question members will see that what I say is true.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MAYNARD. I rise to oppose the amendment to the amendment. I confess that either I do not understand my own amendment, or else gentlemen here have gone off on the wrong tack. When I was on the floor before I gave something of what I understood to be the history of these neutral lands. Perhaps the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. VAN HORN] understands the facts better than I do. These were lands that lay out some distance from the main body. When it was proposed to admit Kansas, Mr. Ross, the principal chief of that tribe, was here protesting against the measure. But Kansas was admitted, with those lands inside its territorial limits. He then came here representing his people, endeavoring to sell the lands to the United States, knowing that his people would have again the same difficulty they had formerly experienced when they were in Georgia, Tennessee, and Alabama. As the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. VAN HORN] has stated, Congress refused again and again to buy the lands. But in 1866, we negotiated with those Indians a treaty which I have before me, and to one article of which I invite attention as furnishing the basis of this amendment:

"The Cherokee nation hereby cedes in trust to the United States the tract of land in the State of Kansas which was sold to the Cherokees by the United States under the provisions of the second article of the treaty of 1835.

"The lands herein ceded shall be surveyed as the public lands of the United States are surveyed, under the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and shall be appraised by two disinterested persons, one to be designated by the Cherokee national council and one by the Secretary of the Interior, and in case of disagreement, by a third person to be mutually selected by the aforesaid appraisers: the appraisement to be not less than an average of $1 25 per acre, exclusive of improvements."

To carry out this article of the treaty I have offered my amendment. What disposition the United States may have made of these lands since obtaining them under the treaty does not affect in any way the present question. It is very probable that these lands have been obtained from the United States at a great undervaluation. It is very probable that they have been obtained from the United States by indirection or by malpractice; for when did the United States ever make a business negotiation with one of its own citizens without coming out second best in the bargain? But this is a contract between the Cherokee tribe of Indians and the United States under that treaty, which provided that these lands should be ceded to the United States, and that they should be appraised by two appraisers, one to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, the other by the Cherokee national council. It seems to me we ought in good faith to make the necessary appropriation to carry out that provision.

Mr. VAN HORN, of Missouri. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I move to amend the proposed amendment by adding the following:

Provided, That the Cherokee neutral lands shall not be sold or conveyed except in such manner as may hereafter be provided by act of Congress.

Mr. VAN HORN, of Missouri. I rise to a question of order, that this amendment is not in order, as it proposes new legislation. It provides for the sale of lands that do not belong to the Government, lands which it never owned.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I propose to discuss that question. The treaty now before the Senate proposes to make a sale of the lands.

Mr. VAN HORN, of Missouri. How can we provide for the sale of property that does not belong to the Government? The amendment proposes new legislation, and is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules that the amendment is not in order. It proposes new legislation affecting the sale of the public lands, and cannot be added to an appropriation bill.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. Then I renew the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. VAN HORN,] in order that I may finish the remarks which I propose to make.

Mr. Chairman, I had the privilege this morning of reading the new treaty, as I have already remarked, which was concluded on the 27th of April, 1868, between the United States and these Cherokee Indians. It provides for the confirmation of the contract which Mr. HARRIS, when Secretary of the Interior, made with the American Emigrant Company, and which was transferred by that company to Joy. He thereby escapes the terms of the contract he made with Secretary Browning, by which he was required to pay $800,000 cash down, and secures to himself nine years' time to make payment. In addition to that, he escapes the payment of some interest, for under the contract which Joy made with Secretary Browning he was to pay interest from October 9, 1867; but according to this new treaty he is to pay interest only from the time the treaty is ratified. This treaty is made subject to three conditions: first, that within ten days Joy shall pay $25,000 of the purchase-money; second, that the other deferred payments shall be made as they fall due under the contract with the American Emigrant Company; and third, that the actual settlers shall be paid for the improvements upon these lands, subject to appraisal and payment according to the terms of the treaty of April 19, 1866.

Now, this is the treaty that is before the Senate of the United States. I protest against it, because the Senate has no power to make any such treaty.

The gentleman from Missouri asks what business have we with these lands, and tells us that they belong to the Cherokee Indians. Sir, the Cherokee Indians have no valid title to the lands at all. What is their title? It is true that a patent was issued to the Cherokee Indians for these lands on the 31st of December, 1838. By virtue of what authority? Under the authority of a treaty only, which, without the authority of an act of Congress, could not authorize a patent to issue conveying away the title of the United States. A treaty! Just as if the public lands of the United States, without the consent of this House, can be transferred by the President and Senate to these Indians, or to anybody else. The treaties relied upon are those of May 6, 1828; volume 7, Statutes-at-Large, page 311; treaty of February 14, 1833, Statutes, page 414; treaty December 29, 1835, Statutes, page 478, and the act of Congress of May 28, 1830; volume 4 of Statutes, page 411, and articles 2 and 3 of treaty of 29th December, 1835.

Mr. MAYNARD. I ask the gentleman whether they were not the consideration for lands of far greater value in Georgia, Alabama, and Tennessee, which were sold by the United States, and the money put into the United States Treasury? I ask him whether he stands here as the Representative of a constituency that will repudiate what was done by treaty?

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. Let me make my speech, and it will not be necessary to ask such questions. I would observe every obligation of this Government and repudiate none of them. I would now give to the Cherokee Indians the full benefit of a perfect title, and, to make it valid, ratify it by act of Congress. But I am combating now only the assumption of a power by the President and Senate by treaties with Indian tribes to sell the public lands. The only authority for the exercise of such power is found in 4 Hamilton's Works, 340; 7 Hamilton's Works, 518, 556; in volume six, pages 360-2 of Hamilton's History of the American Republic, and, perhaps, in the recently decided case of Wilson vs. Wall and wife in the Supreme Court of the United States, which, however, does not sustain the treaty-making power in its monstrous usurpations. I deny the assumption of such a right, because by the Constitution, article four, section three, it is declared that—

"The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States."

This is necessarily an exclusive power, and removes all pretense of a right to dispose of the public lands by treaty. I cannot now follow the decisions and commentaries on this clause of the Constitution, nor trace the limitations imposed on the treaty-making power. But a consideration of them all will show that it never was designed that the immense public domain should be withdrawn from the fostering care of legislation, and be at the arbitrary disposition of the President and Senate. On the 21st of March I had the honor to discuss this subject briefly in this House, and to exhibit some of the abuses of the treaty-making power in the four years preceding January, 1868. If this House is ready to surrender the power of legislation over the public lands, is ready to remain quiet while the treaty-making power is subverting the whole homestead policy and the homestead laws of Congress, then, sir, we will have abandoned the great trusts reposed in our hands. For one I never will. In addition to the facts I have already presented to the House on this subject I will read, for information, the following:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE, May 5, 1868.

SIR: I had this morning the honor to receive your note of yesterday covering a printed "schedule showing sale of Indian trust lands from January 1, 1864, to January 1, 1868," embracing sales under the direction of the office of Indian affairs in the following reservations, namely, Delaware, Kickapoo, Ottawa, Sac and Fox of Mississippi and Kansas, in the State of Nebraska, Sac and Fox of Missouri, in the State of Nebraska, Winnebago, in the State of Minnesota, and Cherokee neutral lands in Kansas.

In reply to your inquiry as to the character of the title held by the Indians, whether they had only ordinary Indian occupancy or whether a patent had been issued to the tribes from the United States, I have to state that a patent was issued 31st December, 1838, in favor of the Cherokee Nation, embracing the neutral lands, but to none other of the tribes mentioned, our records furnishing no other specific information touching the points of your inquiry.

It is in place to state that the acts of the General Land Office, in issuing patents in all such cases, are purely ministerial, resting upon verified returns furnished by the office of Indian affairs.

Inclosed is a map of each of the States mentioned, indicating the several reservations named in the schedule herewith returned.

With great respect, your obedient servant,
JOS. S. WILSON, Commissioner.

Hon. W. LAWRENCE, House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
WASHINGTON, D. C., May 9, 1868.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 5th instant, in which you refer to a schedule furnished by this office at your request, giving certain information in reference to the sale of Indian reservations during the last four years, and requesting that you be supplied with a statement of the character of the title held by the several Indian tribes mentioned in said schedule, to the lands in question, with references to the volume and page of the Statutes-at-Large, on which the treaties will be found under the provisions of which said tribes acquired their title to said reservations.

For your information on the subject I give you herewith the date and the volume and page of the Statutes-at-Large on which said treaties may be found, as follows, viz:

Delaware—Treaty October 3, 1818, article two and supplemental treaty September 24, 1829, Statutes-at-Large, volume seven, pages 185 and 327.

Kickapoo—Treaty October 24, 1832, article two, Statutes-at-Large, volume seven, page 391.

Ottawa—Treaty August 30, 1831, article three, Statutes-at-Large, volume seven, page 359.

Sac and Fox of Mississippi—Treaty October 11, 1842, article two, section one, Statutes-at-Large, volume seven, page 596.

Sac and Fox of Missouri—Treaty September 17, 1836, article two, Statutes-at-Large, volume seven, page 511; and treaty May 13, 1854, article one, Statutes-at-Large, volume ten, page 1074.

Winnebago—Treaty October 13, 1846, article three, Statutes-at-Large, volume nine, page 878.

Cherokee Neutral—Treaty December 29, 1835, article two, Statutes-at-Large, volume seven, page 478; and also refer you to an act of Congress approved May 28, 1830, Statutes-at-Large, volume four, page 411.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
CHARLES E. MIX,
Acting Commissioner.

Hon. WILLIAM LAWRENCE, House of Representatives.

I present these, in part, to show that for the last four years the public lands which have been sold by virtue of treaties with the Indian tribes, without the authority of any act of Congress, were lands the title to which was admitted to be in the United States except in the single instance of the Cherokee neutral lands. These were conveyed by patent to the Indians, but only under the authority of a treaty which could not confer a title. I know the act of Congress of May 28, 1830, is relied upon as authorizing the patent in that case. But in that act it is expressly provided as to all lands set apart to the Indians that—

"Such lands shall revert to the United States if the Indians become extinct or abandon the same."

But having now given my opinion in brief, and without time to support it by argument in full, that the public lands cannot be constitutionally sold by virtue of treaty stipulations, and that it is unwise and inexpedient to do so; and ready as I am, notwithstanding this, to confirm and ratify the title of the Indians to this Cherokee neutral land, I will briefly state some of the reasons why I will not consent in any form to give effect to any treaty which will surrender, as is proposed, eight hundred thousand acres of land for $800,000 in money. Among the reasons are these: these lands, according to the estimate of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] are worth largely more money than the price at which they are sold.

The interest of the people of Kansas and of all the country requires that the Government shall see to it that these lands are sold in small quantities to actual settlers at $1 25 an acre or less, or that they shall be opened up to preemption and homestead settlement. The Government could take the lands at $800,000 and realise by public sale to actual settlers more than that or a sum sufficient to reimburse the Treasury and open the residue to homestead entries. Or the Government could guaranty to the Indians the sum of $800,000 and realize it out of the lands and leave a large extent of them open to homestead entries.

If the Government has failed to secure the interests of the people as to those lands heretofore it is not too late now. We are here for that purpose. I need not argue the various consequences of a monopoly of these lands in the hands of one man. The hardy settlers who would buy of him would be compelled to mortgage the earnings of half a lifetime to pay for a homestead. From such evils as these let Congress deliver them. We can do it by law, and I call upon the Committee on the Public Lands to see that it is done.

Mr. KERR. It is past five o'clock; we had a long session yesterday, and I move that the committee rise.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 40, noes 44; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. KERR and Mr. SCHENCK were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 50, noes 42.

So the motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLAINE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being House bill No. 1073, making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending 30th June, 1869, and had come to no resolution thereon.

DECORATION OF SOLDIERS' GRAVES.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. I submit the following resolution:

Whereas Saturday, the 30th of May instant, has been set apart for the decoration of the graves of our brave soldiers who fell in defense of our country in the late war to suppress the rebellion: Therefore, Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the brave men who fell in defending this Republic in the late bloody conflict, this House, when it adjourns to-day, will adjourn to meet on Monday next; and that this House as a body will attend the decoration of the graves to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. It requires unanimous consent; but the gentleman can move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. I make that motion.

The motion was disagreed to—ayes 30, noes 51.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move that the House take a recess until half past seven o'clock.

On motion of Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, the House (at five o'clock and fifteen minutes) adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. BEAMAN: The petition of Sutta Brothers and others, of Detroit, Michigan, manufacturers, &c., of cigars, remonstrating against changing the rate of taxes on cigars, and praying that the stamp on cigars may be a revenue stamp instead of an inspector's stamp.

By Mr. BECK: The petition of Lieutenant Joseph C. Breckinridge, for allowance of pay for the period during which he actually served as aid-de-camp on the staff of General Nelson and General Thomas prior to his muster into the service of the United States.

By Mr. BLAIR: The petition of Willy Woodbridge, of Savannah, Georgia, for relief in the matter of captured cotton.

By Mr. BROOMALL: The petition of citizens of Montgomery county, Pennsylvania, representing that Salmon P. Chase, Chief Justice of the United States, and WILLIAM PITT FESSENDEN, Senator from the State of Maine, on the trial of Andrew Johnson on the articles of impeachment presented by the House of Representatives, did violence to the loyal sentiment of the nation, and gave "aid and comfort" to the spirit of the rebellion that attempted to destroy our Government; that, relying upon their assumed integrity and former professions of loyalty, the proper authorities, in the issue of Government currency, placed the likenesses of the said Chase and FESSENDEN, respectively, upon the one dollar and the twenty-five cent notes. The petitioners believing the said likenesses on said notes, in all business and social relations, do violence to the sense of decency of the community, therefore ask that Congress shall recall all such notes, and prohibit the further issue of notes of said denominations, until the likenesses of said offensive persons are removed therefrom, and their places supplied by those of men enjoying the confidence of the loyal people of the nation.

By Mr. BURR: The petition of Solomon M. Murphy, for compensation for horse lost in service. Also, affidavits accompanying.

By Mr. GETZ: Three petitions from citizens of Berks county, Pennsylvania, for the establishment of a new mail route from Oley to Lyons' station, via Green Hill, New Jerusalem, and Drysville, in said county.

Also, two petitions from citizens of Berks county, Pennsylvania, for the establishment of a new mail route from Oley to Douglassville, via Yellow House and Amityville, in said county.

Also, a memorial from cigar manufacturers, journeymen cigar-makers, dealers in cigars, and growers of tobacco, protesting against the increase of the internal tax on cigars to ten dollars per thousand, and recommending the collection of the revenue on cigars by revenue stamps, instead of inspector's stamps.

By Mr. HILL: The protest of 45 soldiers of the late volunteer army of the United States, citizens of Boonton, New Jersey, against the passage of an act to equalize the bounties of soldiers, sailors, and marines who served in the late war for the Union, which was presented to the House of Representatives by Hon. H. D. WASHBURN, from the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts: The petitions of Bowerman Brothers and others, merchants in New York and Baltimore, for an amendment of the warehouse law, so as not to subject tea, coffee, sugars, molasses, and spices remaining in bonded warehouses more than one year to any additional duty.

By Mr. HOTCHKISS: The petition of James Gallagher and 40 others, citizens of New Haven, Connecticut, in reference to tax on cigars.

By Mr. INGERSOLL: The petition of P. E. Roach and 86 others, residents of the county of Alexandria, for aid in the construction of a bridge over the aqueduct across the Potomac river at Georgetown.

By Mr. KELLEY: A memorial of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, praying Congress to grant the requisite subsidy to complete the Kansas Pacific railway.

Also, the petition of Mary A. Amer, widow of John Amer, late unassigned recruit for ninety-seventh regiment Pennsylvania volunteers.

By Mr. LAWRENCE, of Pennsylvania: The petition and document of Captain J. H. Eustis, for additional allowance for carrying mails in the State of Louisiana.

By Mr. NIBLACK: A memorial of George Fendrich and 15 others, of Vincennes, Indiana, remonstrating against the proposed increase of tax on cigars.

By Mr. ORTH: The petition of Markley Brothers and others, of La Fayette, Indiana, in reference to tax on cigars.

By Mr. PAINE: The petition of Frederick Sipel, for bounty.

By Mr. PERHAM: The petition of Hugo Eichholtz, late of the fifteenth New York heavy artillery, for a pension.

Also, the petition of Martin Burke, late a sergeant in the fifteenth New York heavy artillery.

By Mr. VAN HORN, of New York: The petition of manufacturers of lumber along the frontier from logs imported from Canada, asking a reduction of duty.

By Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois: The petition of cigar manufacturers and dealers in Illinois, asking that the tax on cigars be collected by means of revenue stamps.

Also, the petition of Dr. P. Gray, C. Truesdale, J. M. Buford, P. L. Cable, and 2,000 others, in favor of the early construction of a railroad and wagon bridge across the Mississippi river at Rock Island.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, May 30, 1868.

Prayer by Rev. E. H. GRAY, D. D.

On motion of Mr. MORTON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the memorial of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, praying aid for the completion of the Kansas Pacific railway; which was referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

Mr. WILSON. I present, Mr. President, a remonstrance of James M. Beebe & Company and a large number of mercantile firms of the city of Boston, remonstrating against the House bill pending in the Senate for the amendment of the bankrupt law. They set forth that the bankrupt law has been detrimental to the commercial interests of the country, and that the proposed change will be very injurious to the business interests of the country. I move the reference of the remonstrance to the Committee on the Judiciary.

It was so referred.

Mr. POMEROY. I present a memorial of importers and business men of the city of New York, remonstrating against the amendment to the bankrupt bill by which any extension of time may be granted. They represent that the bankrupt law has, in its practical working, proved detrimental to the commercial interests of the country, and that to enlarge the time within which debtors may avail themselves of its provisions, irrespective of the provision requiring their assets to pay fifty per cent. of the claims against their estates, as now in force, will be productive of serious injury to trade and business, without securing any public benefit or advantage to compensate therefor. This memorial is very respectfully signed by some of the largest business firms in New York. I commend it to the consideration of the Committee on the Judiciary, to which I move its reference.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I present a remonstrance on the same subject, signed by Alexander T. Stewart & Company; Hoyt, Sprague & Company; Hunt, Tillinghast & Company, and a very large list of most respectable merchants of New York, remonstrating against the passage of the bill by the Senate, which has already passed the House of Representatives, for extending the time under the fifty per cent. provision of the bankrupt law. I move its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present the petition of Elizabeth S. Lathrop, widow of Colonel S. H. Lathrop, of the regular Army, who died last fall, of yellow fever, in Texas. She is left in a very destitute condition with one child, and she prays for an increase of her pension. It is a case of hardship, within my personal knowledge, and I hope the committee may be able to grant her some relief. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I also present a remonstrance, similar in character to those presented by other Senators, against the modification of the bankrupt act. I move that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, presented a memorial of citizens of New York city, remonstrating against any extension of the time limited in the law for commencing proceedings in bankruptcy; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. RAMSEY. As there seem to be no further petitions, I move that the Senate resume the consideration of the joint resolution yesterday reported from the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish to present a petition.

Mr. RAMSEY. Will not the Senator allow me to get up the joint resolution, and then I will yield for the purpose he indicates? I make a motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It requires unanimous consent to do it at this time. The Senator from Minnesota asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. No. 137) extending the time for the completion of the Northern Pacific railroad. Is there any objection?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish, on that motion, to make one remark.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I object, and that will end the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution cannot be considered at this time.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I was going to say that I object to all business out of order.

Mr. CONKLING. I present a petition of citizens of western New York engaged in the business of importing Canadian round timber and manufacturing lumber from Canadian round timber, praying that the duty upon saw-logs and round timber for American mills be repealed; and that the duty upon Canadian common lumber, and upon all grades of Canadian lumber below common shall be equal to the Canadian export duty upon saw-logs intended for American mills, with a provision that if said export duties are increased or diminished the duty upon Canadian lumber shall be increased or diminished in the same proportion. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION REPORT.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution for printing the report of the Smithsonian Institution, have instructed me to report it back without amendment, and recommend its passage, and to ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution:

Resolved, That five thousand additional copies of the report of the Smithsonian Institution for the year 1867 be printed—three thousand for the use of the Senate and two thousand for the institution—and that said report be stereotyped: Provided, That the aggregate number of pages of said report shall not exceed four hundred and fifty, without illustrations, except those furnished by the institution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. POMEROY. I suppose that all these resolutions that appropriate money out of the contingent fund should be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ANTHONY. A resolution for printing is never considered in Committee of the Whole. A resolution appropriating money for printing, which comes out of the appropriation that is already made for the general support of the printing establishment, is never considered in Committee of the Whole, unless it is a joint resolution.

The resolution was adopted.

J. ROSS BROWNE'S REPORT.

Mr. ANTHONY. The same committee, to whom was referred a resolution to print fifteen thousand copies of the report of J. Ross Browne on the mineral resources of the States and Territories west of the Rocky mountains, have instructed me to report it back with an amendment, and recommend its passage, and to ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution:

Resolved, That fifteen thousand copies of the report of J. Ross Browne on the mineral resources of the States and Territories west of the Rocky mountains be printed for the use of the Senate.

The Committee on Printing reported the resolution, with an amendment, in line one to strike out "fifteen" and insert "ten," and also to strike out the words "for the use of the Senate" and insert "of which one thousand shall be for the use of the State Department for foreign distribution, one thousand for the use of the Treasury Department, and one hundred for J. Ross Browne;" so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That ten thousand copies of the report of J. Ross Browne on the mineral resources of the States and Territories west of the Rocky mountains be printed, of which one thousand shall be for the use of the State Department for foreign distribution, one thousand for the use of the Treasury Department, and one hundred for J. Ross Browne.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. RAMSEY. I should like to ask a question of the chairman of the committee before the vote is taken on the amendment. I had a resolution referred to that committee providing that a like number of the report of James W. Taylor upon the gold regions east of the Rocky mountains should be published and bound along with this report. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Printing if they took that into consideration.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes; but the report of Mr. Taylor has not yet been furnished to the Senate, and we were unable to make any estimate upon it, and this report is quite as large as should be in one volume. The other can be published separate.

Mr. RAMSEY. This report of Mr. Browne was not made to the Senate, but to the House, I understand.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes, it was made to the Senate the other day. I have a word to say about this resolution, as this is a publication in which a great many Senators, particularly western Senators, have manifested great interest. The original resolution was for the printing of fifteen thousand copies. There was an amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] to place two thousand copies in addition at the disposal of the author of the report. The ground of that amendment, I believe, was that a number of persons from whom Mr. Browne had received information would have no other compensation than a copy of this book which he might be able to send to them; and also that from the time he had ceased his labors upon this duty, and had ceased to draw his salary, and before he had commenced upon the mission to which he has been lately appointed, he had been occupied in getting the work through the press, and that there was no appropriation made providing for any compensation for that labor, and this will be a compensation to him. It is not without precedent to place a few copies of a report that a man has prepared at considerable labor, at his own disposal, as a sort of compliment, and the committee have followed that rule here. If Mr. Browne is entitled to any compensation, and that is a matter upon which the committee have no evidence—

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Has he not been receiving salary all the time?

Mr. ANTHONY. No, sir. It did not occur to the Committee on Printing that that was a proper subject for them to consider, but that it should go to the Committee on Claims. At all events, it should not be paid for in barter; it should be paid for by money if he is entitled to any compensation; and that is a matter we had no reason to act upon. One thousand copies are placed at the disposal of the Secretary of the Treasury, which probably will meet with the same designation as though they were in the hands of the commissioner.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Secretary of State, is it not?

Mr. ANTHONY. One thousand copies are placed in the hands of the Secretary of State for foreign distribution, and one thousand in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury for distribution, which reduces the number for distribution among Senators to seventy-nine hundred.

Mr. COLE. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Printing what number of last year's report of J. Ross Browne was published?

Mr. ANTHONY. I believe it was ten thousand, but I am not certain.

Mr. COLE. If my recollection serves me, the number was increased after the first order.

Mr. ANTHONY. It was.

Mr. COLE. And I think probably the demand for these reports may be so great as to produce that necessity again. I regret that the number has been reduced by the committee below what the resolution called for in the present case. The number for distribution by the Senate is now seven thousand and some odd hundred, but I am sure the demand will exceed the amount. The demand for these reports has been very great thus far. I have received myself a great many letters asking for them from all parts of the United States. They are useful not only to the people on this side of the Rocky mountains, but also to those on the other side. They contain a vast amount of information which can be obtained from no other source. Everybody, I think, is anxious to learn about that unknown country west of the Rocky mountains which has not heretofore been explored, and this report affords about the only source of information with regard to it. I regret, therefore, that the committee have not seen fit to publish the number called for in the first instance.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is within the power of the Senate. If they desire a larger number, they can so vote. If the work had not been very valuable, in the opinion of the committee, they would not have reported in favor of the printing of so large a number as they have proposed. It is a much larger number than they report in favor of printing of any document. As to the demand, I will say that there is always a great demand for books that are given away, especially good books, as this is; and if we undertake to supply the demand, the appetite will certainly increase by what it is fed on. I think so large an edition as this will supply, if judiciously distributed, nearly all the legitimate demand, and extracts from the work will be reproduced, I presume, in various forms. Still, it is a matter in which the western Senators are more particularly interested, and if they desire a larger number I shall make no objection.

Mr. COLE. These publications are made by Congress only, I believe, to meet the public demand. There is no other purpose for which such works are published by Congress, and if the demand is great I suppose it ought to be satisfied. We publish no books merely for the sake of publishing them and laying them away. We publish them to supply the demand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the first amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I hope that that amendment, reducing the amount from fifteen to ten thousand, will not be adopted, because I think that no work has been published by the authority of Congress since I have been here that is of so much value to the country as this work of Mr. J. Ross Browne. No doubt there is a very great demand for the work; and that, perhaps, is no criterion as to its value; but it is a very elaborate and thorough exposition of the mineral, and, to some extent, of the agricultural resources of the entire Pacific coast. It contains more information, in my judgment, as to the mining resources of the country than all the other books that have ever been published in the United States; and if there is any information that Congress can furnish to the people of value it is information as to these mines, for there is nothing in which the country is so deeply interested as in the development of our gold and silver mines. This work will be valuable for distribution in every part of the Union; valuable for distribution in foreign countries. It contains an account of every considerable mine that has been opened and worked upon the Pacific coast; and it shows how men can profitably engage in mining, and how the gold and silver that are embedded in the mountains of the Pacific coast may be brought into use. Much of the documents that are published here are of little or no value, containing speeches of members and communications of different departments about political matters, which are of very little consequence; but when a publication of this kind, which concerns the material interests of the country, which concerns the mode and manner of developing and enriching the country, is published by authority of Congress, I think that there ought to be a liberal appropriation for the distribution of the document. I think that is true in reference to the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office; it is worth more than forty cart-loads of much that is published and circulated here in Congress, and so with this document.

For these reasons I think it would be an economical expenditure of money to add the five thousand to ten thousand. Certainly it will not add very much to the expense; it is only a small item. As I understand, after a book is once set up and ready for publication it makes very little difference as to the number of volumes published, and I hope that the Senate will agree to publish the fifteen thousand copies.

Mr. ANTHONY. The expense is about a dollar a copy. Senators are aware that by law of Congress any person, bookseller or other, who desires to have any documents printed by Congress, can order them in advance at the bare cost of paper and press-work, leaving out the cost of type setting. If there is so great a demand for this work and it can be afforded so cheap, I should suppose that, very likely, some publishers in the West would like to avail themselves of this provision of the law, and could do so profitably if the demand is so great.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. President, the fact stated by the Senator who has just taken his seat is a matter that has been discussed for years in the Committee on Printing, on which committee I once had the honor to serve; but it seems to me this would be a very good case to refuse to print any extra copies at public expense. At the instance of that committee some years ago a law was enacted authorizing the Public Printer to print copies of any public document at cost, which might be ordered by anybody. The Senator says that this is a very valuable document, and probably it would justify a book publisher to publish it for sale on private account; but if we publish an edition of ten or fifteen thousand for gratuitous distribution, what bookseller would invest his money in such an enterprise? He cannot know in advance but that the gratuitous distribution will supply the demand. If we are ever to get on to that principle of printing only so many public documents as are needed by the Government and Government officers, and leave to private enterprise the publication of the excess, this is a good work to begin with. I have no doubt in the world that any enterprising bookseller might do well in publishing this document; that is, in selling or ordering it at naked cost from the Public Printer. If, therefore, only the usual number were printed, and no more Government money invested, I have no doubt the work would attain as great a circulation as will be secured by publishing the large edition now proposed by the committee. I have no doubt that everything which has been said of the value of this work is true, that it will be of vast consequence to those engaged in mining and who desire to make investments in mines and mining; but, Mr. President, what gentleman who desires to engage in that branch of enterprise would not pay a dollar out of his own pocket for a copy of this work if it be as valuable as Senators represent? It seems to me that this and similar publications are the very ones to begin on to strike off this unnecessary expenditure of money from the public Treasury.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the next amendment, to add to the resolution the words, "of which one thousand shall be for the use of the State Department, for foreign distribution, one thousand for the use of the Treasury Department, and one hundred for J. Ross Browne."

Mr. ANTHONY. If the total number is to be increased to fifteen thousand, I have no objection to placing a larger number than is there proposed at the disposal of the author. I suppose he can distribute them as well as anybody.

Mr. SHERMAN. I voted under a misapprehension a moment ago on the other amendment; I supposed I was voting on an amendment of the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. WILLIAMS,] to increase the number reported, and voted no. I wish to vote for the report of the committee. I will, therefore, move to reconsider, if necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves to reconsider the vote by which the first amendment, as to the number, was disagreed to.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 15, noes 9; no quorum voting.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think there is a quorum present. Let there be another division.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will again put the question on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. COLE. I observe, by reference to the Journal of the Senate, that on the 6th of February, 1867, ten thousand copies of the report made by Mr. Browne last year were ordered to be printed for the use of the Senate. Now, the work has been found to be of such great public importance that it is provided that one thousand copies of the present report shall be given to the State Department for foreign distribution, and one thousand to the Secretary of the Treasury for distribution, leaving a much less number for the use of the Senate than was provided last year. I believe the demand this year is much greater than it was last year. The argument of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARLAN] on that point is, it seems to me, conclusive; no publisher will invest his money in an edition of the work after a certain edition is printed for gratuitous distribution, and so we ought to publish enough to supply the reasonable demand.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to; there being on a division—22 ayes and 10 noes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on agreeing to the first amendment reported by the Committee on Printing.

The amendment was agreed to; there being on a division—22 ayes and 6 noes.

Mr. CAMERON. I move to amend further by making the number five thousand. I am opposed to this whole system of printing books—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment is not in order; the Senate have just agreed to an amendment fixing the number at ten thousand.

Mr. CAMERON. Then I am against the whole proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the next amendment, which has been read, as to the distribution.

Mr. ANTHONY. If we are to print these books for distribution at all there can be no better distribution than through the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of State. One object of this distribution is to promote immigration; and in no way can that be done so well as by distributing through our foreign legations copies to public men, to editors of newspapers, to emigration societies, and to persons who desire to become acquainted with the advantages of this country for immigration. I think the thousand sent to the Secretary of State and the thousand to the Secretary of the Treasury will be likely to do much more good than all the rest furnished to Senators, for they will be distributed carefully and to the very persons who the Senator from California says demand this book. Those who most require it will be supplied from these resources.

Mr. COLE. I have no objection to that part of the amendment appropriating one thousand copies to the State Department; but I cannot see what use the Treasury Department can have for one thousand of these books. The argument is very good so far as it relates to the distribution abroad.

Mr. ANTHONY. If there is a difference of opinion, perhaps the amendment had better be divided, so that we shall take the question first on furnishing one thousand to the Secretary of State, though I think it is proper also to furnish some copies to the Treasury Department.

Mr. STEWART. I should prefer to give them to the Secretary of the Treasury, and I will state my reason for thinking so. Although he does not do everything to suit me, in this regard he has taken special interest in diffusing this kind of knowledge, and he has acted with a good deal of energy in ascertaining the mining resources of the country, and he will take an interest in distributing the books where they will do good, because he has taken a personal interest in the question. I think it a matter of the greatest importance that the distribution of these books should be in the hands of some person who takes an interest in disseminating this kind of knowledge, and I believe the Secretary of the Treasury does.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will read to the Senate a note which I have received from the Secretary of State on this subject:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
WASHINGTON, April 4, 1868.

SIR: Learning that extra copies of the report of J. Ross Browne, esq., as special commissioner for the collection of mining statistics in the States and Territories west of the Rocky mountains, and James W. Taylor for the eastern division of the United States, now in the hands of the printer, are proposed to be ordered for the Senate and for the Treasury Department, I have the honor to request, that, in view of the probable favorable effect such a report, properly distributed abroad, would have upon immigration, you will offer a resolution providing two thousand copies for distribution by this Department through the ministers and consuls of the United States in foreign countries.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,
WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

Hon. H. B. ANTHONY,
Chairman of the Committee on Printing, Senate.

The committee have reported only half the number asked for by the Secretary of State; but I do not believe any other thousand copies of the work will go into hands that will do so much good to the country.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

PENSION BILLS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I now move to take up the resolution of thanks to Secretary Stanton which I offered the day before yesterday.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I wish to make some reports.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Reports from committees are in order.

Mr. VAN WINKLE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Elizabeth Steepleton, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 494) granting a pension to Elizabeth Steepleton, widow of Harrison W. Steepleton, deceased. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Henry Reens, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 495) for the relief of Henry Reens. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Riley H. Smith, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 496) granting a pension to Riley H. Smith. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Catharine Wands, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 497) for the relief of Catharine Wands. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Anna M. Howard, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 498) granting a pension to Anna M. Howard. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Margaret Whitt, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 499) granting a pension to the widow and child of Martin Whitt, deceased. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Lucinda R. Johnson, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 500) granting a pension to Lucinda R. Johnson. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Harriett W. Pond, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 501) granting a pension to Harriett W. Pond. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I will take this opportunity to ask the Senate to set aside a day next week for the consideration of pension bills. There are now seventy-five of them on the Calendar. I would ask for Friday of next week.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia moves that next Friday be set apart for the consideration of pension bills.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. POMEROY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 502) granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Irving, Kansas, to Albuquerque and Santa Fé, New Mexico; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CORBETT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 503) to establish certain post roads in Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 504) to amend an act entitled "An act to extend the warehousing system by establishing bonded warehouses, and for other purposes;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 505) to amend an act entitled "An act concerning the registering and recording of ships or vessels;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. RAMSEY. I move that the Senate resume the consideration of the joint resolution in regard to the Northern Pacific railroad. The Senator from Michigan, [Mr. HOWARD,] who had charge of it, is rather unwell to-day, and desired me to call it up. The parties who take an interest in the matter have agreed about the dates, and I think the resolution can be passed in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to; and the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. No. 187) extending the time for the completion of the Northern Pacific railroad was resumed as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. RAMSEY. I now move to amend the joint resolution as agreed upon by those who yesterday made some objection to it. In line eleven I move to strike out "five" and insert "three," so as to read: "shall commence the work on said road within three years from and after the 2d day of July, A. D. 1868."

Mr. CONNESS. In my judgment there is not any good object in giving an extension of three years; it is to be three years from July of this year. If the Government ever subsidize the building of a road beyond the grant in land over the proposed route it will be done before the expiration of two years. It will be remembered, too, that this provision is not that they shall agree within three years to build one mile of road, but that they shall begin by that time. I hope that no more than two years will be given. There is no sense in it, I think. It is withholding, as stated yesterday, large amounts of land from the public domain, and when a company get such an extension of time as they ought to have in reason, they should ask no more. I move to amend the amendment by inserting "two" in place of "three."

Mr. RAMSEY. Of course I do not desire any controversy about this matter. The present charter expires in July, and rather than run any risk I will accept the proposition of the Senator from California, though the affair is so far from his own country that I think he might leave it in the hands of others.

Mr. POMEROY. Two years is a very reasonable time I think.

Mr. CONNESS. I do not exactly appreciate the remark of my friend from Minnesota, that the affair is very far from our country, and that others should be permitted to manage it. The proposition I have made is the uniform one adopted by Congress when extensions of time are asked for. Two years have always been deemed sufficient.

Mr. RAMSEY. My impression is that this is the first time so small an extension was given.

Mr. CONNESS. I have such a bill before Congress myself, asking only an extension of two years.

Mr. RAMSEY. I accept the suggestion, and modify my amendment to read two years.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSEY. I move further to amend the joint resolution by striking out in line thirteen the word "fifty" and inserting "one hundred," so as to read "and shall complete not less than one hundred miles every year after the second year thereafter."

Mr. POMEROY. I think requiring them absolutely to build one hundred miles a year on simply a land grant is an unusual requirement. Fifty miles a year for any land-grant railroad is as much as we require.

Mr. RAMSEY. The friends of the measure were willing to require but fifty miles, but those opposed to it insisted on one hundred miles, and as I saw that this was a very critical time for the company, the charter expiring in July, I thought I would rather take it than have a controversy.

Mr. SHERMAN. This road is two thousand miles long, and it is to be completed, according to the terms of the present law, in ten years, which would be two hundred miles a year. It will never be built, even under this charter, unless built within five or ten years.

Mr. POMEROY. In regard to land-grant railroads, at first, when they are getting their capital and getting into operation, fifty miles a year is as much as they ought to be required to build. If they can build one hundred miles it is their interest to do so, and they will do it, but it is an unreasonable requirement to compel them to do it on penalty of forfeiting their grant. If this company were endowed with subsidies of money or bonds, such a requirement would not be unreasonable, but they have no such resources; they have to rely on voluntary capital, and they cannot even use the lands until after the road is built, and they must build at least twenty miles before they get any land at all. I think fifty miles a year is as much as they ought to be required to build, and as much as should be required of any land-grant railroad in this country anywhere.

Mr. RAMSEY. I should be very glad, indeed, if the Senate would vote down the amendment.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I agree with the suggestion made by the Senator from Kansas, that the requirement in the case of a grant like this, of the construction of more than fifty miles a year, is simply in advance to require that which we know will not be complied with, and at another session of Congress we shall be called upon to pass over the failure to comply with a condition which is not practicable, as Senators will see if they reflect one moment. This road is to be constructed from the western point of Lake Superior out into the wilderness. It reaches a desirable country when in the neighborhood of the Red river of the North. There is a splendid country, and as soon as the road shall have reached that region I look for good settlements to be made along that river. Passing the rich land that is watered by that stream, the road must then find its way into Montana before it can expect any great additional support.

Now, sir, this is a great work. If it can be accomplished with the aid of the land grant it is one of the greatest achievements this country has ever contemplated. Passing then beyond Montana across the mountains toward the Pacific scope it will reach again a desirable country; but for the main, after you have exhausted the business of Montana and the business in the neighborhood of the Red river of the North, the road must rely upon its great Asiatic trade; and I think that it has advantages to secure that trade of a very important sort which I do not propose now to discuss. But all that is proposed to this road is to give it lands that are to-day not worth one cent per acre to the Government. There is not a Senator here who would give for that vast region of country, unaided by some work of this sort, one cent per acre. Senators forget what it is that gives value to the public lands. As they lay out hundreds of miles in the wilderness they have no present and appreciable value. It is the settler opening up his farm, building his house, commencing the enterprise of a new country, that begins to give value to the surrounding lands. This railroad is to encourage the settlement in regions of country that are very difficult of settlement. I cannot see the policy of requiring of a company that is undertaking to construct a road across that great stretch of country, relying upon the Government only for land in aid of the work, as the law now stands, a condition that cannot be complied with.

Mr. POMEROY. I hope the Senator from Minnesota will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. RAMSEY. I will withdraw it, certainly, finding such to be the disposition of the Senate.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think we may as well say at once fifty miles a year. After the first fifty miles have been built the next one hundred will be much easier of construction, in my judgment, than the first fifty.

Mr. SHERMAN. I object to the withdrawal of the amendment. It is reported by a committee.

Mr. POMEROY. It is not reported by a committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. I object to its withdrawal until I say a word or two about it. I understood it to be an amendment agreed to by the committee. This measure really ought not to pass at all. A grant was made to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company of twice the usual land grant, four times the grant of land originally conveyed to land-grant roads. The road traverses a region of country two thousand miles long from the head waters of Lake Superior across to the Pacific ocean, through a region of country that is being rapidly developed by the discovery of mines, and by the opening of an agricultural country on the Red river. My own judgment is, that if Congress would act wisely, it would accept the surrender of this grant already acquired by lapse of time, because the parties who obtained the grant have failed to shovel a single sod of earth upon the ground, although they have had this grant for two or three years. They do not expect to move in the construction of this railroad until Congress gives them a subsidy. That is my deliberate conviction, because no progress has been made. In the mean time they hold this grant of land. In my judgment the Northern Pacific railroad will best and most speedily be built by dividing it up in short lines of railroad between different connecting points, say one line from the head of Lake Superior to the Red river, and another line across the continent, unless it is intended to give a subsidy, when it ought to be built by one general company. I know the parties engaged in this enterprise, and they are men of character, and as they think they can make progress with their work I am perfectly willing to give them some additional time. I do not wish to impede it. They have undertaken to make a continental road, which is an important one, and I think they ought to be required to make one hundred miles a year. At that rate it will require twenty years for its completion. Is the whole of this vast region of country to be held apart from settlement, the land reserved from cultivation, until a single corporation can build a line across the continent? Why, sir, in twenty years from this time this country will be teeming with population. I have no doubt of it. Three years make a revolution in a new country like Montana on the line of this road; and, in my judgment, in ten years from this time the region of country on the Red river of the North will probably apply for admission as an independent State. Why, then, give to a single corporation power over half a strip of country forty miles wide and two thousand miles long for a period of forty years; for at fifty miles a year it would take forty years. Sir, it is preposterous.

When these objections were stated to the men interested in this matter, they knew very well that Congress would never consent to hold back the settlement of that vast region of country that a single company might have a monopoly of a great grant for a line over two thousand miles long. It seems to me that if we were acting technically we had better let this grant go, let these gentlemen who have not yet undertaken the work that they proposed to complete—the time being out in July—give way to others; let others undertake the work and try to push it forward. But I do not believe better men than these can be got to do it, and therefore I was willing to grant them a reasonable time. Two years, as the Senator from California says, is a reasonable time. Within that time they must commence the work, and one year after the expiration of two years they must build one hundred miles, and one hundred miles a year after that, according to this amendment. It seems to me that is little enough.

The limit of time for the completion of the road, I believe, is fixed at ten years, which would require them to build it at the rate of two hundred miles a year. That may need some modification; but after the first two or three years they could readily build one hundred miles a year until the country is developed, and then they would no doubt be compelled to build the whole road within a reasonable time. That ten years is enough to build a road across the continent is shown by the actual fact that the great Pacific railroad will be built probably in five years from the time the first shovel was put in the ground. It does not require the same time to build a railroad on these vast elevated plains in the West that it does in the East, in New England, and in Ohio; but even in Ohio we have built one hundred or two hundred miles of railroad a year, and in one case three hundred miles were built through a difficult country in Ohio and western New York in a single year. I refer to the case of the Atlantic and Great Western road. It seems to me that the provisions of this resolution, with the amendments proposed, are reasonable, and it is all that we ought to do now. It is certainly all that I am willing to do.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I dislike to interrupt the Senator, but I hope we shall take up the order of the day for one o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, the unfinished business of yesterday is regularly before the Senate.

Mr. RAMSEY. I hope we shall be allowed to take the vote on this joint resolution.

Mr. POMEROY and others. Let us take a vote.

Mr. CONNESS. It will not take a moment to dispose of the resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think there is no objection to coming to a vote. I have no desire to defeat the passage of the joint resolution. I only wish to stand by what we understood before.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business of yesterday is before the Senate, being the bill for the admission of Arkansas.

Mr. CONNESS. I move, with the consent of the Senator from Illinois, that that bill be postponed for ten minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The special order can be passed over informally, if there be no objection.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If a vote can be taken on this matter at once, I shall not object.

Mr. CONNESS. It can.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It cannot be taken unless Senators stop talking.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If anything further is to be said upon it, I must insist on the special order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The special order is laid aside informally, no objection being made, and the question is on the amendment to the Northern Pacific railroad resolution, by striking out "fifty" and inserting "one hundred," in line thirteen.

Mr. RAMSEY. I withdrew the motion to amend.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator cannot withdraw the amendment, it being reported by a committee.

Mr. HARLAN. I think that amendment ought to be adopted. It provides that one hundred miles shall be constructed the first year next following two years after the commencement of the work, so that it is within three years that the one hundred miles are to be built, if the amendment should be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSEY. I move further to amend the joint resolution by striking out in lines fifteen and sixteen "1883" and inserting "1878."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

BILL RECOMMITTED.

On motion of Mr. COLE, the joint resolution (S. R. No. 27) to authorize the leasing of certain real estate in San Francisco, was recommitted to the Committee on Commerce.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of the Interior, relative to the necessity of immediate provision being made for relieving the wants of friendly Indians in the Northern Central and Southern superintendencies; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ANTHONY. There is a necessity for a short executive session of not more than five minutes, and the Senator from Illinois does not object to it. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and after some time spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 425) for the relief of Mary A. Filler;

A bill (H. R. No. 553) for the relief of A. W. Ballard;

A bill (H. R. No. 938) to authorize the sale of twenty acres of land in the military reservation at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas;

A bill (H. R. No. 1128) for the relief of Isaac Watts;

A bill (H. R. No. 1129) for the relief of the widow and children of Colonel James A. Mulligan, deceased;

A bill (H. R. No. 1130) for the relief of H. G. Aukeny, late captain fourth Iowa infantry;

A bill (H. R. No. 1077) for the relief of O. P. Shiras;

A bill (H. R. No. 1081) for the relief of John A. Neustaedter;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 256) for the relief of Martha E. King;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 280) for the relief of Mrs. Ella E. Hobart; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 281) authorizing the issue of clothing to company F, eighteenth regiment United States infantry.

REPRESENTATION OF ARKANSAS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1039) to admit the State of Arkansas to representation in Congress, the pending question being on the following motion, submitted by Mr. EDMUNDS yesterday:

That the bill be recommended to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to report the same so amended as to provide for the immediate inauguration of the officers elected under the new constitution in Arkansas, and for the immediate termination of the functions of all persons now and heretofore exercising civil duties in said State, and so as to provide for the continuance of the present military government in aid of said officers until said State shall be admitted to representation in Congress, and to provide for the admission of said State when the article proposed as article fourteen shall become a part of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, anxious for the passage of this bill and all bills that shall admit the reconstructed States to representation, I shall trespass but a few moments upon the time of the Senate. The debate has now run through three days, and the ear of the Senate has been wearied with the recital of legal opinions so often proclaimed in the years of the past and so familiar to Senators. I would cast aside this cheap legal learning that has so often burdened the debates of Congress and come to the practical consideration of the real questions involved in this and kindred measures for the restoration of the States recently in rebellion.

Three years ago the military power of the rebellion was broken and its civil power disappeared. When the conquest of the rebel power was complete the President inaugurated a policy that in a few months gave governments to the subjugated States and placed the control of those governments completely in the hands of men distinguished for their devotion to the lost cause of the confederate States. In one brief year loyalty was trampled down and the spirit of the rebellion swayed the councils and controlled the policy of those States.

Two years ago Congress submitted as the basis of adjustment the constitutional amendment. That amendment was scornfully rejected by the triumphant rebel governments. The riots at Memphis and the bloody massacre at New Orleans manifested to Congress and the country the bitterness of rebel hate and the lawlessness and strength of rebel power.

Little more than one year ago Congress grappled with the rebel power by the enactment of that great measure for the better government of the rebel States which gave suffrage to three quarters of a million of ever loyal black men. The work of reconstruction and restoration was then begun. During the past year the friends of reconstruction and restoration on the basis of loyalty and liberty have toiled with unsurpassed earnestness, fidelity, and courage. They have struggled against the influences of the fifteen thousand State officials we unwisely left in possession of power. They have struggled, too, against the malign influences of the civil officers of the United States. They have been forced to struggle against the commanding influences of wealth, of intelligence, and social life. The few loyal white men who ever remained true to their country, the seven hundred thousand newly enfranchised black men, the men from the loyal North who had sought homes in the land of the rebellion where so many of their comrades lay buried, and a few thousand repentant rebels, have battled during the past year for the restoration of the rebel States on the basis of loyalty and impartial liberty.

They elected ten constitutional conventions by decisive majorities; have framed nine constitutions, and have ratified the constitutions in seven States by a popular majority of more than one hundred thousand. They have elected thirty-three Representatives, twenty-eight Republican and five Democratic, and two Republican Senators, and are ready at the earliest moment to elect twelve more Republican Senators.

Seven States have complied with the terms and conditions we imposed upon them, so far as they can do so without further legislation on our part or further action on the part of our military commanders. These States are here asking us to redeem our plighted faith by restoring them to their practical relations. Who of us dreamed one year ago that these seven States, with loyal Representatives and constitutions indorsed by one hundred thousand popular majority, would be here demanding restoration and admission? And yet, sir, this is the fourth day of the debate in the Senate of the United States on welcoming back one of these returning sister States. Sir, I would welcome back these States with their reformed constitutions and loyal representation with a glad heart, with bonfires and illuminations. What do these returning States bring back with them? They bring back seven States pledged to the unity of the Republic, impartial liberty, equal suffrage to all classes and conditions of men, without distinction of color or race. These returning States bring us constitutions republican in form and spirit. The most republican constitution in the land is the constitution of North Carolina. I bid them welcome, a thousand times welcome, into the sisterhood of loyalty and unity.

The men who have fought in these States the great battle of restoration on the basis of loyalty and equality of rights and privileges are under the ban and proscription of the rebel officers whom we left in power. They are under social proscription. These brave men, who had carried reconstruction, have been compelled to act against the most powerful opposition. Professional men have been socially proscribed, merchants have been ruined, mechanics have been beggared, and laboring men have been dismissed from employment by hundreds of thousands. Thousands have been reduced to beggary and almost to starvation; many have been insulted and some murdered. Some are from their homes proscribed for their fidelity to our policy, who dare not return to their homes until we allow the officers whom they have chosen to take possession of their State governments, and by legislation, by law, and by State authority throw the shield of protection over them. And yet, sir, every effort to turn the rebel officers in those States out of power, to put the governments of those States into the hands of loyal men, as true to the country and to liberty as we are, men who have risked more than we have risked, and who have done what we have never been called upon to do, is resisted in every form. Away with all these quibbles, these doubts and fears. Admit Arkansas and her returning sisters at once, and hail and welcome our brave comrades who bring back these States as trophies of the battles they have fought and the victories they have won.

I am for the immediate passage of this bill for the admission of Arkansas; and when we have admitted that State, I am for proceeding at once to admit the other six States now ready for restoration. I will never consent to the adjournment of Congress until these seven States, that have ratified their constitutions and elected their State officers, are admitted to representation and their representatives take their seats in these Chambers.

But we are told that these States must not come in until the fourteenth article of amendment becomes a part of the Constitution of the United States. Pass this bill; admit Arkansas, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Louisiana, and Alabama, and within forty days that amendment will become a part of the Constitution. Twenty-two States, including Arkansas, have adopted that article of amendment, and there are six States with Legislatures ready to adopt it whenever we enable them to do so. When these six States shall have adopted it, then twenty-eight States will have adopted it and it will become, if it is not already, a part of the Constitution. I believe that constitutional amendment, submitted by the Thirty-Ninth Congress, is already a part of the Constitution of the United States, but many of the ablest legal minds of the country doubt or deny it. The Legislatures of Ohio and New Jersey have withdrawn the assent of those States to its adoption. Whether they have a right to do so or not, if the question remains an open one, other States may follow their example. Oregon votes next Monday, and it is possible that she may elect a Legislature opposed to the constitutional amendment, and that that Legislature may withdraw the assent of that State.

If twenty-eight States are necessary to the adoption of that constitutional amendment, I implore the friends of that amendment to admit these seven States at once, and thus secure the twenty-eight States necessary to make the amendment a part of the Constitution. If the votes of twenty-eight States are necessary, then let us avail ourselves at once of the proffered vote of these States. The black men of the South, to whom we intrusted the grand work of restoring the rebel States upon the basis of loyalty, liberty, and manhood suffrage, have, with unsurpassed fidelity to principle and at a sacrifice that no people in our country were ever summoned to make, achieved the victory in seven States. To them belongs the high honor of restoring seven rebel States, and of incorporating into the Constitution those provisions that define American citizenship and give it protection everywhere within the limits of the Union, the laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding. I make no partisan appeals. I would vote for the admission of Arkansas if I believed she would cast her vote against the party of unity and liberty in the coming contest. In this work of restoration we must trust the whole people of those States and abide the consequences. But, sir, I want the loyal people of these States to share with us in the coming struggle that shall settle or unsettle all that has been achieved in the field and in the councils of the nation during the last eight years. The men who have been so true, who have borne so much, suffered so much, resisted so much, surely cannot fail us in the great battle that is to settle forever the issues we have fought for on bloody fields and struggled for in these Chambers. I believe that these seven States now demanding admission, if restored at once, will give more than one hundred thousand majority for General Grant.

I hope that the motion made by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] will receive no support in the Senate. I hope, too, that the motion made by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. FERRY] will not prevail. Gentlemen of great legal learning tell us that it has no force in law whatever; other gentlemen, equally learned in the law, tell us that it has the binding force of law. Whether it has legal force or not there is I am sure moral power in it. If, hereafter, any attempt is made to change that portion of the Constitution that guarantees equal rights and privileges to all, the friends of equal rights will lean upon this fundamental condition for support. So believing I shall vote against the amendment and all amendments, and for the bill as it came to us from the House of Representatives. I wish that the loyal representatives of these seven States could at once take their seats with us in these Chambers. Then we could, in the language of that great convention representing three millions of voters, recently assembled at Chicago, "congratulate the country on the assured success of the reconstruction policy of Congress."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I fully sympathize in my opinions and feelings with the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts as to the propriety, at the earliest possible day, whatever may be their political complexion, of having the States admitted to representation in the Union. But, sir, I cannot agree with the Senator in saying that the Senate ought to pass the bill for the admission of Arkansas as it comes to us from the House of Representatives. That bill contains this provision:

That the constitution of Arkansas shall never be so amended or changed as to deprive any citizen or class of citizens of the United States of the right to vote who are entitled to vote by the constitution herein recognized, except as a punishment for such crimes as are now felonies at common law; whereof they shall have been duly convicted.

In other words, the bill provides that for all time the State of Arkansas, without forfeiting her position in the Union, and her right to representation, shall never make it requisite that a voter shall have the ability to read as a qualification; that they shall never have the right to change the time of residence required as a qualification of voting, or otherwise modify the qualification of suffrage; this bill holds that State down for all time to the rigid rule of the present constitution. For this reason, I think that this fundamental condition ought to be stricken out.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. DRAKE] has introduced an amendment to take the place of this fundamental condition, which amendment contains three propositions: first, that the fourteenth amendment shall be a part of the constitution of Arkansas; second, that the fourteenth amendment shall become a part of the Constitution of the United States; and third, that there shall be no change in the qualification of suffrage on account of race or color. As to the first proposition, that the fourteenth amendment shall become a part of the constitution of Arkansas, it is entirely unnecessary, as the Legislature of Arkansas has already adopted that amendment.

Mr. HOWARD. Is there any evidence before the Senate of that fact?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Yes, sir; there is no doubt about it.

Mr. CONKLING. Certainly; we have the official evidence.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. As to the other proposition, that the fourteenth amendment must become a part of the Constitution of the United States before Arkansas is admitted, I have a word to say. In the first place, that amendment has been adopted by twenty-three States, including Ohio and New Jersey, or twenty-one without those States. There are eight States now ready to be admitted, and probably will be admitted in the course of forty days. If Arkansas does all that Arkansas can do toward making that fourteenth amendment a part of the Constitution of the United States, I think she is entitled to come here. I have not heard any reason given to the pertinent question put by the honorable Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] as to how the admission of Arkansas into the Union, since she had voted in favor of making the fourteenth amendment a part of the Constitution, imperils or interferes with the fourteenth amendment becoming a part of the Constitution, and there is no answer that can be given to it. Certainly we do not render it less probable that the fourteenth amendment will become a part of the Constitution by admitting Arkansas, which has adopted it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Suppose Arkansas should repeal that vote, as other States have done?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I hold that neither Arkansas nor Ohio nor

New Jersey has any power or right, after having ratified an amendment to the Constitution, to withdraw that ratification. A State gets all the power it has on the subject of amending the Constitution from that instrument itself. The Constitution gives Congress the power by a two-thirds vote to propose an amendment to the Constitution, and gives the State power to ratify it or to reject such amendment. When the State has ratified the amendment, the power conferred by the Constitution is spent.

Mr. HOWE. What if it rejects?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. My friend from Wisconsin asks me, what if it rejects? The case is entirely different. I may refuse many times to make a contract and I am under no new obligation; but if I make the contract once, I am bound. A State may refuse many times to make a grant or to give a charter, and its obligations are not changed; but if the State once does give the grant or make the charter, then it falls under new obligations. The ratification of an amendment by one State affects and influences other States, and if it is a mere experimental thing and not final, it is bad faith to the other States; and, besides, we never can tell what is the fundamental law of the country. It will never do to recognize the right of a State to withdraw its ratification.

But what probability is there that these States, whose Legislatures are elected for two, and, I believe, in one case for four years, would repeal their ratification?

Mr. WILSON. The Senate of Arkansas are elected for four years and the House for two years from next January.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. But, again, I submit that the fourteenth amendment is now a part of the Constitution of the United States, and I think the Senators on this side of the Chamber must so hold. Ten States are more than one-fourth of the whole number of States; and can it be true that ten States can rebel against this Government and make an amendment of the Constitution necessary, and then have the legal and constitutional right to defeat the adoption of the amendment which their treason has rendered necessary? Why, Mr. President, if the fourteenth amendment is not adopted the thirteenth amendment is not; and then is slavery abolished? The fourteenth amendment has the ratification of three-fourths of the loyal States, and that is all the thirteenth amendment has. We have declared that the Legislatures of these other States which were in rebellion which have ratified the thirteenth amendment were not legal Legislatures; and further, if by reason of their rebellion the rights of the rebel States were not forfeited, this Congress was not a constitutional body having the ability by a two-thirds vote to submit either amendment.

I do not see the argument by which to avoid the conclusion that the fourteenth amendment is now a part of the Constitution.

The other proposition contained in the amendment of the Senator from Missouri is, that Arkansas shall be admitted on the fundamental condition that there shall be no change in the qualification of voters by reason of race or color. The principle I am in favor of; but, adopting the views of the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING,] in his argument yesterday, I seriously doubt our right to impose any fundamental conditions on a State; I am willing, however, to vote for a provision which will prevent any change in the right of suffrage on account of race or color, if the Senate holds that such a provision is constitutional, even while I entertain serious doubts as to the validity and force of such a provision.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. President, I would prefer speaking to this bill after the amendments have been disposed of; but I am admonished by my experience in the Senate that if, desiring to discuss the main question involved in the bill, I shall wait until the debate runs out on the amendments, I shall hardly have an opportunity to be heard. It is the habit of the Senate to discuss the whole question, or all the questions involved in the bill, upon the most insignificant amendment which may be proposed to it. I think this is a very inconvenient and objectionable mode of transacting public business, but such is the habit of the Senate, and being the habit or custom of the Senate members are obliged to conform themselves to it, and somewhat irregularly to discuss the main features of a bill when the proposition pending may be a matter of insignificant detail.

As I desire, then, to be heard upon this question of admitting the State of Arkansas to representation in the two Houses of Congress, I conclude I shall be obliged to go on before these amendments or motions of delay are disposed of, if I am to be heard at all, or to be heard in a satisfactory manner; because at the end of a prolonged debate, when the Senate is wearied with the subject and is anxious to conclude its labors upon it; when perhaps the pressure of some dinner hour or of some protracted evening hour is upon us, Senators have very little opportunity for a hearing and a fair consideration of their views. But a gentleman near me suggests that a vote may be taken without much difficulty upon this question of reference, and I will stand aside for a moment if that object can be reached.

Mr. POMEROY. I hope we shall take the vote on the question of reference. If the bill is to be referred, it will not be necessary to discuss the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to have it distinctly understood that any Senator who votes for this resolution proposed by the Senator from Vermont, votes to affirm the doctrine distinctly that the fourteenth amendment is not any part of the Constitution by virtue of the ratification of three-fourths of the loyal States, a proposition the correctness of which I am not now prepared to admit. Of course I know the impatience of the Senate, and I refrain from description; but I do not wish to acquiesce in that doctrine; and I should be glad if opportunity was afforded to discuss the question as to the constitutional power of a State to rescind a ratification once made. In my humble opinion, if there is any proposition clear in law it is that a State has no such power. But I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the nature of this resolution before the vote is taken.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am satisfied the question of reference will open the whole debate, because a reference at this stage of the session will be, substantially, the defeat of the bill. I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will proceed now if he wishes to do so; or if we can take the question without debate, let us do so.

Mr. FESSENDEN. What is the question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the reference of the bill with the amendments to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to hear those instructions read.

The Chief Clerk read the motion of Mr. EDMUNDS, as follows:

That the bill be recommended to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to report the same so amended as to provide for the immediate inauguration of the officers elected under the new constitution in Arkansas, and for the immediate termination of the functions of all persons now and heretofore exercising civil duties in said State, and so as to provide for the continuance of the present military government in aid of said officers until said State shall be admitted to representation in Congress, and to provide for the admission of said State when the article proposed as article fourteen shall become a part of the Constitution of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore put the question on the motion to recommend, and declared the yeas appeared to have it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The honorable Senator who made the motion is not present, and it would seem to be indecorous to him that the question should be taken in his absence.

Mr. STEWART. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion.

Mr. FERRY. They were ordered yesterday.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish to add to what the Senator from Wisconsin said—it did not occur to me before—the Senator from Vermont stepped out a moment ago on a necessary errand, saying to me that he was obliged to go out for a moment, but he wished to be here before the vote was taken.

Mr. STEWART. We can send for him when the yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. POMEROY. The yeas and nays were ordered yesterday.

Mr. ANTHONY. The discussion may just as well go on on the question of reference. I hope we shall wait until the Senator from Vermont comes in before taking the vote on his motion.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I can speak as well at one time as another.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. President, although the debate upon this question of the admission of Arkansas to representation in Congress has been continued through two or three daily sessions, very little has been said, in my opinion, upon the real or material points which are involved in the bill sent us by the House of Representatives. I am opposed to the passage of this bill, and will endeavor, within as brief a space of time as possible, to state those objections in a fair and candid manner.

I protest, in the outset, that I am not, so far as I know, moved or prompted in this opposition by political prejudice or by any impulse of political interest. I think it very likely that if any one of the States of the South shall vote in accordance with my ideas of public policy, or according to my preferences as between parties, it is as likely to be this State of Arkansas as any other. I come to that conclusion from the facts which are before us, the division between the two races of population in that State as to numbers, and other facts which I need not now recite.

But, sir, I find lodged in my mind and operating upon my judgment objections to the passage of this bill which I cannot overcome. They are not objections which are general to all the States of the South, with reference to which legislation is now proposed in the two Houses of Congress. They are not objections which go back to the reconstruction act of March 2, 1867, or to the several supplements to that act which have been since enacted by the two Houses of Congress. I hold such objections, to be sure; but my opposition to Arkansas is not confined to them. There are objections applicable to this particular case, growing out of its particular facts, which, in my judgment, appeal to fair and honorable members of the Senate in a manner not to be resisted, if they are to form their opinions and to vote with reference to the merits of the question independent of other considerations.

The first class of objections which I have to this House bill in any form, whether as sent to us or as proposed to be amended, are objections to the new State constitution or to particular provisions contained in it. In the first place, I object to those provisions which are found on page 38 of House Executive Document No. 274 of the present session, which relate to the exemption of property from levy and sale upon judicial process. It is true this objection alone might not be sufficient to overrule the demand of a State to be heard in the Halls of Congress where the laws of the country are to be made. I mention it, however, in connection with the others, and it is in itself an objection of no slight importance and deserves a very considerable degree of attention. The twelfth article of the constitution provides as follows:

"Sec. 1. The personal property of any resident of this State to the value of $2,000, to be selected by such resident, shall be exempted from sale on execution or other final process of any court issued for the collection of any debt contracted after the adoption of this constitution."

"Sec. 3. Every homestead not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres of land, and the dwelling and appurtenances thereon, to be selected by the owner thereof, and not in any town, city, or village; or in lieu thereof, at the option of the owner, any lot in a city, town, or village, with the dwelling and appurtenances thereon, owned and occupied by any resident of this State, and not exceeding the value of $5,000, shall be exempted from sale on execution or any other final process from any court."

The fourth section provides that in case of the death of a debtor without children this exemption shall extend to his widow during her widowhood.

The fifth section provides that—

"The homestead of a family, after the death of the owner thereof, shall be exempt from the payment of his debts in all cases during the minority of his children, and also so long as his widow shall remain unmarried, unless she be the owner of a homestead in her own right."

We find, then, that in the State of Arkansas, as it is proposed to reorganize her, good faith may not be enforced between citizens or "residents" of that State (as the expression is) in most cases of pecuniary demand. These provisions of the constitution are not to be confined to citizens, but to extend to every person who shall go there as to a city of refuge to escape obligations which are imposed upon him elsewhere. Any citizen or resident of the State of Arkansas will be free and exempt so long as the constitution shall endure against keeping the faith which he may have contracted to others in his pecuniary transactions in most cases which will arise. If he break faith, if he violate his word, if he trample upon an obligation of duty after having voluntarily assumed it, it is not competent for the Legislature or courts of Arkansas to enforce his obligation against him unless the value of his property shall exceed the sum of $2,000 of personal property and $5,000 of real estate. In other words, there will be no collection of debts or enforcement of contracts in the State of Arkansas under this constitution unless they are of large magnitude, when, of course, the bankrupt law of the United States can be conveniently applied to them. That bankrupt law will apply to large speculators, to extensive operators, to enable them to wipe out their indebtedness to others, while the constitution of the State, as to all ordinary transactions, and as to the great mass of persons, will interpose to prevent the enforcement of good faith.

What a contrast this presents to the condition of the law in our States North—in my own for instance, where, from motives of humanity, the laws have exempted $300 worth of property to an indebted man and to his family, so that the pressure of extreme and severe want shall not enter his dwelling, that he shall not be stripped of the last remnant of property which he has accumulated by the industry of himself and his family, and thus be made a pitiable spectacle of human misfortune. The principle of exemption is a just and benevolent one, and it ought to be incorporated in the legislation of every civilized State. But a reasonable exercise of this just authority of government to exempt is one thing, while its unreasonable exercise in establishing a nondescript State of the American Union is quite another; and when we come to consider that these particular provisions of the constitution were intended to meet exactly the case of the persons who made this constitution, whether negro, carpet-bagger, or other person, having but little stake in civil society so far as the ownership of property is concerned, and come also to consider the inevitable effect of these provisions, our conclusion must be that the constitution is both odious and imprudent, and that the State should not be admitted to representation under it.

Again, sir, I object to the suffrage provisions in this constitution; I mean those of an enduring character. There are several provisions regarding the exercise of the right of suffrage at the first election for State officers and upon the adoption of the constitution to which I shall refer hereafter. At present I refer to those provisions relating to suffrage which are permanent in their operation, to be found at pages 33 and 34 of the House Executive Document to which I have before referred. In the first place, I will read section two of article eight:

"Every male person born in the United States, and every male person who has been naturalized or has legally declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States, who is twenty-one years old or upward, and who shall have resided in the State six months next preceding the election, and who at the time is an actual resident of the county in which he offers to vote, except as hereinafter provided, shall be deemed an elector."

And then follows a provision excluding soldiers in the service of the United States. Then comes section three:

"Sec. 3. The following classes shall not be permitted to register or vote or hold office, namely:

"1. Those who during rebellion took the oath of allegiance or gave bonds for loyalty and good behavior to the United States Government, and afterward gave aid, comfort, or countenance to those engaged in armed hostility to the Government of the United States, either by becoming a soldier in the rebel army or by entering the lines of said army, or adhering in any way to the cause of the rebellion, or by accompanying any armed force belonging to the rebel army, or by furnishing supplies of any kind to the same."

Whether furnished under duress or furnished voluntarily, for aught that appears upon the face of that section.

"2. Those who are disqualified as electors or from holding office in the State or States from which they came."

"3. Those persons who during the late rebellion violated the rules of civilized warfare."

"4. Those who may be disqualified by the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States, known as article fourteen, and those who have been disqualified from registering to vote for delegates to the convention to frame a constitution for the State of Arkansas, under the act of Congress entitled 'An act to provide for the more efficient government of the rebel States,' passed March 2, 1867, and the acts supplementary thereto."

That is, any citizen of Arkansas who has not been registered under the congressional proceeding inaugurated by the act of March 2, 1867, no matter whether his rejection or his failure to register be innocent or not, shall not vote under this constitution. That registration, we all know, was very irregular. There were vast numbers of persons excluded from the right of voting under that registration who were clearly entitled, and who, if the question were left open, would hereafter be able to vindicate their right. They are excluded, however, by this fourth division of the third section, especially when it comes to be administered by unfriendly officials:

"Sec. 4. The General Assembly shall have the power, by a two-thirds vote of each House, approved by the Governor, to remove the disabilities included in the first, second, third, and fourth subdivisions of section three of this article, when it appears that such person applying for relief from such disabilities has in good faith returned to his allegiance to the Government of the United States: Provided, The General Assembly shall have no power to remove the disabilities of any person embraced in the aforesaid subdivisions who, after the adoption of this constitution by this convention, persists in opposing the acts of Congress and reconstruction thereunder."

What does that mean? Whether construed by its authors or by us, its unquestionable meaning is, that any person of the classes mentioned who votes against the adoption of the constitution when it is submitted to a vote of the people, or otherwise opposes it, shall be excluded from the right of suffrage hereafter, although the Legislature may be willing to remove his disability. Any person who opposes reconstruction after the convention itself agrees to the constitution shall be put beyond the reach even of legislative clemency and mercy in future. They cannot restore him to the privileges of citizenship, or to the highest privilege of citizenship, the right of voting. What is this but a threat held forth to every inhabitant of Arkansas coming within the classes to which reference is made, that if he votes against the constitution after the convention has agreed to it or indicates opposition to it in any way, he shall be beyond the reach even of the mercy and indulgence of the Legislature of his State, and must remain disfranchised forever?

Then comes the fifth section:

"Sec. 5. All persons, before registering or voting, must take and subscribe the following oath: 'I, _____, do solemnly swear, or affirm, that I will support and maintain the Constitution and laws of the United States, and the constitution and laws of the State of Arkansas; that I am not excluded from registering or voting by any of the clauses in the first, second, third, or fourth subdivisions of article eight of the constitution of the State of Arkansas; that I will never countenance or aid in the secession of this State from the United States; that I accept the civil and political equality of all men, and agree not to attempt to deprive any person or persons, on account of race, color, or previous condition, of any political or civil right, privilege, or immunity enjoyed by any other class of men; and, furthermore, that I will not in any way injure, or countenance in others any attempt to injure any person or persons on account of past or present support of the Government of the United States, the laws of the United States, or the principle of the political and civil equality of all men, or for affiliation with any political party: Provided, That if any person shall knowingly and falsely take any oath in this constitution prescribed, such person so offending, and being thereof duly convicted, shall be subject to the pains, penalties, and disabilities which by law are provided for the punishment of the crime of wilful and corrupt perjury."

Mr. President, taken altogether, this eighth article of the constitution, in my judgment, is not republican in form or in substance. It creates rules of disfranchisement which remove this constitution out of the category of republican forms, while at the same time it does substantial injustice and wrong to a large mass of the population in the State of Arkansas. One peculiar feature of enormity and wrong in these provisions is, as I have already suggested, that they attach themselves to the proceeding of military registration, adopt that as the standard for the future, and prevent the correction of those innumerable cases of injustice and of mistake which occurred under that registration. It is my purpose to bring these points to the attention of the Senate, and not to elaborate them or to declaim upon them, supposing that every member to whose notice the facts are brought is as competent as myself to draw the just and necessary conclusions which arise upon them.

I now turn to another class of provisions relating to suffrage which are temporary, as I said before. They are found in the schedule of the constitution. Here is section ten of the schedule:

"No person disqualified from voting or registering under this constitution shall vote for candidates for any office, nor shall be permitted to vote for the ratification or rejection of this constitution at the polls herein authorized."

What does that mean? It means that these extreme rules of disqualification established by the constitution for the future shall be applied and shall operate at the first election before the State is reorganized or admitted to representation in Congress. No person shall vote upon the question of adopting this constitution, or vote for any officer under it at the first election, who is disqualified by any of the clauses which I have read in the eighth article; that is, this constitution shall take effect before it is adopted; its rules of exclusion shall come into action before it is accepted by the people.

What is that but putting the pleasure of the members of the convention as the constitutional rule for the first election of State officers and for the adoption of the constitution itself? Clearly, upon any proper principle, they were not authorized to make such a provision, to make their own will the constitution of the State for the time being—unquestionably not. Such a proceeding as that would not be permitted in any State now represented in Congress in modifying the State government by framing or amending a constitution. If a convention of delegates sat in Indiana or Pennsylvania, authorized to propose amendment to the constitution of the State, and they were to adopt a new rule excluding a fifth or a tenth or a twentieth of the electoral population from voting upon their amendments, everybody would cry out "shame!" upon it, and every reasonable and sound-thinking man would hold that it was an invalid provision; that the right of suffrage for the time being must be exercised under the former constitution, or under some proper and legal authority independent of the convention itself, which being called simply to propose an amended constitution, could not, before their work was adopted, put it into effect and apply it as a rule for measuring and settling the rights of the citizens of the State.

Now, sir, you will observe that these rules of suffrage in the eighth article are much more restrictive than those established by Congress. The congressional restrictions upon the right of suffrage in the States of the South as found in the reconstruction laws are liberal, benignant, benign in character and operation compared to those found in the eighth article of the new constitution. In my judgment, accepting reconstruction as a valid system, and as one to be enforced, those reconstruction laws create the rule of suffrage during the entire proceedings of reorganization until the State shall be admitted to representation in Congress; and I hold that this convention in Arkansas had no right to lay down any new rule or condition of popular suffrage which should take effect before their work should be adopted by the people of that State upon being submitted to them in proper form.

Well, sir, what has been done since? General Gillem, who is in command in that department, has repudiated that part of the Constitution. He sent out, and very properly sent out, orders to his military subordinates to disregard it so far as regarded the military election upon the adoption of the constitution; and so you have the singular fact presented here in these official documents that the board of commissioners appointed by the convention report a tabular vote upon the new constitution, and the registrars appointed by the military commander report another vote upon the constitution; and the two not at all alike. They do not merely differ in minute particulars, but they are substantially different throughout. You have the anomaly of two elections at the same time on the adoption of the constitution in Arkansas, one held under the authority of the convention and the other held under the authority of the reconstruction laws and the military orders issued in pursuance thereof. The vote taken by the military authorities was a vote in all respects conformed to the requirements of the laws of Congress; the vote taken under the authority of the commissioners appointed by the State convention followed the rules of suffrage propounded in this eighth article and in the schedule to the constitution.

Now, sir, here is section three of the schedule:

"In voting for or against the adoption of this constitution, the words for constitution or against constitution shall be written or printed on the ballot of each voter; but no voter shall vote for or against this constitution on a separate ballot from that cast by him for officers to be elected at said election under this constitution."

So that it was impossible for an elector at this State election to vote for or against the adoption of the proposed constitution without voting at the same time for the officers who were to be chosen at that election. Whether he had a candidate or not, he must adopt the candidates on ballots printed and prepared by the convention party in order to exercise his right of voting upon the adoption of the constitution; or if he did not choose to vote for those candidates he was to take the trouble of forming a ticket for himself. The result was there was but one ticket voted for throughout the State for State officers; and, as I understand, every member of the upper and lower house of the Arkansas Legislature is of the convention party, and every State officer elected was chosen without serious opposition. The arrangements of suffrage in the tenth and third sections of this schedule were well calculated and were intended to produce an unfair election and an unjust result, and to exclude at that election for the organization of the State large masses of voters who were qualified under the acts of Congress; and all this was done upon the sole authority of the convention itself, without any delegation of power to it for the purpose from Congress or from the people. I say, then, that this constitution is anti-republican; that it violates fundamental principles, and is unfair in its arrangements for the first election as well as for future ones.

Mr. MORTON. I thought I understood the honorable Senator a few minutes ago to say that General Gillem repudiated these conditions of suffrage, and that the case presented the singular anomaly of two elections being held, one according to the terms of the reconstruction law, and the other according to the terms of the new constitution.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Certainly; that is so.

Mr. MORTON. If so, then the evil you complain of could not exist in voting against the constitution.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Not upon the voting on the constitution, but in the voting for officers in the organization of the new State; in the selection of the Legislature which elects United States Senators, and in the choice of Representatives who are to be admitted to seats in the other House of Congress. The military authorities repudiated these provisions of the schedule so far as the elections which they held upon the adoption of the constitution were concerned; but they left them in full force to be applied by the convention officers to the elections held under the authority of the convention. At those elections held under the authority of the convention votes were taken in favor of the constitution and none against it, because, under the qualification of suffrage, voting against it was discouraged and prevented; and at those elections votes were also taken for all the State officers, for members of the Legislature, and for Representatives in Congress. So that this State is actually reorganized and is presenting herself here through her Senators and Representatives upon an organization which was regulated by these clauses in the schedule, which, in my opinion, were improper and invalid.

Now, Mr. President, I come to another point. The convention of Arkansas appointed a board of commissioners, who were to have control of the State elections. The fourth section of the schedule to the constitution reads as follows:

"A board of commissioners is hereby appointed, to consist of James L. Hodges, Joseph Brooks, and the president of this convention, any two of whom shall constitute a quorum to transact business, who shall keep an office for the transaction of business in Little Rock, and who may employ such clerical force as may be necessary." * * * "and who are empowered and authorized to appoint, or cause to be appointed, suitable persons for judges and clerks of election in each county in this State, to hold the election therein for all State and county officers, and for members of the General Assembly and of the House of Representatives of the United States, and also for the ratification of this constitution. Said election shall be held at such times and places in each county, commencing on the 13th day of March, and continuing on such successive days as the commissioners may direct, to secure a full and fair vote at such election."

Then follow provisions which I will omit reading. The eighth section says:

"The said commissioners shall have power to inquire into the fairness or validity of the voting upon the ratification of this constitution, and to count the votes given at said election, and shall reject all fraudulent or illegal votes cast at said election; and said commissioners shall also have power, whenever it is made to appear that fraud, fear, violence, improper influence, or restraint were used, or persons were prevented or intimidated from voting at such elections, to take such steps, either by setting aside the election and ordering a new one, or rejecting votes, or correcting the result in any county or precinct as may in such cases be just and equitable."

"SEC. 9. The said commissioners shall declare the result of the election upon the ratification of this constitution." &c. * * *

"SEC. 13. In the event that either of the three commissioners appointed by section four hereof should be a candidate for any office, the other two commissioners shall canvass the vote so far as it relates to that office, and issue the certificate to the person elected." * * *

"SEC. 17. The commissioners herein appointed shall receive for their services, for each day actually employed, such compensation per day and allowances, and in such manner as are now provided for members of this convention. All expenses incurred under this schedule, not otherwise provided for, shall be paid out of the appropriation for defraying the expenses of this convention."

That compensation was eight dollars per day and allowances.

Now, sir, you perceive what large powers were conferred upon this board of commissioners. They had absolute control of this State election. They were authorized to appoint all the officers who were to hold it, to make such orders as were necessary in their judgment for holding it; to receive all the returns, and not only to declare the result, but to try any question with regard to the fairness of the election or other matter which related to it. Who were they? The first man into whose hands the whole power over this election was committed was James L. Hodges, who was himself a member of the convention from the county of Pulaski, one of those in which there was an enormous fraud afterward.

He resides at Little Rock. He came into the State about the year 1865 from the North, and was employed for a time as the foreman or manager in the State penitentiary. Peay and Ayliff were the superintendents of the penitentiary under a resolution of the Legislature of 1865-66, and they had a contract with the State which was supposed to be quite profitable. They were to have the use of the penitentiary buildings, they were to have the results of the labor of the convicts, and to be paid thirty-five cents per day for each convict as an allowance; and at the session of 1866 there was an appropriation of $15,000 for machinery and materials for working the convicts in the penitentiary.

Having the results of convict labor, having the establishment stocked with machinery and materials for working the convicts, and being allowed thirty-five cents a day for each of them, this appears to have been a liberal and lucrative agreement. It was held by Peay and Ayliff; but as there was some question about their being compelled to take a new military oath in order to hold such a position under the State, their foreman, or manager, proposed to purchase them out, and he did so, by an agreement that he was to pay each of them the sum of $5,000 for their interest in the contract, he to assume it. That agreement was made. The consideration money, as I understand, was to be paid out of the net profits that might come from running the institution afterward.

This northern man and purchaser of the contract (who had been there but a short time) turned up afterward as a member of the convention from Pulaski county, and by a resolution adopted by the convention his penitentiary contract was ratified and confirmed to him. The convention confirmed the contract with him after a warm contest, in which others, who desired an interest in the matter themselves, or were opposed to the particular contract, resisted it. It was approved, however, and made good so far as the convention could validate it. That contract he held under the resolution of the convention pending the election. He was the leading man to manage the election, to see to it that the constitution, the work of the convention under which he held his contract, should be adopted, and that the proper men should be elected to places in the State Legislature, and to other positions of influence and power in the State, who would hold good the contract and maintain him in its enjoyment. It has been reported to me that this penitentiary superintendency is one of the most lucrative positions in the State of Arkansas, and I am almost afraid to mention the amount of money which it is alleged the incumbent can make. It is a very large sum yearly. What I have stated will manifest the interest which this commissioner had in the result of the State elections for officers, as well as in the adoption of the constitution.

The second member of this board (Joseph Brooks) was a chaplain who accompanied a negro regiment into the State during the war. He resided at Helena, in Phillips county, in the eastern part of the State, and was a delegate from that county in the convention. During the sittings of the convention, and afterward, he was accepted, and understood to be a candidate of the Republican members of the convention and of the Republican party for United States Senator, and it was understood generally that he would be selected as such if the constitution should be adopted. He acted as commissioner of election, therefore, in prospect of becoming a Senator from the State as the result of a successful proceeding under the reconstruction laws by the adoption of the constitution and the election of a Legislature favorable to the constitution, and made up of men politically friendly to himself.

The third member of this board was Thomas M. Bowen. He was a member from Crawford county, and was president of the convention. He came to the State in 1863 as a colonel in the Army, I believe in a Kansas regiment, though he was from Iowa. Subsequently, while in service in Arkansas, he was cashiered or dismissed from the Army; I am told for alleged immoral practices. It may be that subsequently there was some proceeding in regard to his restoration, but I am unable to state the facts. At all events, he was a cashiered officer of the Union Army; who, remaining there after the war, became a member of the convention from the western part of the State, and was selected as its president.

This man was a candidate for a seat upon the bench of the supreme court of the State, and ran as such at this very election, over which he had large control in his hands. The tenure of that office, I believe, is for a period of eight years, and the salary, I am told, has been fixed at $4,000 per annum. He had never practiced law. He had studied law in youth, as I understand, from one of the Senators from Iowa, and been admitted to the bar, but did not practice afterward. He engaged in the military service, turned up in Arkansas, and is now elected a judge of the supreme court of that State. A dismissed officer of the United States Army, unpracticed in the law, becomes a judge for eight years of the State with a good salary, and while a candidate for that office, for which he had no qualifications or fitness, he is employed as one of the three commissioners to manage and control the State election under the very extraordinary provisions of this schedule to the constitution.

What was the inevitable result of these convention arrangements? I shall not go over unpleasant details of the State election; I shall stop with the facts appearing on the face of the constitution itself, and with this explanation of the positions of the men in whose charge the election was put. The practical result of all this, sir, I repeat, was that there were few if any opposing votes at the State election; the convention party had it their own way. Throughout the State all opposition was excluded, was stifled, was rendered impossible; the convention shaped the election to suit themselves, and put it in the charge of men who would control it in their own interest, and in the interest of their political friends. It was a very unanimous election; all on one side.

Well, sir, a Legislature was chosen and it met. How was it composed? In the State of Arkansas there were fifty-eight counties, and there were appointed by the military authorities from two to three registrars in each county to enumerate the voters and to control the military election on the constitution. That would make about one hundred and forty-five altogether in the State. I am informed that nearly all of these men, almost the entire number, were candidates for office at the State election. A large part of them were sent into the State Legislature; and where they were not candidates for legislative offices, they were for other offices.

Now, sir, although the State election and this military election were separate—the one held under the authority of the convention and the other held under the military authority—they were held at the same places, or nearly together, and at the same time, and the two became to a great extent blended together, exercising an influence upon each other, and both are to be taken into account. The registrars who held the military elections, being all, or nearly all, candidates themselves for election to the various offices to be filled under the constitution, the election on which was held at the same time, had the strongest possible interest to hold their military elections so as to carry the constitution. If the constitution was carried they would get their offices at the other election. It was certain they would be elected at the other election, because there was no organized opposition to them. If, then, they could obtain by managing the military elections a majority in favor of the constitution, they were certain to take office under it. This fact is to be taken into account in examining those election returns.

It is clear that the military election, with which we are mainly concerned, was held by men throughout the State who were deeply interested in the result of the vote on the constitution; who were not independent officers, but interested ones; and to any irregularity or disregard of law which is brought to our notice as committed by them or suffered by them we are to give a construction hostile to the adoption of the constitution. It is not possible to rule any question of doubt as to a matter within the control of these officers in favor of the adoption of the constitution. They exerted all their influence and their power unquestionably to secure its success.

Well, sir, what do we find reported as the result of their labors? General Gillem's report is found in House Executive Document No. 278, commencing on the first page and extending to the sixth. He returns to the General of the Army reports made to him by the registrars showing a vote in favor of the constitution of twenty-seven thousand nine hundred and thirteen, and against it of twenty-six thousand five hundred and ninety-seven, being a total vote of fifty-four thousand five hundred and ten. Accompanying it is a tabular statement of the registration in the several counties, the aggregate of which is seventy-three thousand seven hundred and eighty-four, so that according to the report about five sevenths of the persons registered in the State voted on the question of adopting the constitution. This would give to the constitution a majority of thirteen hundred and sixteen. Is that a true return, or is it a false and fraudulent one? That is the next question to which I desire to direct the attention of the Senate.

In the county of Pulaski the number of votes polled on the question of adopting the constitution exceeded the whole number of voters registered in the county by eleven hundred and ninety-five. In the county of Jefferson the number of persons reported as voting on the constitution exceeded the whole number registered by seven hundred and thirty. In the county of Jackson it is reported that no election was held in one precinct. In Lawrence county no election was held in four precincts. In Poinsett county no election was held in one precinct. These are facts appearing on the face of the tabular return in General Gillem's report.

Now, sir, what were the provisions of law under which this election was held? The act of the 23d of March, 1867, the first supplementary reconstruction law, provided:

"That if, according to said returns, the constitution shall be ratified by a majority of the votes of the registered electors qualified as herein specified, cast at said election, (at least one half of all the registered voters voting upon the question of such ratification,) the president of the convention shall transmit a copy of the same, duly certified, to the President of the United States."

And subsequently is a provision that—

"If the Congress shall be satisfied that such constitution meets the approval of a majority of all the qualified electors of the State," &c.

Then the State shall be admitted again to her representation in Congress and to her place in the Union. The first reconstruction law, the act of the 2d of March, 1867, had a provision that the State may be readmitted.

Mr. President, as the law stood at the end of 1867 the persons registered by the military authorities were the only persons who could vote upon the question of adopting a constitution in any one of the ten States to be reorganized; and it appears that in the counties of Jefferson and Pulaski persons not registered, to the number of about two thousand, did vote upon the question of adopting this constitution for Arkansas. The question is whether those votes were regular and honest or not. It will be remembered that on the 11th of March of the present year we passed a supplementary act in relation to this subject of reconstruction which provides:

"That hereafter any election authorized by the act passed March 23, 1867, entitled 'An act supplementary to an act to provide for the more efficient government of the rebel States, passed March 2, 1867, and to facilitate restoration,' shall be decided by a majority of the votes actually cast; and at the election in which the question of the adoption or rejection of any constitution is submitted any person duly registered in the State may vote in the election district where he offers to vote when he has resided therein for ten days next preceding such election upon presentation of his certificate of registration, his affidavit, or other satisfactory evidence, under such regulations as the district commanders may prescribe."

The only pretense of authority for the surplus votes in Pulaski and Jefferson counties is this act of the 11th of March, 1868; but they cannot be vindicated under that law. From the report of General Gillem it appears that he never issued any order under that act of the 11th of March. The law required that these votes should be taken according to orders which should be issued by the military commander of the proper district. There was no order, there was no regulation, there was no provision of any kind by which the persons who held these elections were authorized to receive any votes under that act. Now, sir, let us see how those votes were taken. General Gillem sent an officer to Little Rock just before he transmitted his report to General Grant, who made inquiries with regard to the regularity of the election, and his report is contained at page 23 of House Executive Document No. 278, to which I have before referred. That officer says this:

"VICKSBURG, MISSISSIPPI, April 22, 1868.

"MAJOR: I have the honor to report that in obedience to Special Order No. 76, dated Headquarters Fourth Military District, April 10, 1868, I started from Vicksburg on the afternoon of April 10, and arrived at Little Rock April 13, and returning arrived in Vicksburg the 22d instant.

"I further beg leave to report that I made investigations of alleged frauds at recent elections in Arkansas, and find the facts to be as follows:

"The registrars in Pulaski county permitted (except in the precinct of Ashley, where the election was first held) all persons who presented certificates of registration showing that they had been registered at any precinct in the State, to vote. They allowed many persons to vote where certificates showed that they were registered at other precincts and in other counties than the county and precinct where they did vote. With very few exceptions, they did not require from persons so voting any oath whatever. They did not ask persons so offering to vote if they had resided in the county or precinct any length of time whatever."

It will be remembered that the act of the 11th of March required ten days' residence in the precinct—

"The registrars did not take the names of persons so voting, or the number of their certificates of registration, or the names of precincts where such persons were registered; so that they had, and now have, no guide or check in the matter, and said registrars of Pulaski county cannot now state who thus voted or the number of such votes; but the registrars declare that they believe the excess of votes polled over the number of registered voters in the county of Pulaski is thus explained, and they cannot otherwise explain such excess. Without any doubt fourteen or fifteen hundred persons registered elsewhere voted in Pulaski. The registrars of Jefferson county pursued the same course, and allowed persons, wherever registered, to vote at any precinct where they presented themselves, taking no record of the same, and only checking such votes by marks upon the certificate of registration which was returned to the voters."

So that in these counties there is no record at all of the names of these persons. There was nothing done at the election by way of investigating their qualifications, other than requiring the presentation of certificates no matter where issued within the State; no attempt, as it would seem, to verify their identity and to prevent the same person from voting more than once; no evidence taken as to their residence, whether within the election district or within the county; in other words, no test whatever, such as was required by the act of 11th of March, in the admission of the votes of any of these persons, and an utter absence of any record of who they were so that inquiry could be made subsequently into their qualifications and claims to be regarded as electors of the State. Further on he says:

"Persons who had lost their certificates of registration, and who stated such fact under oath, were in most instances allowed to vote on duplicates then issued; and this was done even if the person who swore to the loss of certificate also stated that he was registered (as would appear by lost certificate) in another county or precinct.

"The duplicate certificate was made in accordance with terms of the sworn statement, but the registrars did not know if such sworn statements were true.

and the persons who made them cannot now be identified. No less than fifty, and probably a much greater number, of such votes were cast in Pulaski county."

He says again:

"A consolidated return was forwarded by the registrars of Jefferson county, for which they allege an excuse that they thought it 'the best way.'"

He goes on and gives a number of details, with which I shall not trouble the Senate, all tending to show irregularity and false votes. He also speaks of what is an important fact, the revision of the registration list, which took place immediately before the election:

"On the revision of registration, quite a number of persons were stricken off the books. Of this they had no notice, and on election presented their votes, which were rejected, in many instances without any explanation. As such persons generally desired to vote against the Constitution, this rejection of their votes gave them reason for believing that votes against the constitution were unjustly rejected, and the whole election fraudulent."

The only excuse that I can find in the report of this officer as made to General Gillem, or find anywhere in the documents, is this:

"No fraud by registrars appears to have been intended in this matter, as they allowed persons elsewhere registered to vote only after mutual consultation and consideration of act of Congress passed March 11, 1867, but their conduct was very unfortunate, as the registration law was thus virtually impaired. Any person who presented an uncancelled certificate of registration (the registrar could not tell if the same was forged or not) was allowed to vote, and such persons cannot now be identified."

This election began on the 13th of March, and I find from official documents that it terminated on the last day of March, the 31st, in the county of Pulaski, which was the one in which there was the largest surplus of votes; in other words, the election officers in that county commenced holding the election the 13th of March, and they went on holding it and taking votes, passing from one precinct to another down until the 31st. They received the votes of anybody who presented them a certificate from any part of the State; they required no proof of residence in the district, nor anything else required by the law, and yet we are told that these votes are to be counted by virtue of the act of the 11th of March. How preposterous! That law required explicitly a residence of ten days in the election district; it required the presentation of a certificate of registration; it required the affidavit or other satisfactory evidence of the right of the claimant to vote to be presented to the board under such regulations as the district commander should prescribe. The district commander never prescribed any regulation. None of these conditions of that act of the 11th of March were ever complied with. Of all this we have the most conclusive evidence in the official report before us.

How, then, can it be held that these votes should be counted by virtue of that act of the 11th of March, and come into this return to poison and corrupt it, and to induce us to accept this constitution of Arkansas as having been actually adopted by the people of that State?

The election officers of Pulaski county "consulted together." Yes, sir; they did consult together. The elections were held throughout the State generally on the 13th of March, and, as I have showed you, a number of precincts in other counties were not visited by the officers, and no elections were held, no votes were taken, the people were disfranchised; but here in Pulaski county they kept up their election for a period of seventeen or eighteen days, collecting votes. Is it wonderful that they have great surplus vote over their registration list, and is it not as evident as anything can be that rests on inference that all those surplus votes were fraudulent? At all events they were all illegal; they were polled by virtue of no law; they were polled in contempt of law, and in the absence of instructions from the military commander of the district.

As the act of 11th of March was passed two days only before the election on the 13th, there was no time to transmit the law to Arkansas and to have information concerning it distributed among the election officers and among the people. General Gillem informs us in his report that he was not informed of this provision with regard to voting on certificates which I have read until the election was over. He was not notified until the election was over generally in the State that there was any such law in existence, and he could not issue instructions under it. Yet, after the election was over in the remainder of the State, when precincts in various counties stood disfranchised because the time had gone by, here in Pulaski and Jefferson counties the officers go on and take nearly two thousand votes and put them into the return and report them to the general; what for? In order to elect themselves to offices under the constitution of Arkansas. Why should not these votes be rejected? Why should not we hold that the constitution failed?

There is a suggestion somewhere that you cannot tell whether those unregistered voters voted for or against the constitution; you cannot tell how they voted; therefore you are to consider that they voted against the constitution, or that a sufficient number of them so voted as to cause no change in the result. That is the only suggestion which comes from any quarter upon which to assume that the constitution was in fact adopted. I will answer that explanation.

In the first place, the votes against the constitution returned in Pulaski county were only nine hundred and ninety-seven, which was much less than the surplus vote. Therefore a part of this fraudulent and surplus vote could not have been made up of men who voted against the constitution. That a mere glance informs us. How stood it in Jefferson county? There were seven hundred and thirty surplus votes, and the whole number of votes against the constitution was only four hundred and thirty-eight; so that there were three hundred more false votes in that county than were polled against the constitution.

Besides, it is very evident from the extraordinary conduct of the election officers in keeping up the election until the end of March, and in disregarding the regulations of law in receiving votes, that they were engaged in a fraudulent proceeding. And as they were all partisans of the constitution and deeply interested in its success, the conclusion is inevitable that the spurious votes received were in favor of the constitution.

But the extent of the fraud is not measured by the number of votes in excess of the registration. All the registered voters did not, probably, vote. Taking the State together, only five sevenths of those registered voted at the military election, and no doubt a great many did not vote in Pulaski and Jefferson who were on the registration lists.

Assuming then, that these surplus votes were polled for the constitution, it follows that that constitution was rejected in fact by the people; that instead of their being a majority in favor of it of thirteen hundred, it was in fact rejected. You have the two facts, the illegality of this vote under the law, and that its rejection defeats the constitution. General Gillem does not report to us or to his military superior that this constitution was adopted. He says this, after speaking of the objections made to the fairness of the vote, its regularity, and integrity, and explaining that he is not responsible for it, that he never gave any orders for taking these votes, but he goes on to say:

"In a question of such importance, and one purely civil in which the action to be taken by the district commander is not prescribed by section five of the act of March 23, 1867, I have determined to forward the entire record for the action of the proper authority."

It is sent to us for our judgment; the General has exercised none upon it; at all events, he has expressed none; and we are brought to the naked facts, and are to judge them for ourselves. The question, then, is whether we should take the interested action of the registrars in Pulaski and Jefferson counties, action made in their own interest as candidates, and to accommodate them put into this count two thousand votes to carry the constitution.

Now, sir, what do the reconstruction laws require in what I have read from them? They require that when the constitution of one of these southern States is sent here it shall appear to Congress that it is in point of fact adopted or agreed to by a majority of the electors of the State. That is in your law. Another provision is in the first act that a majority of the electors of the State shall have voted upon the question. But whether your law required it or not, it is an indispensable requisite to the acceptance or validity of a constitution that it shall have been agreed to by a majority of the electors of the State called upon to vote on its adoption or rejection. Is there any reason why the Senate should sink itself down to the level of these interested officers in Arkansas who run their elections by the week? I perceive none.

I believe, then, that this constitution was rejected by the people of that State. I believe that the instrument itself is, in some respects, anti-republican. I believe that its provisions are unjust as well as unreasonable, and that it is opposed to the opinions and to the interests of a majority of the people of that State. Holding these opinions I must vote against this bill. If I had had a little more leisure I should have combined together various matters of proof in this report of General Gillem bearing upon the election, and showing that it was substantially unfair, and that any apparent result reported from it is not to be relied upon as expressing the opinions of the electoral population of that State.

I forbear. I content myself with bringing distinctly before the Senate sufficient information to show that the constitution was rejected, and that it is not the act and deed even of that portion of the people of Arkansas who, under your reconstruction laws, are permitted to vote. Of course, it is opposed by all those who were excluded from registration under the act of 2d of March and its several supplements. Why, then, should the State be readmitted to representation as a member of the Union?

Sir, I cannot understand why gentlemen should disturb themselves very much about hurrying the State of Arkansas into the Union under this false election. As to civil order, the maintenance of law, the preservation of peace, the administration of justice within the limits of that State; as to her restoration to her former condition of peace and quiet as an orderly member of this Union; as to her performance of her constitutional duties as in former times, you are not to get these things from the false government which has been set up within that State. These registrars of election, who are intruded into her offices; these persons, without stake of property or of reputation, are not the men to wield the political power of that State, and to preserve her civil institutions in a condition of vigor and of purity, out of which good government may be expected to spring. When she has formed a constitution which is republican in its spirit and in substance; when she allows good faith between man and man to be enforced; when she ostracizes permanently from the right of suffrage only notorious criminals and incapable persons, and invites intelligence and honor and thrift and industry into the political organization which she sets up, and when she shall hold an election which shall be honest and lawful, it will be time for us to consider whether she shall be admitted to representation under the policy of reconstruction upon which Congress has entered, and which those who control the action of Congress have thus far pursued.

It is true that the former organizations set up by the people in Arkansas and in other States upon invitation of the President have failed. They have failed by reason of our refusal to accept them, and they are either no longer in existence or they are so crippled and enfeebled by military encroachment upon their jurisdiction and power that they are substantially of little account. Therefore there is no reason for hurrying Arkansas in under this bill in order to prevent presidential reconstruction from molding the institutions of that State. There is no reason for hurrying her back into Congress, through her Senators and Representatives, to preserve peace, quiet, and order within her borders, because these will not be produced or maintained by this constitution and the organization of government under it. The people there know that this constitution was voted down. They know that it was rejected by probably ten thousand majority. I have not gone fully into the shameful history of that election. I have confined myself to the face of the record which the general in command sends us. But all men in Arkansas of any intelligence know that even by the men permitted to vote in that State that constitution was rejected, and rejected largely. They all know that these registrars were running about Pulaski and Jefferson counties for two weeks hunting up votes to count the constitution carried after they had information from the rest of the State that it was rejected.

They know that the Legislature was filled up with those men that managed the election and that Senators were chosen here by their interested votes. They know that the men who come to your House of Representatives were selected under a proceeding that was outrageous and unjust to the electoral class itself, restricted as it is. They know that when a convention man could go into an eight years' supreme judgeship of their State who has not practiced law and who knows little of legal principles or of the laws of that State that their property is not secure, their rights are not safe; that when an adventurer can seize upon their penitentiary and grow rich upon the plunder of the people, secured by a convention resolution, and when their offices generally are filled with men without property or stake in the community, no peace, concord, harmony, and justice (all under the guardianship of good government) can be expected in that State.

Continue your military government in Arkansas for a time, if you choose; if you choose make provision for civil government of a temporary character; better than this measure would it be to take even these persons that are now in power under the State constitution and allow them an ad interim authority.

Mr. HOWE. Under the act of 1795? [Laughter.]

Mr. BUCKALEW. Not under the act of 1795, but under an act of 1868.

Mr. President, I have never been exceedingly troubled about the hurried representation of States from the South. I have always had a sort of feeling that the States which went through the war, and at its close were in possession of the powers of the Government, might very well look cautiously and carefully at the question of readmitting men from the revolted States. I was not impatient at some pause and reflection on this subject. My voice has not been raised against a moderate amount of reflection on this question of reorganization; and when I saw that the plan proposed by the President was impossible, I have not been willing to accept some plan of congressional restoration in lieu of it, in order merely to get done with the subject. I would like to see complete restoration take place upon an agreement or assent of the whole populations of the States interested. Now, sir, if I understand the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. WILSON,] who speaks in favor of this bill, the South is to be hurriedly reconstructed for the purpose of getting particular votes polled and particular votes counted in the Electoral Colleges.

That is a very petty ground to put it upon. Sir, my experience in life has been that men who on grave occasions, in reference to grave measures, go down to some low or improper principle of action generally fail in that purpose; that in the long run it is best to act on those high and permanent principles of human conduct which will endure investigation and the trial of future times. Let me tell the Senator that in his hurried, his feverish anxiety to use the subject of reconstruction for a temporary purpose, he may be committing the great political blunder of his life.

However, sir, I shall not speak further. Believing that it is best for the people of Arkansas that their reentrance into Congress should be delayed a little longer instead of being obtained under this bill and under the circumstances which now exist regarding the political organization of that State; believing that her constitution is vicious and evil, and that it was rejected by the honest vote of the State in the recent election, I shall in all possible forms in which the question comes up at the present session vote against restoring her to her immediate representation in Congress.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. President, I do not rise to discuss the bill; but the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCKALEW] has made an illusion to a judge of the supreme court of Arkansas elect in terms that reflect somewhat on his character; and, as those remarks go into the Globe and will stand there as a kind of official record for all time, I think it due to him, as he was brought up in the town in which I live, for me to drop a word or two of explanation.

I knew Mr. Bowen when he was a boy. He was a boy of great energy of character; he studied law, and was admitted to the bar in the town in which I live, and afterward emigrated to a county some one hundred miles west of us; was elected a member of the Iowa Legislature, and served in that body with credit; and I do not remember that I ever heard anything reflecting on his character morally while he was a citizen of my State. At the beginning of the war he entered the military service, and served with success. I did hear, during the continuance of the war, that he had some difficulty, and was at one time dismissed from the service; but I learn from the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. THAYER,] who was personally conversant with the facts, that he was dismissed without an examination, and on examination was restored to the service. He did have a domestic difficulty. I know nothing of the facts in that case as to the merits or demerits of it; but he was divorced from his wife. He brought her back, however, to the town in which I live, and where he was brought up, bought property for her, and, I think, expended about all he was worth in the world in fixing her up. He was afterward divorced, and I think has married a second time.

I was not as intimate with him as I was with some of the other young men of the town for this reason: I was absent from the place a large part of the time, and politically I did not associate with him. He was a member of the Democratic party, and I may say to his credit he was a kind of leader of the party, called their conventions, generally made speeches for them on local occasions, drew up their resolutions, and displayed a sprightly ability highly creditable to him. When elected to the Legislature he was still a Democrat, elected from a Democratic county, as the county in which he lived was one of the very few Democratic counties in the State of Iowa, and on the floor of the House he was a kind of managing man for his party friends. I do not think that anything ever occurred that came to the public knowledge, at least while he lived in Iowa, that would justify any reflections on his moral character. It may be true that he was a little erratic, as youths sometimes are; he may have been a little wild, and probably was; but I do not think it quite right that a record should be made here that may come to his prejudice for all time without this explanation. If what I have said in relation to his dismissal and restoration is not exactly according to the record the Senator from Nebraska can set me right.

Mr. THAYER. I would add, Mr. President, that he was dismissed the service summarily by the department commander without any trial or investigation, and afterward, upon a review of the case by the War Department, he was restored and honorably musttered out of the service, and was breveted by the Department as brigadier general for meritorious services. These are the facts in the case.

Mr. POMEROY. I will say only a word. Colonel Bowen is very well known to my State, having raised and commanded a regiment there, and I never heard anything to his discredit. He was a leader formerly, when I first knew him, of a small Democratic party; but he soon abandoned it, very creditably, as I expected he would when he came to my State, and since the breaking out of the rebellion he has been a firm, consistent Union man, very much beloved by his regiment; and I am surprised to hear any man reflect upon his ability. I think he has very commendable talents, and the officers that I have known who were elected in the manner the Senator from Pennsylvania has stated, would reflect credit and honor upon any station. I do not know all of them, but I know the Governor, and I know the judges, and I know very many of them, and they will maintain themselves creditably in any organization.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President, in this constitution there is one point on which I shall address myself to the Senate. It provides that every person who offers to be registered or to vote shall take a certain test-oath. It is an oath addressed to his conscience to test his political opinions. He must swear that he accepts the civil and political equality of all men without distinction of race or color. The language of the section is "All persons, before registering or voting, must take and subscribe the following oath," in which is contained these words, "that I accept the civil and political equality of all men, and agree not to attempt to deprive any person or persons, on account of race, color, or previous condition, of any political or civil right," this having reference, as a matter of course, to the question of suffrage, which is a political right. If that constitution be adopted in the State of Arkansas, and Congress recognize that constitution as the constitution of Arkansas, what is its practical effect? A majority of all the men in the State of New York would be disfranchised in the State of Arkansas; a majority of forty thousand at least of the electors of Ohio (for so they voted last fall) would be disfranchised in the State of Arkansas; a majority of nearly twenty or thirty thousand in the State of Michigan, if they should emigrate to Arkansas, could not take that test-oath; a large majority of the electors of the State of New Jersey, if they should emigrate to Arkansas, could not take that oath and vote at all.

So, Mr. President, in relation to all the States where this question has been submitted to the free vote of the people within the last four, five, or ten years. Connecticut, Michigan, Wisconsin, Ohio, New York, Minnesota, and the State of Illinois, which, when they had the last vote on that subject, voted by one hundred thousand majority even to exclude from the State colored persons.

I am not discussing the question whether it is right or wrong for men to believe or to disbelieve in the political equality of all men without reference to race or color; but I know that a majority, and a large majority, of the white men in the States of Pennsylvania, New York, Ohio, Indiana, Wisconsin, Michigan, and Connecticut honestly entertain a different opinion from that embodied in this instrument. They do not believe in the political equality of Indians or negroes with white men.

Now, what is done in this constitution of Arkansas? Suppose these citizens from your State, my honored friend, [Mr. SHERMAN,] should remove to the State of Arkansas and go to the polls to vote, what is to be tendered to them under this constitution? "Sir, you must swear that you accept the political equality of all men, and pledge yourself never to undertake to change the law which, in any respect, shall deprive any man of a political right on account of race or color."

Mr. President, if men really believe that the mass of Indians are not qualified to vote; if men really believe that the great majority of the negro race as they now are in the States of the South are utterly unfit to exercise properly the elective franchise, will you makethem take an oath that they will crush out their own belief and surrender their own conscientious convictions, and as the price for which they will give up their belief and surrender their conscientious convictions they may vote; otherwise they cannot vote at all.

Mr. President, whatever men may say or think, I believe that the constitution of any State which contains any such test-oath is anti-Christian, anti-republican, and utterly opposed to the civil liberty of mankind. You might just as well say that a State can adopt a constitution requiring a man to believe in any religious dogma as to say that he shall believe and accept as true a political dogma.

It is not my purpose to dwell at length on this point. I shall proceed to the consideration of another question which arises upon the bill as it now is before the Senate. I refer to the "fundamental condition" in the bill as it comes from the House of Representatives.

The honorable Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] claims that Congress has the right to impose this fundamental condition under the power to admit new States into the Union. Mr. President, in passing this bill in relation to the representation of the State of Arkansas we are not admitting a new State into the Union. The State of Arkansas, as a State, has never yet been out of the Union. It is an old State; it has been in the Union for thirty years; but even if you were to apply it to the admission of a new State into the Union no such power is implied as that you can impose a condition which will bind the people in all coming time not to change their constitution on the subject of suffrage.

It is claimed by some that this power is to be derived from the clause in the Constitution which authorized the United States to guarantee to each State a republican form of government. I utterly deny that any such power can be derived from that clause of the Constitution. Sir, what is a republican form of government? It is a system of self-government where the people govern themselves; and unless a State has the power for itself to decide who among its number shall exercise the right of suffrage it ceases to be a republican State.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Which part of those numbers is to decide?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The State will decide for itself; not Congress for the State, nor one State for another.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will my friend permit me—

Mr. DOOLITTLE. In relation to this point I do not intend to speak at length, and I should prefer to go on with what I may have to say without getting into a dialogue.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I maintain that it is of the essence of a republican State government that the State shall have the power for itself to fix the qualifications of its own electors. Take, for instance, the State of Connecticut; if the State of Massachusetts has power to fix the qualifications of electors in the State of Connecticut, Connecticut ceases to be a republican State at all. Massachusetts governs Connecticut if Massachusetts can fix and define and qualify the persons who are to exercise political power in the State of Connecticut. It ceases to be a self-governing State, it ceases to be republican, the moment you take from it the power to determine for itself who shall exercise the right of suffrage. I hold, therefore, Mr. President, that it is of the essence of a republican form of State government that the State shall have the power for itself to fix the qualification of its voters, and that if it loses that power or parts with that power, it parts with the very foundation of a republican system.

Again, Mr. President, a good deal has been said upon the clause contained in most of the bills for the admission of States, that they are to be admitted upon an equal footing with all the other States. There is no significance particularly in those words in my mind, because the Constitution of the United States, which becomes at once the supreme law of that State, as it is of every other State, applies equally to one State as it does to another State; its powers over one State are precisely what they are over another; and the powers of one State under the Constitution are precisely the powers which are held by another. Could the Constitution be construed differently if a court were sitting in Virginia from what it would be if they were sitting in Ohio? If a court were sitting in Arkansas as a State under the Constitution of the United States, could that Constitution be construed differently in Arkansas from what it was in Missouri? Missouri and Arkansas are connected in the same circuit, Mr. Justice Miller holding the circuit court. Is it possible that when Mr. Justice Miller, after holding the circuit court of the United States for Missouri, shall pass into Arkansas and open the circuit court for Arkansas, he can in one State give a different construction to the Constitution from what he must give it in another? Certainly not. Its language is precisely the same wherever the volume is opened, and when you open the Constitution and read it you find that it declares in substance that each State has the right for itself to fix the qualifications for its own electors.

In the first place, before the Federal Constitution was formed, all concede that each State had that power. Since the Constitution was formed, every State has exercised that power from the beginning down to the present time; and if you look into the Constitution there are words which expressly recognize this power in the States:

"The House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature."

And there is the clause of the Constitution which declares that all powers not delegated to the United States, or necessarily implied in the delegated powers, and not prohibited to the States, are reserved to the States respectively or to the people. Among these reserved rights clearly is the right of each State for itself to fix the qualifications of its electors, as certainly, in my judgment, as that the State has any right at all. Such has been the uniform doctrine and the uniform practice of the Government from the beginning down to the present time; and therefore, under the Constitution as it stands, any provision inserted in any bill which declares that any State shall not have this power to fix the qualifications of its electors, is utterly void, inconsistent with the Constitution, in direct conflict with the provisions of the Constitution.

And, Mr. President, what is more, it seems to me that those gentlemen who are contending so earnestly for the adoption of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States forget its very terms. That very fourteenth amendment, which gentlemen insist upon as the basis of reconstruction, which in your bill you require the State to vote for the adoption of as a condition precedent to its readmission into the Union, itself recognizes the fact, and it gives, if it was not given before by the Constitution of the United States, the right to each State for itself to fix the qualifications of its electors. The second section of that constitutional amendment contains these words:

"Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the Legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being twenty-one years of age and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such State."

The constitutional amendment thus expressly recognizes in, if it does not confer on, the States the power to disqualify persons from exercising the right of suffrage on account of race or color, or any other reason they choose. The only faculty which it attaches to a State doing so is that it shall be reduced proportionally in its representation. And now for gentlemen to come in here with a bill which on the very face of it insists first, that the State shall adopt the constitutional amendment which recognizes the right of the State to fix for itself the qualification of voters, and then contains in the same bill a fundamental provision that the State shall never exercise the right which your constitutional amendment gives, is a monstrous piece of absurdity!

Mr. President, it seems to me utterly unaccountable that men, looking at the two provisions in the same bill standing side by side, can tolerate for an instant the idea of imposing, as a fundamental condition, that the State shall never exercise the very power which you give it, if it did not have it before in the Constitution of the United States, by this second clause of the fourteenth article of amendment. It does recognize it as existing, just as the old Constitution recognized it as a right existing in the States, inherent in the States; and I contend that it is essential to the republican form of government of a State that it shall have the power to fix the qualification of its voters; otherwise its political power does not belong to itself and to its own people. If a people cannot determine who among themselves shall exercise the political power of their State, they are not an independent, republican, self-governing State, but are dependent upon some outside power or outside government, and whether that government is another State or the Congress of the United States makes no difference.

Mr. President, a good deal has been said about the celebrated Missouri case; and because Congress upon the admission of that State, inserted what is called a fundamental condition, therefore it is said to have a right to insert this fundamental condition. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fundamental condition which was inserted in the Missouri bill. It was this:

That the fourth clause of the twenty-sixth section of the third article of the constitution submitted on the part of said State to Congress, shall never be construed to authorize the passage of any law, and that no law shall be passed in conformity thereto, by which any citizen of either of the States in this Union shall be excluded from the enjoyment of any of the privileges and immunities to which such citizen is entitled under the Constitution of the United States.

This was not imposing upon the State a fundamental condition in violation of the Constitution; it was imposing on them, as a fundamental condition, that they should conform to the Constitution; that they should not, by their legislation under this clause of their pretended State constitution, violate the Constitution of the United States. That was the condition; it was a very different affair from this. Congress has the power to see to it that no person violates the Constitution of the United States, but it has no power to go outside of the Constitution and compel anybody to enter into a compact which is in violation of the Constitution of the United States. That is the difference. Congress may compel obedience; Congress cannot compel a violation. That is the difference. So in this case in Arkansas: it is possible that Congress may insert a condition which should declare that this clause in this constitution which I have read, which applies a test oath in violation of the Constitution of the United States, should be annulled. It is possible Congress would have that power, following the precedent of the Missouri case; but that is a different thing from what is here proposed. It is one thing to compel these States coming in to obey; another thing, and a very different thing, to compel them to disobey the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. President, I have not entered at all into the discussion of the general question of reconstruction. On one or two occasions heretofore I have expressed my opinions upon that subject. I have seen nothing leading me to change those opinions; but I shall not reopen that discussion at the present time. I have confined my remarks mainly to the proposition contained in this bill, to insist as a fundamental condition, a part of the contract, that this State shall agree that it never will enjoy the right which the old Constitution gives, and the right which the second section of the fourteenth amendment gives also to each State to fix the qualification of its own voters. According to the old Constitution the States could fix it without loss of representation, and according to the fourteenth article of amendment, when adopted, if they change the qualification of voters so as to disfranchise men on account of race or color they will lose to a certain extent their representation; but the right to regulate the matter for themselves they certainly would have under the Constitution, and I cannot vote for this proposition which imposes upon them the necessity of entering into a compact to violate the Constitution itself.

Mr. POMEROY. I should like to inquire if the Senator will vote for the admission. Suppose we strike out that part of the bill as it came from the House and have it simply a provision for the admission of Arkansas, will the Senator then vote for it?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If the Senator desires me to answer, I will say that, if he will take simply a resolution declaring that Arkansas has a right to be represented, I will vote for it.

Mr. POMEROY. Represent it on this constitution—I mean with this organization?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. When that question arises I will inform the Senator.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Mr. President, I am so desirous of having an early vote on this matter that I shall not take time to reply to the various propositions which have been submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCKALEW] and the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. DOOLITTLE,] but I desire to make one or two suggestions lest some statements which have been made should create a wrong impression upon the minds of Senators.

I had designed to reply to the remarks in regard to Mr. Bowen, the president of the convention; but I think sufficient has been said on that subject by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARLAN] to show that the Senator from Pennsylvania was entirely mistaken when he said that Mr. Bowen was no lawyer. It seems that he grew up in the town where the Senator from Iowa resides and was admitted to the bar there some years ago, and subsequently removing to another part of the State of Iowa became a member of its Legislature and was a man of prominence there.

The Senator from Pennsylvania complained of the two elections which had been held. That is easy explainable. The commanding officer who had control of the election under the reconstruction acts in the State of Arkansas declined to provide for the election of State officers and a Legislature, as required by the constitution which was framed by the convention in Arkansas, and simply provided for an election on the question of the ratification of the constitution. The convention, by a schedule, had provided for voting at the same time for officers for the State. This fact was represented to Congress, and in February last Congress passed a law authorizing an election of State officers to take place at the same time that the Constitution was voted upon. This law was not known to the commanding officer in time to change his directions; but the officers appointed by the convention to hold the election on the constitution went on and held the election for State officers at the same time, which was the day that the election took place, under the orders of the military commander, on the question of ratifying the constitution; so that really there were two polls opened on the same day, and the State officers were elected at the poll which was opened under the direction of the convention. At that poll most of the opponents of the constitution declined to vote; but they voted at the other poll to the number of twenty-six thousand and upward, while twenty-seven thousand nine hundred and thirteen voted for the constitution at the same polls held under the authority of the military, making a majority of thirteen hundred and sixteen votes for the constitution, as appears by the return of General Gillem. We have here the returns from all the precincts in the State of Arkansas of the election held under the authority of the military commander, showing a majority for the constitution of thirteen hundred and sixteen votes. At the polls held under the authority of the convention, thirty thousand three hundred and eighty votes were cast in favor of the constitution, and only forty-one against it. This accounts for the two elections.

The Senator from Pennsylvania says that by these returns submitted by General Gillem it does not appear that the Constitution was adopted, and he goes into the details of the election with a view of showing that fact. Time will not allow that I should go through with these details; but the statement that he makes is calculated to create an erroneous impression if left uncontradicted. He says, for instance, that in two or three counties, Pulaski and Jefferson, I think, that the vote polled is larger than the number of registered voters in those counties. That is true, and well it might be, because we had passed a law in February preceding which declared—

Mr. BUCKALEW. The Senator will allow me to correct him. That law was passed the 11th of March. I have it on my desk.

Mr. TRUMBULL. No; the election was held on the 13th of March. I have the law before me; it was passed and received by the President on the 28th of February, 1868, and became a law and was in force in Arkansas before this election was held.

Mr. BUCKALEW. The 11th of March.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The 11th of March, if you please; the election was on the 13th. It passed Congress and is indorsed as received by the President "February 28, 1868." The President held the bill, so that it did not become a law for ten days which would make it the 11th of March, perhaps; I have not counted the time.

Mr. WILSON. The Senator will allow me to say that the law was sent to that State, and was received in some parts of it and not in others, and thousands of men lost their votes for that reason.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I was going to state that the law was not received by General Gillem in time for him to make his arrangements under it; but the people of Arkansas knew of the passage of this law by Congress ten days or two weeks before the election, and that it was in the hands of the President; and they had official information of its having become a law in portions of the State at the time of voting; hence the commissioners having charge of the election in the counties to which the Senator from Pennsylvania referred received the votes of all registered persons, no matter whether they were residents of the county or not, and in that way the vote was swelled in those counties, while in other counties the vote was much below the registry.

Mr. SHERMAN. And the Senator will allow me to say that the commissioners met with the law before them and decided that they were bound by the law. That is shown by the report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Which was true. They were bound by it, of course.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The law was in force, and they were bound by the law, of course.

Mr. BUCKALEW. They did not follow it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. They did in those counties where they had it, and in other counties the vote is much below the registry.

I think no list of the names of these persons who were registered in other counties was preserved, so that you could afterward test the correctness of the election. That was an irregularity; but after General Gillem had sent out officers, and they had gone over the State of Arkansas, and spent some time—I think it was more than a month after the election took place before he made his return—he was unable to ascertain that there were such irregularities or such frauds in the election as to vary the result as he gives it. The officers who were sent out state that in many instances there was a disposition to trifle with them on the part of those alleging frauds. Frauds were alleged upon both sides. The officers sent to examine into them made their reports to General Gillem, and he having the whole matter before him sends here the return of the vote in the State, showing a majority of more than thirteen hundred votes for the constitution. He also sends the reports of these officers who were sent out to different parts of Arkansas to look into this question of fraud. An opportunity was given to show that there were frauds which would defeat the election, if that were the case; but there was an utter failure to show it.

It is fairly shown by this record that the constitution has been ratified by a majority of the people of the State of Arkansas who voted on the question. There may have been some irregularities; I think there were; but, in my judgment, it sufficiently appears from the facts shown that the constitution was fairly adopted.

It is alleged that men were kept from the polls by threats and by violence, and in some places that they were unable to open a poll at all. Perhaps there are as many allegations of fraud upon one side as the other. I think it is not necessary to follow the Senator from Pennsylvania further on that point. I will not take up time unnecessarily.

The Senator from Pennsylvania complains of the homestead exemption provision in the constitution. It is a liberal provision, but it is to operate in futuro. Every person making contracts in that State will make them with reference to the constitution of the State. It is a matter about which individuals and States differ. The modern tendency has been to enlarge the amount of property that is to be protected from execution. In the new States, a much larger amount of property is exempted than in the old. This is a liberal provision in Arkansas; but I do not know that it is an unreasonable provision. I do not think we should reject their constitution for any such reason. If it does not work well, the people of Arkansas can amend and change their constitution in that respect.

A word now as to what has been said by the Senator from Wisconsin. He makes two objections, and it seems to me his objections are inconsistent with each other. In the first place, he objects because the constitution of Arkansas requires that a person who applies to vote shall take an oath that he will recognize the political and civil equality of all persons before the law, that he will "accept the situation," if you please. I do not think I should have inserted such a clause in the constitution if I had been making it; but the Senator from Wisconsin and I both agree that this question of suffrage is to be regulated by each State for itself. If it suits the people of Arkansas to have it that way, I do not know what provision of the Constitution of the United States forbids it.

The Senator goes on afterward to say that he objects to the fundamental condition inserted in the bill by the House of Representatives, which declares that the State constitution shall not be amended hereafter, so as to deprive any citizen or class of persons of the right to vote to whom that right is now given; and he says that we have no right to impose such a condition. I do not know that I would disagree with the Senator from Wisconsin on that point. I believe the people of Arkansas will have the same right to change their constitution when they are recognized as having a State government entitled to representation in Congress, as the people of Wisconsin or the people of Illinois now have, and I am very sure that the people of my State claim the right to regulate suffrage for themselves. I think the people of Arkansas will have the same right, and although I have reported this bill from the Judiciary Committee under instructions just as it came from the House of Representatives, and shall vote for the bill in that shape if the Senate shall not strike out the condition, yet since the Senator from Connecticut has moved to strike it out, I shall be compelled to vote for the motion, because I regard it as a condition that cannot be enforced. I would not have put it upon the bill; but still, it being upon the bill, if I cannot restore Arkansas to her relations in the Union without suffering an objectionable clause to be put upon the bill, I will take the objectionable clause rather than lose Arkansas.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] quietly asks if I would vote for an unconstitutional bill. I would not vote for an unconstitutional bill that was to have a practical operation; but I would not refuse to vote for a bill of this kind because a provision believed by me to be invalid was put upon it, and which I did not believe could ever have a practical operation, when I could not obtain the passage of the bill without that provision.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No unconstitutional law can have practical operation.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is not exactly true that no unconstitutional law could have a practical operation. An unconstitutional law might be of such a character as to produce great mischief before it was declared unconstitutional. The practical working of the law before it should be so declared might work great mischief. In this instance I do not see how it could. I have no objection to the provision of the Arkansas constitution on the question of suffrage; so far from it, I am in favor of allowing those persons to vote that the constitution of the State provides shall vote. It declares that—

"Every male person born in the United States, and every male person who has been naturalized, or has legally declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States, who is twenty-one years old or upward, and who shall have resided in the State six months next preceding the election, and who at the time is an actual resident of the county in which he offers to vote, except as hereinafter provided, shall be deemed an elector."

The fundamental condition attached to this bill provides against any change of the constitution hereafter so as to abridge the right of suffrage which it confers. I cannot think such a condition has any binding efficacy; others think differently, and something is certainly due to their opinions. While I would not vote for a bill which was clearly unconstitutional, I do not feel compelled to vote against every bill which contains, as I conceive, even an unconstitutional feature which can have no practical importance, or effect in any way the great object of the bill. The great object to be attained by the passage of this bill is the recognition of a State government in Arkansas, and so far no one questions its constitutionality or validity. The fundamental condition sought to be imposed, in my view, can never have any operative effect, and while I shall vote to strike it out I am unwilling to vote against and defeat so desirable a measure, even if it remains in, because I think there will be no practical way of enforcing it against the people of Arkansas should they be restored to their former relations in the Union, and afterward think proper to change their constitution.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Before the Senator from Illinois takes his seat, I wish to call his attention to the case as to time upon the notice of the passage of the act of the 11th of March, 1868. General Gillem states that he did not receive information of that part of the law which related to the voting of persons in other than their proper districts until after the election. He meant by that, of course, after the election generally in the State. Persons in that State received notice before the election was concluded in the counties where the surplus votes were taken, because in those counties—and that is one of the decisive points against the validity of those votes—the election was held until the 1st of April; they kept on voting. The presumption is that the whole of those surplus votes which they pretended to put in under the act of the 11th of March were put in without any right whatever. The Senator seemed to think that the people had notice and knowledge generally in the State of Arkansas of that act. It was a notice and knowledge that applied to those two counties, because they kept their election open eighteen days beyond the time. I have no doubt in my own mind that the whole body of those votes were of men who had voted previously.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I do not intend to detain the Senate or take up time, but I will simply say to my honorable friend from Illinois that I do not understand precisely the rule which should govern us on these questions, that now we can vote for an unconstitutional measure and now we cannot. I do not understand that any such rule is to govern us.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS], to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary, with the instructions proposed by him.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. FERRY], to strike out all of the bill after the word "union" in the fourth line.

Mr. HENDERSON. I rise, Mr. President, for the purpose of expressing the wish that this proposition of the Senator from Connecticut shall prevail. I differ with the Senator from Illinois about it. The provision contained in the bill which the Senator from Connecticut moves to strike out is a condition that the constitution of the State of Arkansas shall never be changed in the provision relative to the right of suffrage. That constitution provides that every person born in the United States, and every foreign-born person who has been naturalized or declared his intention to become a citizen, and has lived in the State for six months, shall be entitled to vote. Suppose it occurs in the future that a large number of foreigners shall come into the State, and it shall become very desirable for the people of Arkansas to take away the suffrage enjoyed under the present constitution by unnaturalized foreigners, is it possible that the Congress of the United States will declare that that shall not be done? Will Congress declare that the people of Arkansas may not exclude paupers from the suffrage? They are entitled to vote under this constitution. I have had my doubts, and I have my doubts now, whether unnaturalized foreigners, upon a mere declaration of intention, can be entitled to vote under the Constitution of the United States. However, my own State grants that privilege, and it has been granted in many of the western States and some of the northern States, I believe. I have always had my doubts about the constitutionality of any such provision, but perhaps it is too late to object to it now. I cannot, however, consent to declare in this bill, or in any other, that a State shall not be permitted to alter or amend its constitution where I can see very plainly that very great damage or injury may be done by so declaring.

The Senator from Illinois says that this is an unconstitutional provision. I do not think that that is entirely clear. I think there are reasons why the courts may sustain this provision, and I think there was a great deal in the very able argument that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] made yesterday, not that any precedent will reach this case, but that there may be something in this particular case, and in reference to the other States from the South to be admitted, which is very different from the Missouri case and very different from the Nevada and Nebraska cases.

Why is it that we cannot attach this condition in reference to these revolted States? Is there nothing in the international law on the subject? If the Senator from Illinois will turn to the decision of the Supreme Court in the prize cases (2 Black) he will see that every member of the Supreme Court adopted the idea that this was a territorial war, and that all the incidents of a foreign war attached to it. Mr. Justice Grier, delivering the opinion of the court, uses this language:

"When the regular course of justice is interrupted by revolt, rebellion, or insurrection, so that the courts cannot be kept open, civil war exists, and hostilities may be prosecuted on the same footing as if those opposing the Government were foreign enemies invading the land."

Suppose this was foreign territory conquered by us; there would be no doubt about our right to attach a condition of this sort unless the Constitution steps in the way of it, unless there is something in the idea that there is a perfect equality of the States. But then the Supreme Court may say that it is not a provision inimical or hostile to the Constitution; that it does not contravene the Constitution, and that therefore we may constitutionally impose it. The Senator from Illinois may be right, but he may be wrong.

When you come to the dissenting opinion of the minority of the court in the prize cases, it is just as specific on this point as the decision of the majority. Mr. Justice Nelson, in his opinion, says:

"In the case of a rebellion or resistance of a portion of the people of a country against the established government, there is no doubt, if in its progress and enlargement the Government thus sought to be overthrown sees fit, it may by the competent power recognize or declare the existence of a state of civil war, which will draw after it all the consequences and rights of war between the contending parties as in the case of a public war."

Does it really draw all those rights and incidents? If that be the case, what are those rights and incidents? Vattel says:

"The objects of war are three:
"1. To recover what belongs or is due to us.
"2. To provide for our future safety by punishing the aggressor or offender.
"3. To defend ourselves or to protect ourselves from injury by repelling unjust violence."

Mr. President suppose that the courts hereafter shall decide, after we have attached this condition, that inasmuch as Congress has declared that this is a result of the war, and that we had to take it as security for the future, the judgment of Congress is conclusive, then of course the theory of the Senator from Illinois would be entirely upturned. We must remember that this is a matter for the courts to determine, and not for us to determine after we have once attached the condition. I am not altogether clear that the courts will not sustain this condition, not because they might not say that the Nevada provision is not constitutional. They might so declare and yet declare that this fundamental condition is a constitutional one on the ground that in this case we have the rights of a conqueror under international law. Our Government is certainly subject to that law, as all other civilized nations are, and inasmuch as in that view the provision does not contravene the Constitution of the United States, the courts may say that it is a valid and proper provision. If so, I am opposed to it.

Now, Mr. President, if the proposition of the Senator from Connecticut prevails, I desire to offer an amendment to be incorporated into the bill upon which I am willing to stand, and it is a provision which I think the Senate ought to be willing to make. I would strike out the condition in the bill and insert one which I propose to offer. I differ with gentlemen when they say they would insert no provision for security. I think we ought to do so. But what ought we to require? Is it that every negro in the southern States shall vote, whether he is qualified to vote, for all time to come? I think not. What should we do? We should say that the suffrage of the negroes shall be on an equal term with the suffrage of the white men. If the white man is to be excluded for a certain cause, let the negro also be excluded for the same cause; let us not declare, as this provision declares, that every negro, because every negro in Arkansas is entitled to vote under this constitution, shall vote for all time to come. But put him upon terms of equality with the white man; that is going far enough; and let both white and black be excluded from the polls for the same reason, as, for example, for want of sufficient intelligence to vote or for pauperism. Having stricken out the condition in the bill, I would insert a proposition of this character:

Upon the fundamental condition that said State, in fixing the qualifications of electors therein, shall not be authorized to discriminate against any person on account of race, color, or previous condition; and also upon the further condition that no person on account of race or color shall be excluded from the benefit of education or be deprived of an equal share of the moneys or other funds created or used by public authority to promote education in said State.

Without the second condition of course they could exclude the negroes from any of the benefits of education, and thereby lay a foundation and produce a reason for excluding them from the suffrage; but if both are adopted, of course they are put upon an equality with the whites, in reference not only to education, but in reference to the suffrage. My experience teaches me, on this subject, that this provision would be exactly right. I do not say that they shall hold office; I do not give them the same political rights, nor the same civil rights; I simply say that they shall be entitled to the suffrage on equal terms with white men.

Suppose that this provision be unconstitutional; suppose it be one that the courts will not uphold and sustain, then, of course, we have done no harm; but if the courts will uphold a provision of this character, they had better uphold my provision than one which prevents the State in all time to come from altering its regulation of the suffrage, which, in my judgment, would be an outrageous proposition. There may be various reasons why the suffrage regulations of the State should be amended in the future. If the motion of the Senator from Connecticut shall carry, I desire to offer this proposition, and I think it is just.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. FERRY,] on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 20, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Bayard, Buckalew, Conkling, Corbett, Doolittle, Drake, Ferry, Fessenden, Frelinghuysen, Henderson, Hendricks, Howe, McCreery, Morgan, Morrill of New Hampshire, Patterson of Tennessee, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Vickers, Willey, and Williams—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Cameron, Chandler, Cole, Cragin, Edmunds, Harlan, Howe, Morgan, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Thayer, Wade, Wilson, and Yates—21.

ABSENT—Messrs. Cattell, Conness, Davis, Dixon, Fowler, Grimes, Howard, Johnson, Morton, Norton, Nye, Saulsbury, and Tipton—13.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DRAKE. I now offer the substitute for the bill which I laid on the table the other day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read it, as follows:

Strike out all of the bill after the enacting clause and insert:

That upon the fundamental condition hereinafter expressed, the State of Arkansas, under and with the constitution thereof adopted in the year 1868, shall be entitled to be admitted to representation in Congress as one of the States of the Union, as soon as the amendment of the Constitution of the United States proposed by the Thirty-Ninth Congress, and known as article fourteen, shall have become a part of that constitution: Provided, That the Legislature of said State shall have first passed an act agreeing, on behalf of said State, to the following fundamental condition of such admission, to wit: that there shall never be in said State any denial or abridgment of the elective franchise, or of any other right to any person by reason or on account of race or color, excepting Indians not taxed; and that any such denial or abridgment shall authorize the exclusion, while it continues, of said State from representation in either House of Congress.

Mr. DRAKE. Mr. President—

Mr. FESSENDEN. Will the Senator excuse me a moment? I notice that the Senator from Missouri will address the Senate probably at some length on this amendment. It is now late, nearly five o'clock. I do not think we can finish this bill to-night, and I do not know that it is particularly desirable to do so when there is no other business pressing. I will therefore, with his permission, move an adjournment.

Mr. DRAKE. I have no objection to giving way to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I want to hear the Senator when I am fresh. I wish to listen to him. We can finish the bill on Monday.

Mr. DRAKE. I give way.

Mr. SHERMAN. I object.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope we shall not adjourn. We must some time or other finish this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. HENDERSON. I appeal to the Senator from Maine. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill. My colleague has offered a substitute for the entire bill. I now desire to offer an amendment to the original bill, so as to perfect it, which is certainly in order; and if the proposition to adjourn is carried, I shall not get it in. I desire to be permitted to offer it for the time being, and then the Senate may adjourn or not.

Mr. SUMNER. Let us order that to be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made.

Mr. HENDERSON. I submit it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be received and ordered to be printed. It is moved that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. SPRAGUE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 21, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Buckalew, Cattell, Conkling, Cragin, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fessenden, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Henderson, Hendricks, Howe, McCreery, Morgan, Morrill of New Hampshire, Patterson of Tennessee, Ross, Sumner, Vickers, and Yates—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Cameron, Chandler, Cole, Conness, Corbett, Drake, Harlan, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Thayer, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, Williams, and Wilson—22.

ABSENT—Messrs. Davis, Dixon, Ferry, Grimes, Howard, Johnson, Morton, Norton, Nye, Saulsbury, and Tipton—11.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri has the floor.

Mr. DRAKE. Mr. President, I confess that I feel an exceeding embarrassment about undertaking to address the Senate at this time after the Senator from Maine has informed the Senate that I have got a long speech to deliver. I had some views to express in connection with this amendment, which, in order that I might occupy the time of the Senate just as little as possible in the expression of them, and condense them as far as possible, I have put down on paper, and it will not take any great while for me to express those views to the Senate. A great deal of debate has been had. Other Senators have made speeches one and two hours long. I have sat and listened to them with a great deal of interest, a great deal of attention. I do not wish to proceed now, sir, if the Senate does not wish to hear me.

Several SENATORS. Let us adjourn.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If the Senator will allow me I will move to adjourn. I think it is doubtful if the Senate will listen with that degree of attention which the Senator from Missouri ought to have, it is so late.

Mr. DRAKE. I suppose it is not worth while to put the question of adjournment, or for me to yield the floor to put the question of adjournment again; but as I am not accustomed to make very long speeches here, nor, in comparison with others, a great many of them, I would rather, when I have matured anything that I think worth saying in the Senate, that I should have the opportunity of saying it, and unless there is some decisive manifestation of impatience on the part of the Senate I will proceed to say what I have prepared to say on this occasion.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, I feel very impatient myself, and, with the consent of my colleague, I will move an adjournment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator give way for that motion?

Mr. DRAKE. Yes, sir; I give way again for a motion to adjourn.

Mr. CONNESS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator indulge the Chair to lay before the Senate bills of the House?

Mr. CONNESS. I hope we shall have the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn before any other business is done. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. The bills can be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate certain bills of the House.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolutions received from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia:

A bill (H. R. No. 425) for the relief of Mary A. Filler;

A bill (H. R. No. 553) for the relief of A. W. Ballard;

A bill (H. R. No. 938) to authorize the sale of twenty acres of land in the military reservation at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas;

A bill (H. R. No. 1128) for the relief of Isaac Watts;

A bill (H. R. No. 1129) for the relief of the widow and children of Colonel James A. Mulligan, deceased;

A bill (H. R. No. 1130) for the relief of H. G. Aiken, late captain fourth Iowa infantry;

A bill (H. R. No. 1070) for the relief of O. P. Shiras;

A bill (H. R. No. 1081) for the relief of John A. Neustadter;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 256) for the relief of Martha E. King;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 280) for the relief of Miss Ella E. Hobart; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 281) authorizing the issue of clothing to company F, eighteenth regiment United States infantry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved and seconded that the Senate do now adjourn, upon which motion the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. CONNESS. The honorable Senator from Missouri [Mr. DRAKE] informs me that he does not now wish to go on this evening. Therefore, I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think we had better take the question by yeas and nays. We shall never pass the bill in the Senate without a night session.

Mr. CONKLING. Is that motion debatable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not debatable. The yeas and nays must be taken unless the Senate will consent that the call be withdrawn.

Mr. POMEROY. I object to the call being withdrawn.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 23, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Buckalew, Cameron, Conkling, Conness, Cragin, Drake, Edmunds, Fessenden, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Henderson, Hendricks, McCreery, Morgan, Morrill of Maine, Patterson of New Hampshire, Patterson of Tennessee, Ross, Sumner, Van Winkle, Vickers, and Yates—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Cattell, Chandler, Cole, Corbett, Morrill of Vermont, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Thayer, Trumbull, Wade, Willey, Williams, and Wilson—17.

ABSENT—Messrs. Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Ferry, Grimes, Harlan, Howard, Johnson, Morton, Norton, Nye, Saulsbury, and Tipton—14.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, May 30, 1868.

The House met at twelve o'clock m.
The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

RECUSANT WITNESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to submit to the House a report of his action in regard to the witness, Charles W. Woolley, who was confined by order of the House, in accordance with the requirement of the third section of the law of January 24, 1857, which is embodied in the Digest, page 192. The Speaker certified, under the seal of the House, the facts in this case to the district attorney for the District of Columbia, Mr. Carrington. Yesterday, after the order of the House that "meanwhile no person should communicate with the witness either in writing or orally, except upon the order of the Speaker," the Speaker received a message from the witness desiring the attendance and assistance of three lawyers as his counsel. The Chair accordingly ordered that they should have access to him. He also desired that, in addition to his wife, his child and nurse should also have access to him. The Speaker ordered that they also should be admitted. He also instructed the officer in charge that the witness should have an opportunity to converse with his counsel and wife without being overheard by the officer who, under the order of the House, is keeping him in close confinement.

A question has now arisen which the Chair desires to submit to the House, as to their own construction of the resolution "that no person shall communicate with said Woolley in writing or verbally except upon the order of the Speaker," that is, in regard to letters to and from him, and telegraphic dispatches to and from him. On yesterday a dispatch was submitted in a sealed envelope to the Speaker, directed to Mr. Woolley, with a superscription unusual in its character upon the exterior, and, in the opinion of the Speaker, not only not respectful to the House but intended purposely to be insulting to the House of Representatives. The Speaker hesitated as to whether it should be delivered to him, but upon reflection, as the witness could not be responsible for dispatches sent to him by other persons, the Speaker ordered the officer to deliver the dispatch to him. The question he now desires to submit is, what action shall be taken by the Speaker in regard to allowing telegraphic dispatches and letters to pass to and from the witness? If such is the order of the House they will be communicated to him; if not, the House must take the responsibility in the matter.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to make a single explanation in regard to the telegram.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. If the gentleman is allowed to make an explanation I hope a similar opportunity will be allowed, if desired, by some gentleman who differs with him in opinion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot determine what will be the action of the House. He submitted the question to the House, so that if any gentleman should make a motion the Chair would recognize him. The gentleman from Massachusetts can submit any motion he desires.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. The gentleman desires, however, to make an explanation.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman makes a point of order the Chair will rule upon it.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I do not object to any explanation the gentleman desires to make, but I do ask, in furtherance of truth and justice, that some member on this side may also have an opportunity to explain.

The SPEAKER. Of course, unless the previous question is operating, the Chair would recognize some gentleman on the opposite side; but he cannot determine what the House will do. The House must determine for itself. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Wisconsin does not object to the gentleman from Massachusetts being entitled to the floor.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire before I submit a motion simply to state what happened in regard to the dispatch referred to. That dispatch, which I have sent for, was inclosed by Mr. Woolley to me in a note containing these words:

This dispatch seems to be disloyal to the late managers. I think you are the proper custodian of it.
CHARLES W. WOOLLEY.

The dispatch was substantially in these words:

Sovereign citizen Woolley, held by the hands of tyrants. Every true man with any blood in his veins will stand by you. Stand firm. It is the last feather that breaks the camel's back.

GEORGE A. JONES.
Metropolitan Hotel.

George A. Jones is a person whom we had previously directed to be summoned for complicity with Woolley. That note of Woolley and the dispatch I will have laid before the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend for a moment. The Chair did not know until now the contents of the dispatch, as it was in a sealed envelope, and of course, only the superscription was known to the Chair.

Mr. BUTLER. I should not have known its contents if it had not been sent to me by Mr. Woolley with this note, evidently for the purpose of insult; and whether the House will vindicate its dignity, or whether anybody will want to defend such insults to the House, is another question.

I hold in my hand another matter bearing on this to show that it will not do for my friends on the other side to rely on Mr. Woolley's statement. In the statement which the House refused to hear read yesterday, but which is published in the National Intelligencer, he says that he was treated abusively and rudely by the committee and by myself. I will read now from his sworn testimony when he was before the committee on the second day:

"The witness being sworn by Mr. BOUTWELL, the chairman of the sub-committee"—

Mr. BOYER. Mr. Speaker, if it be by unanimous consent that the gentleman is allowed to read these statements, I must object upon this ground: that the gentleman has himself objected to the House hearing any statement made by the prisoner. The gentleman himself objected to that, otherwise I should not object to the statement which he appears now to be about to make in answer to what has been published in the newspapers.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects, and the gentleman from Massachusetts will state his proposition, which will then be before the House for debate.

Mr. BUTLER. I move, then, that no telegrams or letters be sent to the witness after he has thus contemned the House, except through the inspection of the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the Speaker does not think he has a right to open anything that is in a sealed envelope, even by the order of the House.

Mr. BUTLER. I suppose not, without the order of the House.

The SPEAKER. Not even by the order of the House.

Mr. BUTLER. Then if Mr. Woolley does not choose to receive them in that way they must not be sent to him at all. I think the House should have some power to protect itself. If it has not, then our presence here is pretty much useless.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair understands the gentleman from Massachusetts to make a motion that nothing but open communications shall be transmitted to the witness.

Mr. BUTLER. That is the point.

Mr. WOOD. With the permission of the gentleman from Massachusetts, I will remind him of the fact that there are some things that the House of Representatives even cannot do. They cannot violate all law; they cannot violate the Constitution of the United States and the statutes of the country. The Speaker of this House cannot break the seals of letters.

Mr. BUTLER. I believe I am on the floor, and I decline to yield.

Mr. WOOD. I would remind the gentleman from Massachusetts that there is a higher power than even the board of managers.

Mr. BLAINE. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUTLER. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. BLAINE. I desire to ask, if the three counsel have access freely to the prisoner, with the freedom which characterizes the intercourse between client and counsel, why may not all letters and telegrams be taken to and from the prisoner by those counsel, and why should the House bother themselves about preventing an evil which they cannot prevent?

Mr. VAN TRUMP. I wish to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question germane to the motion he has made. I wish to inquire how this dispatch came into his possession, sealed or unsealed?

Mr. BUTLER. I will answer with great pleasure. It came into my possession sealed in an envelope directed by the hand of Mr. Woolley, inclosing a note from Woolley to me saying, "This dispatch seems to be disloyal to the late managers."

Mr. VAN TRUMP. And that dispatch was open?

Mr. BUTLER. The dispatch was open inside the envelope.

Mr. WOODWARD. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BUTLER. For a question.

Mr. WOODWARD. I desire to offer a resolution germane to this subject.

Mr. BUTLER. I will hear it read.

Mr. WOODWARD. I desire to offer the following as a substitute for the gentleman's motion:

Resolved, That Charles W. Woolley be brought immediately to the bar of the House, attended by his counsel, and that the managers be permitted to address the said witness any questions which the House may decide to be relevant and proper.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not yield to the gentleman to allow such a resolution to be offered.

Mr. WOODWARD. I want an opportunity to offer that resolution afterward.

Mr. BUTLER. Now, then, to address myself to the several propositions suggested. In the first place, I was upon the question how this man had been treated. I have his sworn statement here upon that subject.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I would inquire of the Chair how that is legitimate to the proposition before the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is legitimate to the proposition which the Chair has submitted to the House; that is, the construction the House will put upon the resolution the House has ordered the Speaker to execute.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Will that open the question so that we may have an opportunity of ascertaining how the witness himself considers he has been treated, so that we may have the opportunity to answer the gentleman? Or is this to be entirely an ex parte matter, and is the witness to be tried, condemned, and executed without a hearing?

Mr. BUTLER. I do not yield for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen from Wisconsin, [Mr. ELDRIDGE,] as the Chair understood, rose to a point of order. The Chair will rule that the gentleman should withhold his point of order until remarks have been made to which objection may be taken.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BUTLER. I do not yield.

Mr. WOOD. I rise to a point of order. My point of order is that the Chair has already told the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] and the House, as I understand the Chair, that the Speaker would have no authority to do what the motion proposed to authorize him to do, even if the House did order it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] is mistaken in his statement of fact he presents to the House. When the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] first indicated that all communications to and from the witness should be revised by the Speaker, the Speaker said he should not feel himself, even by order of the House, authorized to break a seal. Whereupon the gentleman from Massachusetts changed his proposition to the effect that all communications to be delivered to him shall be open communications.

Mr. WOOD. I did not so understand the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman from New York did not hear the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts, for he so stated distinctly.

Mr. WOOD. Suppose sealed communications come to him?

The SPEAKER. They would not be delivered to him, if the House should adopt the order.

Mr. WOOD. The Speaker could not open them, even by order of the House?

The SPEAKER. The proposition is not to give the Speaker authority to open them.

Mr. BUTLER. If gentlemen would listen instead of insisting upon talking all the time I think they would understand something.

Let me state exactly what the sworn testimony of Mr. Woolley is in regard to the manner in which he has been treated by the committee. He says:

"C. W. Woolley, sworn by Mr. BOUTWELL, chairman of the sub-committee, and examined by Mr. BUTLER.

"The witness, on being sworn by Mr. BOUTWELL, inquired of him if he was the chairman, and was informed by Mr. BOUTWELL that he was chairman pro tempore in the absence of Mr. BINGHAM by sickness.

"Witness. I ask you now, gentlemen, to strike out all that was written yesterday, as the oath was not administered by the chairman; to expunge everything that was written, because the oath was not administered by the chairman. I would also ask for the authority of the chairman to administer the oath. I do not mean this by way of preventing justice, but simply, as I have been pretty roughly handled in the newspapers. You, gentlemen, have been polite to me, and I thank you for it. I feel that you have treated me courteously."

Now, to answer some of the questions which have been propounded to me, I understand the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] to say that it will be impossible to prevent counsel from smuggling letters, papers, and telegrams to the witness. I had supposed that, when reminded of the order of the House, and put upon their personal and professional honor, they would not do it. They ought not to do it; and to do so would be a contempt of the House for which we should find a remedy, provided gentlemen on the other side think they have any interest in the dignity and propriety of the House.

Mr. BLAINE. I referred to such dispatches and letters as counsel themselves might judge necessary for the defense of their client. That being a matter of discretion, does it not cover a margin which the House would be entirely incompetent to control?

Mr. BUTLER. I agree, sir, that almost everything can be done by indirection and fraud. That is very clear. We can only protect ourselves as well as we can, and take the usual and ordinary course.

Now, then, to answer the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WOOD.] He says there are many things the House cannot do. I agree with him upon that point. In his own case the House tried to bring him to a sense of his duty by censure, and failed. But I think we can, when we have a witness in contempt, deal with him in such a way as the law allows. There is no constitutional provision which allows men to do wrong.

Now, one word in answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WOODWARD,] who thinks Mr. Woolley should be brought in here to answer the managers or the committee after discussion here as to the propriety of the questions put. Sir, a witness in contempt of any court is never allowed to make any communication to the court until he has purged himself from contempt. If that is not well settled, there is no law known on earth. There is no propriety in permitting a witness to come here and have discussion as to the questions put, and it is a gross impropriety for any member to bring into the House statements of the witness which the witness himself cannot bring in his own person, (and the impropriety of such a proceeding was properly animadverted on yesterday,) for such statements may be false, as they were false yesterday on his own statement.

The witness has refused to answer certain questions. He stands on that refusal. Now, the question raised by the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is, Shall he be brought before the House with counsel and we here in the House go on with the examination? Was this ever done before? Will it ever be done again? Can the gentleman cite a single precedent for allowing this man to come here with his counsel to argue on the floor the propriety of questions and whether the witness shall answer or not? Have counsel ever been heard on the floor of the House except when unfortunately they had not only the retainer of the party, but were members? This House has not the time to pursue any such cumbrous and unprecedented method of investigation. I want to call your attention, Mr. Speaker, and that of the House, to the fact that this recalcitrant witness is taking up more of the time of the country than he is worth.

A MEMBER. That is true.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, that is true; and gentlemen on the other side are aiding and abetting him.

Mr. WOOD. It is the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] who is taking up the time of the country in an unjust persecution.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not hear the remark.

Mr. WOOD. It is the gentleman from Massachusetts who is taking up the time of the country by an unjust and unconstitutional persecution of an individual.

Mr. BUTLER. I have taken up such time as I deemed was right. But this witness comes here through the seventeen gentlemen, more or less, who appear for him. Now, then, sir, I have only to ask the House to protect itself. I am aware of the great desire that Mr. Woolley, and those who are in complicity with him, have to get at the testimony; and if we could get his answer before the House, then there would be great rejoicing in certain quarters, for then other people could square their testimony with his. Mr. Speaker, I did not ask you, and the committee did not ask you, not to let him have telegrams or letters; but I call the attention of the House to the fact that the very first use he has made of the courtesy and privilege extended by the House has been an attempt to insult the House. Now, this House of Representatives may, some time or other, if the people are so insensible as to do it, be in the hands of gentlemen on the other side; and will they—they and their fathers in the old time did not—will they allow the House to be insulted?

Mr. BROOKS. Will the gentleman allow me to answer that question?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BROOKS. We will do exactly with Mr. Woolley, thus imprisoned, what the Democratic party did with Matthew Lyon, imprisoned under the alien and sedition laws, and Andrew Jackson, because of his fine at New Orleans; repay them all their expenditures, with compound interest, for the sufferings inflicted upon them.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Pennsylvania. Would you do so whether guilty or not?

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman also pay back the $16,000 which he either sent to Cincinnati or placed in Sheridan Shooks' hand, or which he spent in his own private business; and upon the witness's testimony will they ever find out what he did with it, for he has sworn all three ways?

Mr. BOYER. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion, and it is this—

Mr. BUTLER. I cannot yield.

Mr. BOYER. The witness does not refuse to answer any question propounded by the House.

Mr. BUTLER. Not to take up too much time I will now call for the previous question.

Mr. WOODWARD. I wish to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to allow me to move my resolution as an amendment to his motion, and to take the sense of the House on it. I do not propose to debate it.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I thought it was the tacit assent at all events of the House if the gentleman from Massachusetts was allowed to proceed as he has proceeded, that someone thinking differently from him might, if they desired it, have an opportunity to reply.

Mr. WOODWARD. I ask my friend to allow me?

Mr. BUTLER. How long does the gentleman desire?

Mr. WOODWARD. I do not ask any time for myself. I simply wish to move my resolution as an amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. I cannot permit that. You may have any time to discuss.

Mr. ELDRIDGE rose.

Mr. BUTLER. How long does the gentleman from Wisconsin want?

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Only a few minutes.

Mr. BUTLER. How many minutes?

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Say ten.

Mr. BUTLER. Very well, ten minutes.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I must say that this whole proceeding against Woolley, to my mind, does partake of unmitigated persecution. I endeavored to argue yesterday, in the ten minutes allowed me, that the only question of contempt with which he was charged by the committee was in not answering the question relating to the telegram in reference to the $5,000. I assert now, after carefully reading the report of the committee, that there is no other charge, and I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to say whether there is in the report of the committee any other charge of contempt than that of refusal to answer with reference to this telegram?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir, there is; the sending of a certificate in the morning that he was sick and then running away to New York at night, and there concealing evidence which would have been within our reach if he had not.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. If that is the ground upon which the gentleman is proceeding he is proceeding upon a ground outside of the record, and a matter too fully explained and justified by the witness. He has made, and the House has acted on no such proposition; and I now assert again that the gentleman is proceeding against this man Woolley upon grounds entirely outside of the record which the committee has presented for the House to act upon. It has been my opinion from the beginning that there was something at the bottom of this proceeding, something actuating the committee, something moving the committee of which the House was not properly informed. There is in it some hostility, some feeling, some anger, some passion, some resentment, some disappointment, some mortification which moves the committee, and in which this House ought not to participate. It is this that is to make this witness a victim. He is to be visited with all these passions of the committee, and subjected to this proposed punishment. This House has never determined the propriety or impropriety of the question propounded to the prisoner, except in its action consigning him to prison. The committee itself has determined all the questions, and the House has acquiesced only. It was its duty in the first place to have acted on that question, and have determined Woolley should have answered it. Then, if he had refused, he would have been in contempt of the House. As it now stands, his refusal to answer the question of the committee, whether right or wrong, is treated as a contempt of the House. But Mr. Woolley has been before the House, and told us that he was ready, prepared at any moment, upon its direction, to answer any and all questions which the House decides he shall answer. This has not only been his statement to the House once, but it has been several times made and repeated, and he stands ready, as I am informed, now to answer any proper question which the House, composed as it is largely of those opposed to him, shall decide he ought to answer. Now, I put it to this House in all candor and sincerity, if his request is not reasonable—if the House ought not fairly to decide between him and the committee, and if he can be in contempt while he stands ready to obey the order of the House.

Mr. MULLINS. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I cannot out of my ten minutes. I would yield to everybody if I had the time.

Here is a committee raised confessedly, avowedly for another and a different purpose than that of investigating the conduct of members of the House or the Senate, or any other question of public interest, raised for a partisan purpose, raised for the purpose of impeachment, composed of gentlemen upon one side of the question of impeachment, committed to it before their election, nominated in a political, partisan caucus, and their names presented to this House and confirmed in their appointment by a political and partisan majority in this House.

Mr. BROOKS. Two of them from one State.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Yes. Two of them from the State of Massachusetts, appointed or elected only to manage the trial of impeachment, and because of their abilities and interest to push it strongly. Now, this witness is brought before this committee, composed as it is and created as it was, and he complains that they are actuated by unfriendly or hostile or angry feelings toward him, that he is not fairly treated by them; he claims that he is insulted and abused, and that the questions put to him are improper. I insist that this House ought to decide the question for itself as between this witness and the committee. If the House shall decide that he shall answer, and he then refuses, I myself should feel bound, and I have no doubt the witness would cheerfully acquiesce in the justice of that judgment, and the country will be satisfied. But if you persist in insisting that the witness shall be subject to the absolute will, control, caprice, passion, anger, or mortified pride of this committee, you will not be justified before the country.

It is a wrong unparalleled in this country or any other. It is not only unparliamentary, but in my judgment it is an outrage upon the personal liberty of the citizen which this people cannot submit to with a just regard to their own rights and freedom. We have appealed to you in every form to give the witness an opportunity of having one, two, or three members who differ with you upon the question of impeachment to examine him and see whether he is fairly dealt with. This most just and reasonable demand you refuse.

The gentleman from Massachusetts told us as a reason why the minority should not be represented on the committee yesterday that when the Judiciary Committee were in session during the last summer on the impeachment question, its proceedings were made public. That is the pretended reason for not allowing gentlemen on this side to be on this investigating committee. As one of the members of the Judiciary Committee, I tell the gentleman that there never was a committee of this House in session as long as that was, and investigating as extensively as they did, examining the number of witnesses, and taking the amount of testimony that they did, where so little of what occurred before it was made public before they reported. The chairman of the committee himself, a Republican in politics, declared that to be the case in my own hearing.

I appeal now and here to the members of that committee on the other side if there is one of them who at any time had the remotest suspicion that one member of the minority ever disclosed a single fact during that investigation improperly. I tell you the gentlemen on this side are not only too honorable, but they know too well their duty to disclose improperly what transpires before a committee. This is a mere pretense. It is an unjust and unjustifiable imputation upon the committee. I hurl it back with scorn, indignation, and contempt. There is not a man on that committee, my colleague [Mr. MARSHALL] suggests to me—and I speak with confidence on that subject—who will say that the minority did not act honorably, fairly, and uprightly during the whole of that examination. That is no reason, however, why the committee should not be composed according to parliamentary usage and law, according to the practice of this and all other parliamentary bodies. But it is not that that the gentlemen desire. It is not that of which he is afraid. They wish to pursue this witness in secret. They seek to perpetrate upon him something which they do not want the minority of the House to understand. They have some purpose that cannot bear the light, some purpose to be accomplished in the darkness, some purpose they do not want the country to know. There is, there can be no other reason for the course pursued by this committee of impeachment managers.

Mr. BUTLER resumed the floor.

Mr. BLAINE. If the gentleman will yield to me for a moment, I wish to make a suggestion rather in the nature of a point of order or parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know from the Chair whether, heretofore, when witnesses in contempt of the House have been put in confinement, they have been placed in the custody of the Speaker? It seems to me—I will say in advance of the answer of the Chair—that whatever may have been the custom in the past, or may be the present custom, it is a duty which more properly devolves on the Sergeant-at-Arms, and I think it is somewhat infra dig. in respect to the Speaker of the House that he should be made the custodian or jailer—as the papers term it—of the witness; and I desire in some form to enter a motion that shall relieve the Speaker of that duty, and place it where, by the rules of the House and the suggestions of propriety, it seems to belong, and that is to the Sergeant-at-Arms.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will reply to the inquiry of the gentleman from Maine, that the usage has always been, when members who refuse to obey the orders of the House are put under arrest, or when witnesses who refuse to obey the orders of the House and the law of the land, which requires them to testify, are placed under arrest, they are placed under arrest by the Sergeant-at-Arms, and are not under the supervision of the Speaker. The Speaker has other duties which occupy all of his time and attention, and the Sergeant-at-Arms is the officer who has always heretofore had the responsibility. It is a delicate responsibility.

Mr. BLAINE. I desire to move that the entire charge and custody of the witness be placed in the hands of the Sergeant-at-Arms, and the Speaker entirely relieved therefrom. I hope the gentleman will accept that amendment.

Mr. MAYNARD. I desire to ask the Chair whether even an order of the House could impose upon the Speaker a duty as Speaker which did not legitimately belong to his office? For example, could the Speaker, by an order of the House, be required to come down to the Clerk's desk and read a bill or be required to perform the functions of the Doorkeeper? Would not such an order be simply nugatory?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state to the gentleman from Tennessee that the order which he suggests would be a change in the rules of the House, and therefore could not be entertained except under a suspension of the rules or by unanimous consent. But the Chair supposes that the duty can be devolved on the Speaker by the order of the House which has been devolved upon him, but he will state that he would be very much gratified if the House would allow him to perform the ordinary duties of the Chair without additional duties.

Mr. MAYNARD. The point of inquiry is whether such an order is not a complete change of the regular organization of the House, assigning duties to an officer with which, under the organization of the House, he has nothing to do?

The SPEAKER. It is a change in the usage of the House, but the Chair supposes that the House could devolve this duty upon the Chair if they saw fit.

Mr. BECK. I desire to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if it is not the fact that on Wednesday morning, when Mr. Woolley was last before the committee, that he stated to the committee, in addition to his answer which was read to the House, that if they would bring him before the bar of the House and submit the question as the sufficiency of his answer, and his right to refuse to answer further, that he would answer any questions which the House might direct him to answer? The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BINGHAM] on yesterday, when I sought to get the floor to make that statement and ask that question, said to me in substance that Woolley had so requested. I regret that he is not now in his seat.

Mr. BUTLER. Nothing but my respect for the gentleman from Kentucky prevents my calling his attention to the fact that he is asking a question wholly outside of anything before the House.

Mr. HIGBY. Allow me to ask the gentleman from Kentucky or the gentleman from Wisconsin if it is the usual way to take testimony to bring witnesses to the bar of the House and ask them questions in order to get information?

Mr. BECK. If the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] will allow me to answer the gentleman from California [Mr. HIGBY] I will do so. My understanding is that when the House appoints a committee, or a grand jury is in session, or any other body appointed to examine a witness, and the committee or the grand jury differ as to the right of the party, the proper course is to bring the witness before the House or before the court, place him under the protection and direction of the House or the court, and then he will have to do what the House or the court may order him to do.

Mr. HIGBY. Will the member from Massachusetts yield to me?

Mr. BUTLER. I cannot yield.

Mr. HIGBY. I only want a minute.

Mr. BUTLER. Very well.

Mr. NIBLACK. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. NIBLACK. My point of order is that the gentleman from California [Mr. HIGBY] is out of order in always addressing others here as "members" and not as "gentlemen."

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. By reference to the Congressional Globe it will be seen that the universal custom has been for members to refer to each other as "members" or as "gentlemen," as they may please.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to keep before the House what the question is. The sole question under consideration is whether this man Woolley—after having insulted the House by receiving an insulting telegram, (that you could not help,) then by sending it to the committee so as to make it known to them—whether he shall be allowed to receive any more? That is the question. Whether he shall answer at the bar of the House is not a question now before the House.

We are told that we are persecuting this man. Sir, he has only to tell the truth, only to answer the question what he did with this money, which four times he has given a history of, and each of the four statements untrue, and then the prosecution will stop. He does not need a lawyer to aid him to do that; he does not need the gentleman from New York [Mr. Wood] to aid him to do that; he does not need anybody to aid him to do that. He knows better than anybody else can what he did with the money.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BUTLER. I cannot yield.

Mr. WOOD. I desire to ask a question.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not yield. Now, then, to the other questions: the resolution was drawn in conformity with parliamentary precedents, I believe. It does not put this witness into the custody of the Speaker at all any more than the fact that the rooms of this Capitol are subject to the order of the Speaker. He is in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms, to whom the Speaker gives direction.

Mr. BLAINE. I beg to correct the gentleman on that point. The resolution specially made the Speaker—

Mr. HIGBY. I object to the gentleman from Maine interrupting the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts has the right to yield to the gentleman from Maine for explanation, as he does.

Mr. BLAINE. The resolution specifically made the Speaker the arbiter to decide who should see the witness, what letters shall go to him, what telegrams shall go to him, and what shall not. So that all the offensive points in the proceeding, if I may so call them, are thrown upon the Speaker. I think the Speaker should be relieved from that responsibility, for I do not think the House has any right to impose it upon the Speaker. But, having done so, the sooner we take it back the better for the dignity of the House.

Mr. BUTLER. To that I would answer that the witness was put in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms. If we had let it stand there, so that no communications, orally or in writing, could be made to him, our friends on the other side—out of doors, not in this House, because it might not be parliamentary for me to refer to those in this House—out of this House would have howled over the charge that he had been put where he could appeal to no one for any redress, and could look to no one but the Sergeant-at-Arms or his jailor for any assistance. Therefore, in kind consideration to the witness, we drew the resolution so as to provide, first, that the witness should be in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms; and then the highest officer of the House is designated to determine who shall see the witness. This was done so that there could be no reason for saying that we mean to deal unfairly with him.

I know, sir, that it is an onerous and unpleasant duty, one that nothing but the exigencies of the case would have made us think for one moment of putting upon you, sir, and we knew that you would faithfully discharge your responsibilities in the line of duty, however onerous, however arduous, however unpleasant.

Mr. NIBLACK. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BUTLER. No, sir; I will not be interrupted.

Having done that, the complaint now arises on our side that we have been too lenient, too kind to this witness, in that we have intrusted to the highest officer of the House the duty of supervising this delicate part of the witness's confinement.

Mr. BLAINE. I raised no question at all as to the treatment of the witness. My motion had reference to the Speaker, not to the witness.

Mr. BUTLER. Well, as the Speaker had not complained of the matter, I suppose he is obliged to my friend for raising the question.

Mr. BLAINE. The Speaker is voiceless on the floor.

Mr. BUTLER. Allow me now to say that I have no objection to putting this matter under the charge of the Sergeant-at-Arms. I do not care what the House may do in the matter. But I would remind gentlemen of Ben. Franklin's anecdote of the hatter's sign. A man had put on his sign these words: "John Smith makes and sells hats here." One man came along and said, "Who cares who makes the hats?" So the word "makes" was struck out. Another man said, "Who cares who sells the hats, so he gets them?" So the word "sells" was struck out. A third man suggested, "Strike out the word 'here,' of course you don't sell them anywhere else." So "here" was struck out. Another man said, "Who cares whether John Smith or John Brown sells the hats?" So "John Smith" was struck out. In this way the whole thing was struck out, and the sign had nothing on it. We have a similar trouble with any proposition introduced here. One man wants this struck out; another wants that struck out; a third wants something else struck out; and nobody apparently wants anything done unless it be done in his own way.

Mr. BLAINE. The gentleman from Massachusetts will bear in mind that, according to the statement of the Speaker, whom the gentleman will accept as abundantly competent authority on all parliamentary points, the effect of my motion would be to leave this witness in just the same position that has been occupied by all previous witnesses in contempt. What I object to is that we should now institute a proceeding in conflict with the uniform practice of the House heretofore. All I desire is that the gentleman shall accept such an amendment as will make our action in this case conform to the past practice, and relieve the Speaker from a duty which, as every one concedes, must be difficult, disagreeable, onerous, and embarrassing.

Mr. BUTLER. I have no objection to accepting the amendment if the Speaker desires it; but I wanted to show the House that the proceeding proposed by the committee in this case is not without precedent. Gentlemen will find that in the British Parliament, from which we derive the fundamental principles of our parliamentary law, all these things are done by the order of the Speaker.

Mr. BLAINE. I prefer the precedents of the House of Representatives.

Mr. MAYNARD. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Butler] allow me to correct him upon one matter?

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

Mr. MAYNARD. The gentleman speaks of these things being done by the order of the Speaker. As I understand, however, the execution of the order is devolved upon the Sergeant-at-Arms, as the executive officer of the House, and this question has arisen from the action of the Speaker himself, who has brought to the attention of the House a matter growing out of his newly-imposed duties as jailor and custodian of prisoners, that he might know how to discharge the functions of his office; whereas the Sergeant-at-Arms, familiar with his duties, would have discharged them, I presume, without any direction.

Mr. BUTLER. Let me correct the corrector. The Speaker is neither jailor nor custodian. He is simply to say who shall have access to the prisoner who is in custody; he is not the custodian of the prisoner at all. But, sir, in order that my friends shall be satisfied, and especially after the intimation given by the Speaker of his desire, I will modify my motion so as to provide that the resolutions relating to Charles W. Woolley be so modified that the Sergeant-at-Arms shall determine only what verbal and written communications shall be made to the witness, and that no communication in writing or by telegraph, except open communications, be delivered to him or from him, and that all sealed communications be delivered to him through his counsel.

Mr. WOOD. I rise to a question of order. I doubt whether this resolution will discharge the Speaker of the House from responsibility for the acts of the Sergeant-at-Arms. I find on page 173 of the Digest that the Sergeant-at-Arms must discharge his duties under the direction of the Speaker. Therefore he will still be under the direction of the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Read the paragraph on page 173 which the gentleman is now quoting.

Mr. WOOD. "It shall be the duty of the Sergeant-at-Arms to attend the House during its sittings; to aid in the enforcement of order under the direction of the Speaker."

The SPEAKER. Now read the next part of the rule.

Mr. WOOD. "To execute the commands of the House from time to time." He is entirely under the direction of the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not examined the rule. The Chair will read it, and he will see that it answers the point of order:

"It shall be the duty of the Sergeant-at-Arms to attend the House during its sittings."

That is the first part of it.

"To aid in the enforcement of order, under the direction of the Speaker."

That is the second part of it.

"To execute the commands of the House from time to time."

There is no limitation here in regard to the Speaker at all. The fourth is:

"Together with all such process, issued by authority thereof, as shall be directed to him by the Speaker."

He is to execute the commands of the House from time to time. It does not need the intervention of the Speaker. He is directly responsible to the House.

Mr. WOOD. The concluding part implies that his duties shall be under the direction of the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. That relates to what comes after the semi-colon in the last division:

"Together with all such process, issued by authority thereof, as shall be directed to him by the Speaker."

That is to say, that he cannot execute process without authority of the Speaker.

Mr. WOOD. If the Sergeant-at-Arms, during the recess of the House, applied to the Speaker for direction, would he not give it to him?

The SPEAKER. He would within the sphere of his duties, which is quite limited during the recess.

Mr. WOOD. We are willing to leave this prisoner with the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I do not say that I am willing to do that.

Mr. WOOD. I mean so long as he is a prisoner.

Mr. BUTLER. I demand the previous question.

Mr. BOYER. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. It is this: whether, if this resolution be passed, it will prevent the counsel of the prisoner from holding any communication with him unless the communication intended to be made is first stated to the Sergeant-at-Arms?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must construe the resolution for himself. The Speaker ordered, yesterday, that his counsel should have access to him, as well as his wife, child, and nurse. That order is unrevoked.

Mr. BOYER. Is it the intention to prevent his counsel communicating with him unless the communication is first stated to the Sergeant-at-Arms?

Mr. BUTLER. Neither his counsel, his wife or child, nor his physician, unless the counsel or the physician shall abuse that trust.

Mr. BURR. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts, whether, when we have got through with Mr. Woolley, he will not be, to use a military expression, "bottled up." [Laughter.]

Mr. POLAND. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to enter into any of these controversies in regard to this man, whether he has been treated fairly or not, or whether it is wise he should be held; but I desire to say a word in reference to the matter now before the House, whether it is wise and proper and expedient that we should undertake to interfere with this man's correspondence, and say whether he should receive letters from people outside, or write them to people outside. Now, I am aware ordinarily if a man is confined upon some criminal charge it is not wise to allow him to send written communications to persons outside, or to receive communications from persons outside without being subject to the examination of his keeper. Why? It is purely and solely for the reason that he shall not concert schemes with persons outside to effect his escape. It has not been suggested there was any apprehension, any danger felt that this man was likely to escape from custody. Unless, therefore, there is something to be gained in the way of obtaining what we desire from this man, by way of examination, by way of compelling him to answer the inquiries the managers put to him, I do not see any necessity or propriety, or decency even, in our undertaking to say this man shall not have communication, in the ordinary way by letter, with persons outside. It is entirely idle and futile for us to undertake to interfere.

The Speaker has already determined, very justly and wisely, as I think, that the witness is entitled to see his counsel and communicate with them in the absence of all other persons, so that no person shall know what the communication is between them. If, therefore, he desires to communicate with any person outside of his room, or to receive information, the door is entirely open both to send and receive communications. Therefore, what we are called upon now to do is entirely futile. It seems to me of no use, no service whatever. We cannot, by any possibility, advance the object or produce the result for which we have this man in custody in this way. Therefore it seems to me like a small business to undertake to interfere with his communications.

A MEMBER. Move to lay it on the table.

Mr. POLAND. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not yield for that purpose.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say, if I understand this resolution, that I understand the gentleman does not propose in any manner to interfere with free communication between Mr. Woolley and his counsel. Am I right in that?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I think the first clause of the resolution is a little too narrow in its construction, and that it will embarrass the Sergeant-at-Arms. I ask the first clause to be read.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the resolution relative to Charles W. Woolley be so modified that the Sergeant-at-Arms shall determine only what verbal and written communications shall be made to the witness, and that no communication in writing or by telegraph, except open communications, be delivered to him or from him, and that all sealed communications be delivered to him through his counsel.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I ask unanimous consent to be allowed—

Mr. BUTLER. I have the floor.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I wish to say to the gentleman that I have a note sent to me from the witness.

Mr. BUTLER. I object to any communication being made from a witness in contempt.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. It relates to what the gentleman said yesterday.

Mr. BUTLER. I cannot go into a discussion with a witness who is in contempt; therefore I decline to yield.

I have now the telegram to which the Speaker referred at the outset. It was sent to me with this communication:

As the inclosed dispatch smacks of disloyalty to the late managers, I do not under the resolution passed to-day feel that any but yourself should be its custodian.

With much respect, C. W. WOOLLEY.
Hon. B. F. BUTLER, House of Representatives.

This is the inclosed dispatch:

NEW YORK, May 29, 1868.

Received at the House of Representatives, May 29.
C. W. WOOLLEY: Citizen and sovereign in prison by order of tyrants and cowards in the Capitol of America; stand firm. Every true man in the land who has blood in his veins will stand by you. It is the last feather that breaks the camel's back.

GEORGE O. JONES.
Metropolitan Hotel.

Now, then, gentlemen of the House of Representatives, as many of you as want this sort of communication sent to the witness will vote to allow him to receive unrestricted telegrams.

Mr. WOOD. What harm do they do?

Mr. BLAINE. I ask to be allowed to explain.

Mr. BUTLER. I decline.

Mr. BLAINE. I hope the previous question will not be seconded as the matter now stands.

The question being put there were—ayes 45, noes 40; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Messrs. BUTLER and ELDRIDGE.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 52, noes 44.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

The question being put there were—ayes 30, noes 60; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Messrs. BOUTWELL and MARSHALL.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 26, noes 70.

So the House refused to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BLAINE. I rise to a question of privilege. I desire to state a point and make a privileged motion.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I will hear it without waiving the right to call the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, the gentleman from Maine will state his proposition.

Mr. BLAINE. I desire to move to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered, and if that is done I then propose to move the following substitute for the resolution:

Resolved, That the resolution relating to Charles W. Woolley, be so modified as to place the witness in the usual custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms, subject to the order of the House, and that his counsel, family, and physician have free access to the witness.

Mr. HIGBY. Does "free access" mean without any person being present in the room?

Mr. BLAINE. Yes; when his wife or his counsel shall visit him. I mean free access in its broadest sense, as it pertains to interviews with his family and the intercourse between counsel and client.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts accept the modification?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Then, if there be no objection, the resolution will be modified. The Chair hears none. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin insist on the yeas and nays on the motion to lay on the table?

Mr. ELDRIDGE. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. Then the question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. JONES. Is it in order to offer a substitute for the resolution?

The SPEAKER. Only by unanimous consent, as the previous question is operating.

Mr. HIGBY. I object.

Mr. WOOD. We do not object to the resolution.

The question was taken on the resolution; and it was agreed to.

Mr. BLAINE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MISS VINNIE REAM.

Mr. MARSHALL. I rise to present a privileged question, and preliminarily to introducing it I ask that a short preamble and resolution may be read; and then I will ask the indulgence of the House to make a very brief statement, which I think will be satisfactory to the entire House on both sides.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. MARSHALL. Probably not exceeding five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be reported, and then the Chair will ask for objections.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas room "A" in the Capitol has for a considerable time been in the possession of Miss Vinnie Ream, and occupied by her as a studio by the consent of the House, and she has for more than a year been engaged in modeling her statue of Lincoln, under an order made for that purpose by Congress; and whereas said statue is now in such condition that it cannot be removed at this time without the destruction thereof, as appears by the following copy of a letter addressed by her to the Sergeant-at-Arms—

Mr. HIGBY. I object to the resolution.

Mr. MARSHALL. I ask that it be read through.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California has a right to object.

Mr. MARSHALL. I submit that it is a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois that it certainly is not privileged. The resolution requires unanimous consent, and the gentleman from California objects.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to move to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. MARSHALL. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to make a statement not exceeding five minutes.

Mr. PILE. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. BUTLER. I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK,] who desires to give a notice to the House.

Mr. PERHAM. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. MARSHALL. I rise to a question of order. My resolution, to which the preamble is preliminary, has not yet been presented to the House. I present it as a privileged question, and I understand it to be the rule of the House that when a resolution is presented in that way it must first be read to the House before the Speaker decides whether it is privileged or not. That has been the ruling heretofore, and I ask that this preamble and resolution be read, and that then the Speaker shall rule whether it is of a privileged character or not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARSHALL]—and he will see at once the fallacy of his argument—that if he should present as a resolution of privilege a speech of one hour in length, claiming that it was a question of privilege, even though the first few sentences should show that it did not relate at all to a question of privilege, according to the argument of the gentleman the House would be compelled to listen to an hour's speech before the Chair could rule it out of order.

Mr. MARSHALL. The Speaker has not heard the resolution, and cannot know what it is until it is read to the House. I still insist, and I think I cannot be mistaken in my recollection in regard to the matter, that the Speaker has, time and time again, held that a resolution must first be read through before he could rule upon it and determine whether it was in order or not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did so rule on one occasion, when a member on the same side of the House with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARSHALL] offered a resolution as one of privilege. The opening part of the resolution seemed to indicate that it involved a question of privilege. Upon protest being made upon the left of the Chair that it should not be read in full, the Chair decided that it should be read in full, so that he could ascertain whether or not it was a question of privilege.

In reference to the resolution now presented by the gentleman from Illinois, the Chair is of opinion that it is one requiring unanimous consent for its consideration, except on Monday, when the State of Illinois is called under the call of States and Territories for resolutions.

Mr. MARSHALL. I do insist that this is a resolution of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has decided otherwise.

Mr. JONES. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] has moved that the rules be suspended and that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Indian appropriation bill. And that motion cannot be superseded by a question of privilege.

Mr. MARSHALL. I ask unanimous consent that my resolution may be printed in the Globe.

Objection was made.

The question was then taken upon the motion of Mr. BUTLER; and upon a division there were—ayes 67, noes 29.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

So the motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BLAINE in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of House bill No. 1073, making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1869.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] to add to the first section of this bill the following:

For this amount to pay the expenses of two commissioners appointed to appraise the Cherokee neutral lands under the seventeenth article of the treaty of July 19, 1866, with the Cherokees, or so much thereof as may be necessary, $4,550.

Mr. MAYNARD. I hope the attention of the Committee of the Whole will be drawn to the condition of the question. I think the first question is upon an amendment to my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment to the amendment was merely verbal, for the purpose of debate, and was withdrawn yesterday.

The question was then taken upon the amendment of Mr. MAYNARD; and it was not agreed to.

No further amendment being offered to the first section, the second section was read, as follows:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That in order to carry into effect the eleventh and twelfth articles of the treaty between the United States and the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes of Indians confirmed by the Senate on the 21st day of February, in the year 1856, and the resolution of the Senate of the United States in pursuance thereof made on the 9th day of March, in the year 1859, as finally adjusted by the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs made to the Senate on June 19, in the year 1860, and the tenth article of the treaty between the United States and the said Indians approved by the Senate of the United States on the 28th day of June, in the year of our Lord 1866, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to issue, on the credit of the United States, coupon bonds, or registered bonds, of denominations not less than fifty dollars each, payable twenty years from the date of the approval of this act, bearing interest at the rate of five per cent. lawful money, payable semi-annually, for the sum of $1,832,560 85, which bonds shall be delivered to the Choctaw Indians: Provided, That said Choctaw tribe of Indians shall receive the same in full satisfaction and discharge of all claims of the said tribe, and of the members thereof, against the United States existing prior to the 28th day of June, in the year 1866.

Mr. WINDOM. I move to strike out this entire second section; and I will state briefly my reasons for that motion. I have given this case some examination, although not a very thorough one. The circumstances upon which this claim is based extend back some thirty years. So far as I have been able to see by the limited examination I have given to the case, I believe we shall eventually have to pay this money; but there can be no harm in placing the matter in such a position that every member may have an opportunity to examine it for himself. It is a claim amounting to nearly two million dollars. It is large enough, certainly, to justify careful examination on the part of each member before he votes upon it. I am very certain that upon such discussion as we can have to-day we cannot go back through the last thirty years and look into this case fully, and see upon what the claim is based.

My object in moving to strike out this section is that I may hereafter, at the earliest possible time, move to refer this claim to the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which it properly belongs, that it may have another examination there, while members of the House can be examining it for themselves. As this claim is of such long standing, it certainly can do no harm to let it wait until our committee shall be called. I will agree, if necessary, that the Committee on Indian Affairs, when next called, shall report for or against this claim with their reasons. In the meantime, as I have already said, every member of the House can examine the matter for himself.

This is a matter strictly within the province of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and it is one of a class of cases which ought to be carefully examined. If the proposition embraced in this section were a provision of the character usually reported by the Committee on Appropriations, there might not be so much propriety in the suggestion which I make. But this is not an ordinary appropriation. It is not understood by the Committee on Appropriations to be a simple appropriation, for the note appended to the bill states:

"The total amount appropriated by this bill is $2,214,283 01."

That amount does not, of course, include this claim of $1,800,000. The committee, in their note to this bill, do not understand it to be a part of the appropriations embraced in the bill, for the reason, I suppose, that it is, properly speaking, new legislation, the committee proposing to issue bonds bearing five per cent. interest. In that view of the subject, it seems to me the matter is not properly within the province of the Committee on Appropriations. I desire that time may be allowed for the examination of this subject by another committee and by the House. This will certainly be a safe proceeding.

Mr. MILLER. I desire to inquire of the gentleman whether this claim was not before the House once before and rejected?

Mr. WINDOM. This claim was before the House at the close of the last session of the Thirty-Ninth Congress, was discussed during a part of the last evening of that session, and was voted down. A suggestion was then made, I believe, that it be examined by the Committee on Indian Affairs. But the case was never referred to that committee, by whom there has been no examination of it except a very cursory one by a minority of the committee.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to place before the committee the exact state of the facts so far as regards this section, and then the committee can do with it precisely what they may desire.

In the first place, this section was drawn in order to obviate what seemed to be a great difficulty. By a solemn treaty four times ratified $2,300,000 worth of land was sold to the United States, the price being $1 25 per acre for that which had actually been sold by the United States, and for which it had received the money, and twelve and a half cents an acre for the remainder. In 1853 the United States got the money for the land. They agreed to pay for it to the Choctaws. But before the necessary legislation got through the war broke out. The United States paid upon this claim $500,000, and let the rest lay over to await the loyalty of the Choctaw nation. In 1866 a treaty was again made and ratified, and it was agreed that this money should be paid. The Choctaws agreed to allow out of that money certain claims for damages; and it was finally agreed that they should receive $1,832,560 85 in gold.

Now, that claim came before the Thirty-Ninth Congress and failed, upon a plea precisely like that now put forward by the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM,] that time should be allowed for the examination of the claim. Since that time this matter has been pressed upon the attention of our committee by the Secretary of the Interior, who has urged the necessity of an appropriation. We have, as in duty bound, reported an appropriation for the amount.

This does not raise the question whether the Senate and the President have the right to bind this House by a treaty, because Congress has heretofore accepted the treaty, and one quarter of the money has been paid.

Mr. WINDOM. Congress has not accepted the treaty of 1866.

Mr. BUTLER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. In 1861 Congress made an appropriation of $5,000 and paid it over. Then came the treaty of 1866. The gentleman does not pretend the treaty of 1866 was for the purpose of settling how much should be allowed for claims against the Choctaw Indians.

Now, sir, without saying further, the committee would not report this until they had a full report made. You owe them this money. It has to be paid some day. It must be paid. Under the circumstances the committee thought it best to give them long bonds at five per cent. interest. Indian appropriations have been put heretofore in Arkansas and Virginia State stock, and being so put, have been lost. We propose to put them in five per cent. bonds. I ask before proceeding further that the report of the committee accompanying this section shall be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to strike out the proviso; and I do it, sir, for the purpose of saying a word, as I opposed this section in the Committee on Appropriations. I was opposed to putting it into the Indian appropriation bill for the reason that I had not sufficient knowledge on the subject to justify me in voting this vast sum of money at this time. I knew that it was an old claim of thirty or forty years' standing. It had been trundling along, acted upon in the House, and referred to in various treaties; it was so mixed up, and so many suspicious circumstances were thrown around it, that I was unwilling to commit myself to the section. From what I have heard since has only confirmed my suspicions that this money is not to go to the Indians, but to an Indian "ring" of which Perry Fuller is one of the chief managers. I am opposed to passing any bill which will give the money to a "rotten Indian ring," which I believe is in collusion with the Indian department, one of the rottenest departments of the Government.

Without having further knowledge than I have in regard to the matter, I am opposed to it—to putting out to this "ring" our obligations to the amount of $1,500,000.

Mr. BUTLER. One million eight hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I think, after the open disclosure made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] yesterday, that there is no subject more worthy of attention than an investigation by the House into all the facts of this case; and not only into this, but also in regard to the Cherokee neutral lands, as well as in regard to the Osage lands referred to yesterday by the chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands, [Mr. JULIAN.] Now, I propose, if this is struck out, when we get into the House, to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be directed to inquire into all the facts and circumstances connected with the claim of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indian tribes, arising, as it is claimed, under the eleventh and twelfth articles of the treaty of March 9, 1859, and of the treaty of June 19, 1866, and also in regard to the Osage and Cherokee neutral lands, and that they have power to send for persons and papers.

I propose to refer it to the Committee on the Judiciary, and not to the Committee on Indian Affairs, because the Committee on the Judiciary have now partial charge of the subject. I want all the facts and circumstances attending these Cherokee and Choctaw and Chickasaw claims fully investigated.

Mr. NIBLACK. I desire to make a brief statement about this section. I was on the Committee on Appropriations during the last Congress, before which this subject came, and which, I believe, reported a section similar to this one for the payment of this claim. I could not then, and do not now, understand how so large a claim could have been permitted to slumber so long. There was, to my mind, some mystery about it, and that mystery has never been cleared up from that day to this.

I also became fully impressed with the idea—I cannot now give the reasons why I became so impressed—that there was a big job in it somewhere. I was therefore compelled to oppose the appropriation in Committee of the Whole, and with such assistance as I was fortunate enough to receive it was defeated in the last Congress. I am still unprepared to vote for that claim.

Mr. MAYNARD. I raise the point of order that the gentleman is speaking on the same side as the gentleman proposing the amendment. By the rule a member is allowed five minutes to support an amendment, and then another gentleman may be heard for five minutes in opposition to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was unable to tell whether the gentleman was opposed to the amendment until he heard his argument.

Mr. NIBLACK. I rose to oppose the appropriation. I think it is all wrong. I have nothing further to say.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire now to have read the report of the Committee on Appropriations which I was unable to have read before for lack of time.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the matter of the claim of the Choctaw Indians, under the eleventh article of the treaty of June 22, 1855, as ratified by the Senate by the resolution of 9th March, 1859, and confirmed by the treaty of June 28, 1866, your committee report:

That by that treaty it was submitted to the Senate to adjudicate whether the Choctaws are entitled to the proceeds of the sale of their lands by the treaty of September 27, 1833, deducting therefrom the cost of survey and sale, and at what price per acre the lands remaining unsold shall be allowed the Choctaws in order to a final settlement with them; and, secondly, whether a gross sum shall be allowed in full satisfaction of all claims, national and individual, against the United States. Whereupon the Senate, on the 9th of March, 1859, resolved that the Choctaws be allowed the proceeds of such lands as had been sold by the United States after deducting all proper expenses and reservations, at the rate of $1 25 per acre, and that they should be allowed twelve and a half cents per acre for the residue of their lands, i. e., those remaining unsold; and that the Secretary of the Interior cause an account to be stated showing the amount due according to the principle of settlement above recited and report the same to Congress.

This account was transmitted to Congress on the 8th of May, 1860, and revised and corrected by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and a balance reported as due the Choctaws of $2,322,460 85.

By the act of March 2, 1861, Congress made an appropriation of $500,000 on account of this claim, namely, $250,000 in cash and $250,000 to be paid in bonds.

On the 5th of July, 1862, and 3d of March, 1866, Congress restricted the expenditure of this appropriation and bonds to such of the Choctaw nation as might remain loyal, and the Secretary of the Interior reports that it was expended in accordance with the directions of said acts. But by the treaty of 28th of April, 1866, all acts of hostility and disloyalty were condoned, and questions of differences settled between the Choctaw nation and the United States by the tenth article thereof, which reads as follows:

"ART. X. The United States reaffirms all obligations arising out of treaty stipulations or acts of legislation with regard to the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations, entered into prior to the late rebellion, and in force at that time, not inconsistent herewith, and further agrees to renew the payment of all annuities and other moneys accruing under such treaty stipulations and acts of legislation, from and after the close of the fiscal year ending on the 30th of June, 1869."

It will therefore be seen that that amount of $1,832,560 85 is justly due and payable to the Choctaw nation according to treaty stipulations and under the legislation heretofore had. There seems to be no good reasons why this amount should not be paid. Indeed common justice requires either that it should be paid or that some provision should be made by which the income arising therefrom should be secured to the tribe, many of whom are represented to be poor, and from their losses during the war needing this money for their support.

It seems to have been the policy of the Government for a long series of years in many treaty stipulations to guaranty an investment of five per cent. for the money due the Indians for ceded lands such as this, but heretofore the Government, after guaranteeing five per cent., have invested these moneys in State stocks, many of which are worthless. As the Government must be for many years a borrower, it is the part of prudence that such investments should be made in its own notes. It would, therefore, in view of all the circumstances of the case, seem best to issue for the payment of this sum (provided the provision will be accepted by the Choctaw nation) twenty-year bonds of the United States on five per cent. interest, lawful money, payable semi-annually, either coupon or registered, as may be desired by the recipients, of denominations of not less than fifty dollars.

Your committee, therefore, have added a section to the Indian appropriation bill to carry out the principles and objects set forth in this report.

It will there be seen that there cannot be any wrong done to the United States by this bill because the United States had the lands sold them and got the money, and by treaty agreed to pay it to the Indians. How the Indians will spend the money I do not know, but I thought, and the committee with me thought, that to pay it according to the understanding would be to put it in United States bonds at five per cent., payable to the Indians. There it would not be likely to run away as the Arkansas and Virginia bonds did, and there would be a fund for the Indians. You have got to pay it some day or other. You have agreed by treaty to pay it. You have appropriated one portion, half bonds and half money, and now it is proposed to put the remainder in bonds which shall secure the amount to be paid. If there is any wrong about it I am not aware of it. If Perry Fuller has anything to do with it I do not know it. I never heard him named in connection with it till now.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I renew it. I only desire to ask the gentleman one or two questions, so that I may understand the matter. I remember very well when this was in the House during the last night and last hours of the last session of the Thirty-Ninth Congress, the intention was to put the provision through upon a deficiency bill about four or five o'clock in the morning. At that time we had some information on the subject, which I think disclosed the fact that a great portion of the money instead of going to the Choctaw Indians was intended for a class of people who pretended to have claims against them for damages during the war. Now, what I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill is, whether or not the committee have taken into consideration these claims, or whether they have any knowledge with reference to the direction this fund will take after it shall be paid to the Indians. It may be a matter of indifference to some, but it seems to me if this is an honest claim on the part of these Indians it ought to stand upon that principle alone. If it is a mere indirect way, as the gentleman from Illinois has stated, of placing the money in the hands of a lobby ring about this Capitol, then we ought to know that fact. I think this subject should be referred to some committee, I do not care what, in order that all the facts should be investigated so that we may know whether or not this is a just and honest claim against the Government of the United States. I would ask the gentleman if he has any information on the subject?

Mr. BUTLER. No information came to the committee as to any direction of this money, except in one regard, and that was that the attorney of the Choctaw tribe, who had had the management of their business for many years, had died, and left a widow and children who are dependent upon what he had earned, and there was a very considerable amount going to him for his services. That was the only claim that came before the committee. But, sir, I ask my friend from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] if we owe money and have agreed over and over again to pay it, is it any of our business to stand upon the question of what our creditor is going to do with the money after we have paid our debt?

Mr. ALLISON. I will answer that question. If we have agreed to pay a certain sum of money we must faithfully and honestly carry out that obligation. But I do not suppose that the gentleman from Massachusetts will claim that under these treaty stipulations with the Indians it is not our duty also to see where the money goes and how it is expended. Why, it was but yesterday, I believe, that he claimed himself that this whole treaty-making power is wrong as applied to these Indians. We find that by the fifth article of the treaty made with these Indians in 1866 there was care taken that the United States Government should bind itself doubly to pay all the debts to these rebel Indians as well as those who had never been engaged in the rebellion. I do not understand why it was that a treaty of that kind should have been made. I suppose it has been ratified by the Senate, and it may be that we are under obligations to carry it out.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Let me say that this is one thing which I omitted to mention. This remarkable article of the treaty of 1866 is what I want the committee to examine into. I want to know why that treaty was made. I want to know why we were bound to pay these Choctaws, who were all rebels, this amount of money. I want to know whether that treaty is not tainted with fraud, and whether we are not absolved from its stipulations.

Mr. MAYNARD. The gentleman speaks of these Indians as being rebels or disloyal. Do Indians owe any allegiance to this Government?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I will not quarrel with my friend about that. I only know that they were all in sympathy with the rebellion, and gave it every possible aid and comfort.

Mr. ALLISON. These Indians were engaged in the rebellion; and if we are to pay these Indians who were engaged in war against the United States, I know of no reason why we should not pay the civilized white men of the United States who were engaged in this war against the Government as well as the Indians.

Mr. MAYNARD. The difference is that civilized white men owe allegiance to this Government and Indians do not.

Mr. BUTLER. I oppose the amendment; and, in the first place, I ask does the gentleman mean to say that because the majority of the Government of Great Britain sympathized with the rebellion we ought not therefore to pay Great Britain what we owe under our treaties? That is the point.

Mr. MULLINS. Why do you demand from England pay for the Alabama damages?

Mr. BUTLER. I should be very glad to answer that or any other question. I demand payment from Great Britain for the Alabama damages, and I am willing to pay England every dollar we owe under treaties.

Now, sir, I do not know whether there was fraud in this treaty or not. I was not here to make it or help to make it. The Senate of the United States made this treaty, and after taking out all the claims for damages by disloyal Indians that seemed proper to them, they then agreed to pay so much money, and we are now in this case before the civilized world; while we are demanding from the civilized world payment of what they owe us, we will not pay what we owe to hands of Indians. My friend from Iowa says that we ought to see what is done with the money. I will accept any amendment that the money shall go for the benefit of the Indians that may be introduced here, but I do not think that, when eleven years ago we sold the lands of these Indians for $1 25 an acre for which we paid them twelve and a half cents an acre, we should refuse any longer to pay interest—for that is all we are appropriating in this cause—because somebody would get that interest who ought not to get it. We cannot help that.

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. I renew the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa for the purpose of pressing the same reasons that he did. I remember very distinctly that in the expiring hours of the Thirty-Ninth Congress it required a good deal of vigilance for gentlemen upon this floor to resist the influence of the lobby or ring that was here about this very payment, and though I cannot recall all the facts that were stated to me at the time, I do remember that they were such as made me feel that in voting for that section I should be voting in favor of men as corrupt as those the gentlemen from Massachusetts associates with Charles W.

Woolley, or as Woolley himself, if he has been guilty of all he is charged with.

I cannot see that any harm will come either from striking out the proviso, or from defeating the whole section now, and giving time for ascertaining whether this money is to be paid to the Indians to whom we owe it, or whether it is to be paid to men who have cheated the Indians out of whatever claims they had, and propose to use this money against the Government and the interests of the country. I now yield to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON.]

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to ask a question of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER.] I understood him to say that the amount due to certain parties had been deducted. I have not examined this treaty particularly, but as I remember the discussion upon this subject, another stipulation of this treaty expressly provides that a portion of this fund shall go to certain individuals as compensation for claims against these Indians. Therefore, in appropriating this money to the Choctaws, under this provision of the treaty, it is required by another provision of the same treaty to be paid directly over to certain claimants against these Indians.

Mr. MAYNARD. I rise to oppose this amendment. In doing so, I premise by saying that if the Constitution of the United States authorizes anything to be done by the President, it authorizes him, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, which, when made, shall be the supreme law of the land.

We have again and again made treaties with the Chickasaw and Choctaw tribes of Indians. We have ratified those treaties, and accepted the benefit and advantage of them. And it is now too late to call in question the obligations thus imposed upon the Government. If there can, by any possibility, be any obligation fastened upon the Government, it is the obligation to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians.

It will be recollected that those Indians occupied lands east of the Mississippi; that by treaty stipulations they were induced to cede those lands to us, and to retire west of the Mississippi to lands which we supposed at the time would not be required for settlement for generations to come. We took the lands they ceded, sold them, as has been stated, and agreed to pay the Indians for them.

But they have been met constantly with such objections as are made here to-day. Finally a treaty was made providing that the amount due to them should be adjusted by the Senate, sitting as a court of arbitration. The Senate did so decide the amount due to these tribes, under and by virtue of these treaties.

They were here, before the war, and heard through the same gentleman who now represents them, Colonel Pitchlyn, seeking to get the amount due to them. A small amount was paid at that time, and the rest suffered to go over.

Then came on the war. I will not stop here to show that, so far as the Government of the United States was concerned, the Indians were forced into the struggle. They were misled by the very agents that we sent there to represent us. It is our own agents who are guilty, certainly of the moral responsibility, of the Indians taking part against us in the late struggle.

After the war was over we sent out our Commissioner of Indian Affairs. He went out there and negotiated another treaty with them, by which this sum was agreed to be paid.

If there is any possibility of incurring an obligation on the part of this Government, it is that this money shall be paid to these tribes of Indians. I am perfectly willing that all precautions on behalf of these people, who I know need protection against sharpers and swindlers ever hovering about them, shall be provided by any amendment which can give it.

I have been here long enough to know that whenever a person comes here with a claim against this Government, he is met by the Perry Fullers—if I may use that expression without any personal imputation upon a gentleman I never saw—a class of men who are known as lobbyists, who besiege the claimant, and endeavor to get him to employ them, if they can. If that is not done, then they block up the way of his claim, levy black mail upon him, blasting its merits by whispering unfavorable suggestions in the ears of members who have not time to investigate the matter for themselves. It has been so ever since I have been connected with this body, and I suppose it will ever be so.

This claim, if any claim can be, is a valid, legal, subsisting claim. Gentlemen talk about further investigation. Sir, it has been investigated by the Committee on Appropriations of the last Congress, and they recommended its payment. It has been investigated by the Committee on Appropriations of this Congress, and they recommend its passage. If any claim has been thoroughly investigated, this certainly has been. Any man who will take up the treaties of the United States, the acts of Congress, the reports of the Senate, and of the House, will not hesitate for a moment to say that this is a valid, legal, and subsisting claim, and one that should be paid. And any private individual who would refuse to pay such a claim against himself would be scouted out of society as a dishonest man.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CLARKE, of Ohio. I move to amend by adding at the end of the section the following:

Provided further, That no part of said sum, principal or interest, shall be paid to any person or persons claiming the same as assignee or assignees of said Indians, nor shall the same be at any time paid with the intent or purpose of placing it in the hands of those claiming the same by purchase or otherwise from said Indians.

Mr. Chairman, this claim comes in the same form in which all claims by which the Treasury has heretofore been depleted have arisen. Now, if I understand anything of the merits of this case, the facts are about these: a claim originally, perhaps, fair and honest, but delayed and embarrassed in its collection, passed for a trifling consideration into the hands of assignees, who secured an additional treaty, by virtue of which we are now asked to pay out this $1,800,000. If this vast sum of money be paid, I venture to say not $100,000 will go into the hands of the Indians. It is not for their benefit we are legislating. The effect of this legislation, I apprehend, will be, not to reimburse them for lands we have taken from them, but it will be to place this enormous sum in the hands of those who have been speculating upon the rights of the Indians. If you examine the history of frauds upon the Treasury it will be found that most of them have come before Congress in this shape.

Now, if this money is to be paid, if these bonds are to be issued, let the provision be so guarded that when the money is paid we can trace it into the hands of the Indians. If they choose afterward to give it over into the hands of these sharpers, we shall not be responsible for it. It is our duty, so far as we are able, to prevent these men from being speculated upon by sharpers and plunderers. In this case we have the power to do so, and it would be a shameful omission on our part if we did not exercise this power. I know very well that frequently frauds of this character can be so covered up that it is impossible to penetrate them. I venture the assertion that there are men now within the sound of my voice waiting with anxious expectation for the result of our action on this section, knowing that the very moment we are seduced into the trap they have set for us they become millionaires.

Mr. ORTH. I desire to suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that he add to his amendment the following:

Which bonds when so issued shall be held by the Treasurer of the United States in trust for said Indians.

Mr. CLARKE, of Ohio. I accept that as a modification of my amendment.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. If, as is claimed, this matter is governed by a treaty, we cannot change that treaty by a law.

Mr. ORTH. As I understand, we are simply providing for the adjustment of the debt.

Mr. CLARKE, of Ohio. I do not propose to change the treaty.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I am opposed to the whole measure.

Mr. HOOVER, of Massachusetts. I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio whether his object will not be accomplished by withdrawing his amendment and accepting one which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out after the words "the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to issue on the credit of the United States," the words "coupon bonds, or registered bonds, of denominations not less than fifty dollars each, payable twenty years from the date of the approval of this act, bearing interest at the rate of five per cent. lawful money, payable semi-annually, for the sum of $1,832,560 85, which bonds shall be delivered to the Choctaw Indians: Provided, That said Choctaw tribe of Indians shall receive the same in full satisfaction and discharge of all claims of the said tribe, and of the members thereof, against the United States existing prior to the 28th day of June, in the year 1866," and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Registered bonds bearing interest at the rate of five per cent., payable semi-annually, in lawful money, for the sum of $1,832,560 85, which bonds shall be held in trust by the Secretary of the Treasury for the benefit of the Choctaw Indians, and the interest paid to them as it accrues.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio accept this in lieu of his amendment?

Mr. CLARKE, of Ohio. No, sir; I cannot accept it.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I desire to suggest that five per cent. bonds of the United States are now considerably above par; so that the proposition is, not only to pay these Indians or speculators all that is claimed to be due them, but a bonus of two or three per cent. besides.

Mr. MAYNARD. It says in lawful money.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I am not speaking of selling bonds. I am speaking of this kind of bonds.

Mr. CLARKE, of Ohio. It is said that there is no appropriation which can be made for the benefit of the Indians which will be paid to the Indians. Now, sir, I believe we have virtue enough left in our Government, when we appropriate money for the benefit of the Indians so to manage it that it shall go into their hands. We can do that with this fund as well as with all other funds. It is our duty to do it. I say nothing about the original obligations. I say that when we appropriate money we should look to it that it goes into the hands of the Indians. If men come in then and rob them we cannot help it.

Mr. VAN HORN, of Missouri. I do not propose to discuss this question, but I have here a statement from the Cherokee delegation in this city in relation to the discussion yesterday, addressed to the Speaker of this House, which I ask may be printed in the Globe.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. What is it?

Mr. WELKER. I insist that it should be read before it is published.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not now in order. Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. You can present it in the House.

Mr. HOOVER, of Massachusetts. Instead of making any remarks I will move the following amendment:

Strike out all after the words "directed to," down to the proviso in the twenty-fourth line, and insert:

Registered bonds bearing interest at the rate of five per cent., payable semi-annually in lawful money, for the sum of $1,832,560 85, which bonds shall be held in trust by the Secretary of the Treasury for the benefit of the Choctaw Indians, and the interest paid to them as it accrues; and no part of said sum, principal or interest, shall be paid to any person or persons claiming the same as assignee or assignees of said Indians, nor shall the same be at any time paid with the intent or purpose of placing it in the hands of those claiming the same by purchase or otherwise from said Indians.

Mr. CLARKE, of Ohio. I accept that in lieu of my own.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I do not object to these amendments, but they do not render this section any more palatable to me if they are adopted. For, sir, I can tell my friend from Ohio and my friend from Massachusetts that human ingenuity can devise no means which will keep this money from the hands of speculators. I have not information enough to justify me in voting for this section as it is proposed to be amended. I suggest that we let it lie over for investigation.

Let us see, sir, the effect of voting this number of bonds. Here are $1,800,000 in bonds to be issued. Then in the river and harbor appropriation bill, which has been reported, and is now in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, provision is made for $615,000 of bonds for the purpose of purchasing and reopening the Louisville canal. If we go on and issue bonds for $1,800,000 in one place and $600,000 in another place, I should like to know where our national debt will be when we get through. Let us stop and let us know all about these things. Let this section be struck out. Let the Committee on the Judiciary, of which my friend from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] is an efficient member, examine the question. Let them call before them persons and papers, and report to us fully on the subject at the next session of Congress.

Mr. MAYNARD. Let me ask the gentleman whether he supposes there ever could be raised a committee more competent to investigate this question than the one of which he is the virtual chairman?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I will say frankly that I have had no time, as a member of that committee, to give this subject the examination I desired.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to give an additional reason why the amendment should not be adopted.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. There is a treaty which our laws cannot repeal.

Mr. ALLISON. If the treaty is binding in part it is binding in the whole, and whatever is required to be paid to individual Indians under the treaty will have to be paid, and these bonds will not remain in the Treasury. Therefore I say the only way is to refer the whole subject, including our obligations under the treaty, to a committee who will make a thorough investigation of it.

Mr. BUTLER. I propose now, unless this debate can cease at this moment, by unanimous consent, to move that the committee rise.

Several MEMBERS. Agreed.

Mr. WINDOM. I want to make one remark.

Mr. HOOPEE, of Massachusetts. I wish to state that I am opposed to the section if that amendment is adopted, but if the section is to be passed I think it should pass with the amendment.

Mr. WINDOM. I desire to make a statement in reference to some matters called out by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON.]

Mr. BUTLER. How much time?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Let the debate be closed in five minutes by unanimous consent.

Mr. BUTLER. Very well.

Mr. WINDOM. I think there will be a difficulty as it now stands, even if the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts should be adopted, and I prefer that some such a one should be adopted if it should go through now. But there will be a serious difficulty growing out of it. This amount is claimed under the tenth article of the treaty of 1866. The forty-ninth article of the same treaty provides as follows:

"And be it further agreed, That a commission, to consist of a person or persons to be appointed by the President of the United States, shall be appointed immediately on the ratification of this treaty, and shall take into consideration and determine the claim of such Choctaws and Chickasaws as allege they have been driven during the late rebellion from their homes in the Choctaw nations on account of their adhesion to the United States, for damages, with power to make such award as may be consistent with equity and good conscience, taking into view all circumstances, whose report, when ratified by the Secretary of the Interior, shall be final and authorize the payment of the amount from any moneys of said nations in the hands of the United States as the said commission may award."

Now, by this same treaty there is a provision for the payment of damages which these Indians have done during the war. It seems therefore to me we should not settle one part of the controversy without settling the whole, and it is for that reason I want either the suggestion I made myself or that made by the gentleman from Illinois should be adopted by the House. I do not care whether it goes to the Committee on the Judiciary or on Indian Affairs. I would quite as lief be free from undertaking to make this examination; I believe, however, it properly belongs to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I am ready to undertake it if such is the wish of the House.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The reason why I wished to have this referred to the Committee on the Judiciary was that they already have had the subject before them partially by a resolution of the House, and, as I understand, have entered on the investigation. The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. CLARKE, of Ohio, it was agreed to.

The question then recurred on striking out the section, as amended, and it was agreed to.

Mr. PILE. I move to amend, by adding the following as additional sections:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That no money shall be paid out of the Treasury in pursuance of the appropriations made in this act, except on the following conditions, namely: that from and after the 1st day of August, 1868, the Secretary of War shall exercise the supervisory and appellate powers and possess the jurisdiction now exercised and possessed by the Secretary of the Interior in relation to all the acts of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and shall sign all requisitions for the advance or payment of money out of the Treasury on estimates or accounts, subject to the same adjustment or control now exercised on similar estimates or accounts by the Auditors and Comptrollers of the Treasury, or either of them.

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War shall be authorized, whenever in his opinion it shall promote the economy and efficiency of the Indian service, to establish convenient departments and districts for the proper administration of the duties now imposed by law on the superintendents of Indian affairs, and upon agents and sub-agents, and to substitute for such superintendents and agents officers of the Army of the United States, who shall be designated for that purpose, and who shall then become charged with all the duties now imposed by law upon the superintendents and agents thus superseded, and without additional compensation therefor. The Secretary of War shall also detail an officer, not below the rank of brigadier general, to fill the office and discharge the duties of Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Officers of the Army designated to perform the duties of commissioner, superintendent, agent, or sub-agent, shall not be required to give the bonds now required of civil appointees, but shall be responsible for any neglect or maladministration, according to the Rules and Articles of War.

Mr. WOOD. I raise the point of order that that amendment is new legislation; it proposes to make an entire change in the department.

The CHAIRMAN. The first part proposing merely to limit an express condition upon which the money is to be expended would be in order. The remainder, instituting new legislation for the government of the Indian department, is out of order.

Mr. PILE. How much does the Chairman rule to be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman offers one amendment. If any part of it is out of order the whole of it is. That which merely proposes conditions to the appropriation would be in order.

Mr. TAFTE. I offer the following amendment as a proviso to section one:

Provided, That none of the payments herein provided for shall be made, unless the Secretary of the Interior shall be satisfied that the tribes, bands, or individuals named have observed the treaty stipulations under which such payments have become due, and also the provisions of any other treaty with the Government to which they may be parties, or in case portions of said tribes or bands have observed all of said obligations, payment shall be made to them pro rata.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PILE. I offer the following amendment:

Add to the bill the following new section:

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That no money shall be paid out of the Treasury, in pursuance of the appropriations made in this act, except on the following conditions, namely: that from and after the 1st day of August, 1868, the Secretary of War shall exercise the supervisory and appellate powers, and possess the jurisdiction now exercised and possessed by the Secretary of the Interior in relation to all the acts of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and shall sign all requisitions for the advance or payment of money out of the Treasury on estimates or accounts, subject to the same adjustment or control now exercised on similar estimates or accounts by the Auditors and Comptrollers of the Treasury, or either of them.

Mr. WOOD. I make the same point of order. That is clearly new legislation. It is a proposition to incorporate in this bill an entirely new principle, to transfer virtually the whole Indian Bureau to the War Department. It cannot come in in this way. It may be right in itself, but it should be the subject of a distinct bill.

Mr. ROSS. It devolves upon the War Department the duties of the Indian department, and changes the existing law on that subject.

Mr. JOHNSON. We shall soon have all the Departments of the Government in the hands of the military.

Mr. ROSS. They have enough now.

Mr. PILE. The amendment simply proposes a condition on the appropriations made in the bill, and I believe that has been uniformly ruled to be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will rule the amendment not in order. It is in order to limit a specific appropriation, the limitation running with the year for which the appropriation is intended. But the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri contemplates a permanent transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department as a condition on a single annual appropriation. The Chair decides that such legislation is not in order.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, in the remarks I submitted to the committee yesterday, on the bill now under consideration, I was unable in the brief space of time allotted to me say all I desired, and especially in reference to the sale of the Cherokee neutral lands.

I wish now to say that my object was to prove that the treaty-making power could not constitutionally dispose of the public lands, and that the treaties made for that purpose were unwise, inexpedient, and subversive of the whole land policy of the Government.

The evil I aimed at was the exercise of an unauthorized power. I wish now to say that I never doubted the honesty, the purity of purpose, or the fidelity of Mr. HARLAN, formerly Secretary of the Interior. I know him well. He is a peer among the ablest of the able men of this nation. In selling the Cherokee neutral lands he only performed, in pursuance of a treaty, a duty which he could not avoid, and he performed it honestly, faithfully, and as wisely and as well as it was possible to perform it by virtue of the authority under which he acted. He is above reproach and beyond suspicion. He could not refuse to perform the service which he did, for the treaty left him no discretion, and he exercised his discretion to the best possible advantage. I do not complain of him, but I do object to the treaty under which he acted. No just man can doubt his fidelity or complain of his official conduct. That all he has done is sufficiently shown by Executive Document No. 85, second session Fortieth Congress, which relates to this subject, and by other facts well known to all of us. I do not doubt either that it is the duty of the Government to dispose of these lands for the benefit of the Cherokee Indians. Their title is perhaps recognized by the effect of the appropriation act of Congress of July 2, 1836.

I now move to amend the bill by adding the following as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the Cherokee neutral lands shall not be sold or conveyed until provision is made by act of Congress securing to the Cherokee Indians $600,000, payable in installments within nine years, with interest, to be paid by the Government of the United States, and securing to persons now in the occupancy of any of said lands the title thereto in accordance with existing treaty stipulations, and providing for the sale or homestead entry of the residue of said lands. And no patent shall issue for any lands which have been sold under the provisions of any treaty, and no sale shall hereafter be made by virtue of the provisions of any treaty.

Mr. VAN HORN, of Missouri. I make the point of order that that is new legislation, and that it changes an existing treaty.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. There are laws in force now regulating the sale of these lands. It is not competent to change these laws by an amendment to an appropriation bill.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I then offer the following amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the money herein appropriated shall only be paid out on condition that the Cherokee neutral lands shall not be sold or conveyed until provision is made by act of Congress securing to the Cherokee Indians $800,000, payable in installments within nine years, with interest, to be paid by the Government of the United States, and securing to persons now in the occupancy of any of said lands the title thereto, in accordance with existing treaty stipulations, and providing for the sale or homestead entry of the residue of said lands. And no patent shall issue for any lands which have been sold under the provisions of any treaty, and no sale shall hereafter be made by virtue of the provisions of any treaty.

Mr. VAN HORN, of Missouri. I raise the same point of order against this amendment that was raised against the other. The words placed before the other amendments do not change its character at all; it is still new legislation, and out of order on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Indian appropriation bill is meant to carry out certain stipulations of treaties. The gentleman from Ohio moves to add a section which defeats the purpose of complying with treaty stipulations; and that the House is not competent to do. The Chair rules the amendment not in order.

Mr. BUTLER. I move—not by instruction of the Committee on Appropriations—to amend this bill, by adding to it the following section:

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That all goods and merchandise, furnished any tribe or band of Indians under the provisions of this act, shall be turned over by the agent or superintendent of each tribe or band to the chiefs of the tribe or band in bulk, and in the original package, to be distributed to the tribe or band by the chiefs in such manner as the chiefs may deem best.

I trust there will be no objection to this additional section, for the reason that it will prevent the danger of these goods being cut up and divided.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remind the gentleman from Massachusetts that it was upon his request that debate was closed by unanimous consent.

Mr. BUTLER. Very well; let the question be taken.

Mr. KERR. I wish to make an inquiry of the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. That will require unanimous consent.

Mr. BUTLER. I have no objection. No objection was made.

Mr. KERR. Does not this amendment in its terms conflict with the terms of some of the treaties to carry out which these appropriations are made?

Mr. BUTLER. I will answer the gentleman. This amendment does not conflict with any treaty. The treaties require these goods to be furnished to the Indians, but they do not provide how they shall be furnished.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. It is all right.

Mr. WINDOM. I do not know that I have any objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PILE. I desire to offer an amendment, and I ask that any point of order which may be made upon it on the ground that it is new legislation, may be reserved until I can make a brief statement in regard to it.

Mr. ROSS. I must object.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read, and then the chair will rule upon it if any point of order is made upon it by any gentleman.

The amendment was read as follows:

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Interior shall make requisition on the Department of War for the provisions and subsistence stores to be furnished the various Indian tribes and for the transportation of all the goods, supplies, and agricultural implements provided for in this act; and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to furnish from the subsistence department of the Army, on the requisition of the Secretary of the Interior, the subsistence stores required and the transportation necessary to deliver all the Indian supplies provided for in this act; and, at the close of each month, he shall make a draft on the Department of the Interior for the cost of the stores and transportation furnished during the current month, which drafts shall be paid out of the moneys appropriated in this act for these purposes.

Mr. ROSS. I make the point of order that this is new legislation.

Mr. PILE. I think if the gentleman will hear a brief explanation of it, he will see that it is not out of order; that it is only an additional limitation upon the appropriation.

Mr. ROSS. I object to debate.

Mr. WOOD. This amendment is in conflict with existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PILE] will observe that whereas this amendment might put the whole Indian machinery of the Government under the control of the Indian department, it would still leave in full operation the Indian Bureau in the Department of the Interior.

Mr. PILE. I beg pardon—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and rules that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. PILE. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The question was, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee? The decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the committee rise and report this bill, with the amendments, to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLAINE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being House bill No. 1073, making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending 30th June, 1869, and had made sundry amendments thereto, in which he had been directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

The question was upon concurring in the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BUTLER. I call the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. VAN HORN, of Missouri. I now ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Daily Globe the communication to which I referred while in Committee of the Whole from the delegates of the Cherokee nation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the communication was addressed to the Speaker, but he has had no opportunity of laying it before the House. If no objection is made it will be printed in the Daily Globe.

No objection was made.

The communication is as follows:

WASHINGTON, May 30, 1868.

SIR: The undersigned delegates, representing the Cherokee nation, have noticed the following in the report of congressional proceedings of yesterday, published in the National Intelligencer of this date:

"The House then, at four o'clock, went into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. (Mr. BLAINE, in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the appropriation bill.

"Considerable discussion took place in reference to the treaty now pending in the Senate for the sale of eight hundred thousand acres of the Cherokee lands in Kansas at one dollar an acre. Messrs. BUTLER, LAWRENCE, of Ohio, and others, denouncing it as a swindle and fraud on the Government, and Mr. BUTLER stating that an offer had been made to pay four millions of dollars for the property in ninety days.

"Without disposing of the bill the committee rose, and the House, after resisting another effort (by Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas) to have an adjournment to tomorrow, and an effort by Mr. SCHENCK to have an evening session, adjourned at half past five."

We infer from the discussion said to have taken place that the true status of the "Cherokee neutral lands" in the State of Kansas, and our connection therewith, are not correctly understood, and we therefore respectfully ask to submit the following statement:

In the year 1835 a treaty was made between the Government of the United States and the Cherokee nation, under the second article of which the Cherokees gave the United States $500,000 in cash for these lands, estimated at sixty-two and a half cents per acre; and the United States covenanted to issue to the Cherokees a patent for the same in fee-simple which patent was issued during the administration of President Van Buren, and is now a matter of record in the General Land Office. (Cherokee Treaty of 1835, United States Statutes-at-Large.)

Almost ever since the Cherokees purchased those lands they have been occupied by citizens of the United States, who have squatted upon them in violation of the treaty stipulations between the Government and the Cherokee nation. When Kansas was organized into a State, her organic act included these lands within her limits, contrary to the remonstrances of the Cherokees and in palpable violation of express treaty provisions between the United States and the Cherokee nation. The Government has had for thirty-three years the use of the $500,000 given by the Cherokees for these lands, while the lands have been of no benefit to the Cherokees, having been occupied by citizens of the United States and finally taken from the Cherokees by force. Without any disposition upon our part to enter upon the merits of the duty which the Government owed the Cherokees, it would seem that fair dealing between the contracting parties would bind the Government, under the circumstances, to pay the Cherokees the original purchase money, with interest from its receipt. But circumstances over which the Cherokees had no control, in 1866, consummated the treaty of that date, under the seventeenth article of which, and the amendment thereto, these lands were ceded to the United States in trust, to be disposed of by the Secretary of the Interior for the benefit of the Cherokee nation. Accordingly the Secretaries of the Interior, Hons. JAMES HARLAN and O. P. BROWNING, each actuated, no doubt, by what he thought a strict compliance with said treaty of 1866, disposed of these lands—the first, to the "American Emigrant Company" of Connecticut, the latter, to Mr. James F. Joy, of Detroit, Michigan. In September, 1866, the Attorney General in an opinion declared the sale of these lands to the "American Emigrant Company," not in conformity with the provisions of the Cherokee treaty of 1866, already referred to; but this decision not having been indorsed by any judicial tribunal the "American Emigrant Company" still claimed the lands by virtue of its contract, while, at the same time, James F. Joy claimed them under his purchase. The Cherokees in the meantime were being kept out of the proceeds of the sale to either party, while the Government as the trustee and protector of the Cherokees was interested and legally bound to see that they suffered no wrong in the premises.

To extricate all parties interested from this embarrassed state of affairs, and to avoid a protracted lawsuit between the contending purchasers, a compromise was agreed upon between the parties interested, the terms of which substantially embody the provisions of the contract with the "American Emigrant Company," and were embraced in an article supplemental to the treaty of 1866. This supplemental article was signed on the 28th ultimo by the undersigned, as commissioners on the part of the Cherokee nation, and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and the assent of the parties in interest. Justice requires us to say that while this disposition of the "neutral lands" is the result of hard necessity, occasioned by acts of the Government, and not of the Cherokees, it is the only arrangement we can make at present to realize ready money to support our nation, and to enlarge and extend our school and orphan systems for the enlightenment of our people. Although, as we stated in our humble opinion, justice binds the Government to refund the original $500,000 paid for these lands with interest, this supplemental article for the sale of these lands is, as we conceive, a subject for discussion before the Senate, where we are informed it is now pending, but as its merits, in some degree, have incidentally, and no doubt, through good motives, been referred to in your Committee of the Whole, in connection with the Indian appropriation bill, we take this occasion to say that it makes ample provisions for the protection of the rights of "actual settlers," as provided for in the treaty of 1866, and that the proceeds of the sale of such lands to actual settlers inure to the Cherokee nation. A careful examination of the treaty will, it appears to us, satisfy any doubtful mind upon this subject.

In conclusion we would state that the treaty of 1866, under which the contracts for the sale, survey, and appraisal of the "neutral lands" were made, was concluded with the Government by our predecessors, and that the only connection which the present Cherokee delegation has had with the matter was to consent that the compromise made between the American Emigrant Company and James F. Joy should be carried out, and thus enable the Secretary of the Interior to collect the money due on account of the sale of said lands.

We came to Washington on a mission from our nation to attend to all its interests, and not, as was insinuated yesterday in the debate that took place in Committee of the Whole, to aid or in any way minister to Mr. Joy's interests, except in so far as they happen to coincide with the interests of our people.

We respectfully request that this communication may be received and disposed of in such manner as may seem proper to the body over which you preside.

By doing so you will greatly oblige your obedient servants,

LEWIS DAURING,
Principal Chief.
H. D. REESE,
Chairman.
W. P. ADAIR,
SAMUEL SMITH,
ARCHY SCRAPER,
J. PONUN DAVIS,
E. C. BOUDINOT,
J. A. SCALES,
Cherokee Delegates.

Hon. SCHUYLER COLFAX,
Speaker of the House of Representatives:

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MAYNARD. I ask for a separate vote on the amendments to the second section.

Mr. BUTLER. As at this late hour there is hardly a quorum present, I desire that further action on this bill and the amendments be postponed until Thursday next. I do not think we can get through with it to-day.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, yes, we can.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. If it should appear that we have not a quorum it will be time enough then to postpone the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to postpone it in order to let in the tax bill on Monday; and there are one or two gentlemen who desire to make speeches this afternoon. If the House should agree to postpone the bill, I shall move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for general debate, with the understanding that no further business shall be done this afternoon.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I do not understand that there is any particular controversy about any of the amendments. So far as I know, a separate vote is desired on only one amendment, that on which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] has asked it. The amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. HIGBY] will probably be agreed to without controversy. I think we can dispose of this matter now in five minutes, and thus get it out of the way.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is doubtful whether a quorum is present, as there was barely a quorum before the House went into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. When the absence of a quorum shall be shown it will be time enough to postpone action.

The SPEAKER. The absence of a quorum would arrest business. The Chair will suggest that if this bill be postponed till Monday after the morning hour, it will occupy very little time to take the vote on the one or two contested amendments.

Mr. BUTLER. The reason I desire to have this bill postponed is, that I believe no quorum is now present, and on Monday after the morning hour my friend from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] desires, for reasons which are conclusive upon me, to go on with the tax bill.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. What is the objection to finishing this bill now?

The SPEAKER. The possible lack of a quorum, which would arrest all business.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I think a quorum is present; and as I shall be obliged to be absent next week, I desire an opportunity to vote now on some of these amendments.

The SPEAKER. The previous question having been seconded and the main question ordered, the question must now be put, unless by unanimous consent it be postponed, or unless the vote ordering the main question be reconsidered. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] has asked for a separate vote on one of the amendments. If no other separate vote be asked the remaining amendments will be regarded as concurred in.

Mr. KERR. I ask a separate vote on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] adding a new section.

Mr. BUTLER. It was expressly agreed between the gentleman from California [Mr. HIGBY] and myself that a vote should be taken in the House upon the amendment increasing the appropriation for Indians in California from $30,000 to $40,000.

Mr. JOHNSON. That amendment will stand concurred in, unless the gentleman asks a separate vote upon it. We do not ask a separate vote.

Mr. BUTLER. It was the understanding that a vote should be taken in the House on that proposition.

Mr. JOHNSON. The appropriation will read $40,000, unless the gentlemen asks a separate vote.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not mean that it shall read $40,000.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then let the gentleman ask for a separate vote.

Mr. BUTLER. I demand a separate vote on the question whether it shall be $30,000 or $40,000.

The amendment of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was to strike out "$30,000" and in lieu thereof to insert "$40,000;" so the paragraph would read:

California:
For the purchase of cattle for beef and milk, together with clothing and food, teams, and farming tools for Indians in California, $40,000.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to say that we have already appropriated a large amount for California.

Mr. HIGBY. Is discussion in order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has an hour in which to close the debate.

Mr. BUTLER. It was the unanimous judgment of the committee that this is enough for this purpose.

The amendment was non-concurred in, thirty-one only voting in the affirmative.

The next amendment of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on which a separate vote was asked was the following:

Strike out the following section:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That in order to carry into effect the eleventh and twelfth articles of the treaty between the United States and the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes of Indians confirmed by the Senate on the 21st day of February, in the year 1856, and the resolution of the Senate of the United States in pursuance thereof made on the 9th day of March, in the year 1859, as finally adjusted by the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs made to the Senate on June 19, in the year 1860, and the tenth article of the treaty between the United States and the said Indians approved by the Senate of the United States on the 28th day of June, in the year of our Lord 1866, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to issue on the credit of the United States, coupon bonds, or registered bonds, of denominations not less than fifty dollars each, payable twenty years from the date of the approval of this act, bearing interest at the rate of five per cent. lawful money, payable semi-annually, for the sum of $1,832,560 85, which bonds shall be delivered to the Choctaw Indians; Provided, That said Choctaw tribe of Indians shall receive the same in full satisfaction and discharge of all claims of the said tribe, and of the members thereof, against the United States existing prior to the 28th day of June, in the year 1866.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment on which a separate vote was asked was the following:

Add the following new section:

And be it further enacted, That all goods, wares, and merchandise furnished any tribe or band of Indians under the provisions of this act shall be turned over by the agent or superintendent of each tribe or band to the chiefs of the tribe or bands in bulk, and in the original package, to be distributed to the tribe or band by the chiefs in such manner as the chiefs may deem best.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BUTLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TAX BILL.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say to the House, the Indian bill being out of the way, that I shall on Monday next, after the morning hour, move that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the tax bill. I will occupy an hour, with the possibility of my having to ask for something more, in explanation in a plain conversational way of the peculiar features of the bill, and the views of the committee in regard to the action of the House they desire on it.

PORTS OF DELIVERY.

On motion of Mr. PIKE, by unanimous consent, the House took from the Speaker's table the amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 286, declaring St. George and Boothbay, in the State of Maine, and San Antonio, Texas, ports of delivery, and authorizing the establishment of bonded warehouses at Bucksport and Vinalhaven, in the State of Maine.

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in, as follows:

Insert after the word "Saluria," in line six, the words "and Bucksport and Vinalhaven and North Haven, in the State of Maine, in the district of Castine and Belfast, respectively."

Strike out the following clause, from line nine to line eighteen:

And that the privileges and provisions of the act entitled "An act to extend the warehousing system by establishing private bonded warehouses, and for other purposes," approved March 28, 1854, be, and the same are hereby, extended to the said ports, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury; and that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish private bonded warehouses at Bucksport and Vinalhaven, in the State of Maine.

The bill, as amended, reads as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That St. George and Boothbay, in the State of Maine, in the collection districts of Waldoboro and Wiscasset, respectively, and San Antonio, Texas, in the collection district of Saluria, and Bucksport and Vinalhaven and North Haven, in the State of Maine, in the district of Castine and Belfast, respectively, be, and the same are hereby, declared ports of delivery: Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall occasion additional expense to the Government of the United States.

INTERNAL TAX BILL.

Mr. WOOD. I desire to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] as to the intention of the committee with reference to the internal revenue bill. Is it the purpose to proceed continuously until the bill is disposed of after the chairman of the committee has concluded his speech?

Mr. SCHENCK. I will repeat what I have said before, that as there are some four or five gentlemen who wish to speak more at length than they would be able to do in the progress of the business in the debate on amendments, I have proposed, under instructions of the committee, to allow a day or so for general debate, and then go on immediately with the debate on amendments.

Mr. BLAINE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] be allowed to proceed on Monday without the limitation of the hour rule.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ROSS. I object until I hear what he says in the hour.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President in writing was communicated to the House by Mr. MOORE, his Private Secretary.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. HAMLIN, one of its clerks, announced that that body had passed a joint resolution (S. No. 137) to extend the time for the completion of the Northern Pacific railroad, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

JAIL IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. COVODE. I ask unanimous consent to take up from the Speaker's table House bill No. 784, to amend the act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a jail in and for the District of Columbia," approved March 25, 1866, which has been returned from the Senate with amendments, for the purpose of having the same referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The bill, by unanimous consent, was accordingly taken up from the Speaker's table, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

NAVAL AFFAIRS AT HAYTI.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a letter from the Secretary of the Navy in reply to the resolution of the House of Representatives adopted on the 26th instant, making inquiry relative to naval affairs at Hayti.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 29, 1868.

The communication was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. SCHENCK. I now move that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and resume the consideration of the President's annual message, with the understanding that no business is to be transacted to-day.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. MAYNARD in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of the President's annual message.

AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, it is now ten years since I became a member of this House. During that time I have submitted more than once propositions looking to an amendment of the national Constitution, substantially such as I now ask leave to present. Heretofore, when introducing these propositions, I have done so without argument, and they have slept the sleep which knows no waking in the committees to which, under our rules, they must be referred.

I now ask the indulgence of the House while I submit to gentlemen present and to the country some of the considerations which have induced me again to bring this subject to public notice.

The proposition, which I now send to the Clerk's desk to be read, provides that the President of the United States shall be elected for but a single term of four years, and proposes the abolition of the office of Vice President. If adopted, it also secures the abolition of the present system of appointing presidential electors, as the Legislatures of the several States may provide, and makes it impossible for the election of a President to devolve, as now, on the House of Representatives, but provides that in case of death, resignation, or removal of the President from office, that the two Houses in joint convention shall elect to fill the vacancy, each Senator and Representative having one vote. Its adoption will relieve the people of the despotism of party caucuses and party conventions, and thereafter commit the election of President to a direct vote of the people by ballot. The Clerk will please read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, (two thirds of both Houses concurring,) That the following be proposed as an amendment to said Constitution, which, when ratified by the Legislatures of three fourths of the several States, shall be valid, to all intents and purposes, as part of said Constitution, to wit:

Amend section three of article one, by striking out clauses four and five, which read:

"The Vice President of the United States shall be President of the Senate, but shall have no vote, unless they be equally divided."

"The Senate shall choose their other officers and also a President pro tempore, in the absence of the Vice President, or when he shall exercise the office of President of the United States."

And insert the following:

"The Senate shall choose their own presiding and other officers."

In article two, section four, strike out the words "Vice President."

Amend section one, article two, by striking out the words "together with the Vice President chosen for the same term," so that it will read:

"The executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America; he shall hold his office during the term of four years, and be elected as follows."

In lieu of clauses two, three, four and six of article two and of article twelve of the amendments insert the following:

The qualified electors shall meet at the usual places of holding elections in their respective States on the first Monday in April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-two, and on the first Monday in April every four years thereafter, under such rules and regulations as the Congress may by law prescribe, and vote by ballot for a citizen qualified under this Constitution to be President of the United States, and the result of such election in each State shall be certified, sealed, and forwarded to the seat of Government of the United States in such manner as the Congress may by law direct.

The Congress shall be in session on the third Monday in May after such election, and on the Tuesday next succeeding the third Monday in May, if a quorum of each House shall be present, and if not, immediately on the assembling of such quorum, the Senators and members of the House of Representatives shall meet in the Representative Chamber in joint convention, and the President of the Senate, in presence of the Senators and Representatives thus assembled, shall open all the returns of said election and declare the result. The person having the greatest number of votes for President shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of votes cast; if no person have such majority, or if the person having such majority decline the office or die before the counting of the vote, then the President of the Senate shall so proclaim: whereupon the joint convention shall order the proceedings to be officially published, stating particularly the number of votes given for each person for President.

Another election shall thereupon take place on the second Tuesday of October next succeeding, at which election the duly qualified electors shall again meet at the usual places of holding elections in their respective States and vote for one of the persons then living having the highest number of votes, not exceeding five on the list voted for as President at the preceding election in April, and the result of such election in each State shall be certified, sealed, and forwarded to the seat of the Government of the United States as provided by law.

On the third Tuesday in December after such second election, or as soon thereafter as a quorum of each House shall be present, the Senators and members of the House of Representatives shall again meet in joint convention, and the President of the Senate, in presence of the Senators and Representatives thus assembled, shall open all the returns of said election and declare the person having the highest number of votes duly elected President for the ensuing term.

No person thus elected to the office of President shall thereafter be eligible to be reelected.

In case of the removal of the President from office by impeachment, or of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, the same shall devolve temporarily on the President of the Senate, if there be one; if not, then on the Speaker of the House of Representatives, if there be one; and if not, then the member of the executive department senior in years shall act as President. If there be no officer of an executive department, then the Senator senior in years shall act until a successor is chosen and qualified.

If Congress be in session at the time of the death, disability, or removal of the President, the Senators and Representatives shall meet in joint convention under such rules and regulations as the Congress may by law prescribe, and proceed to elect by  viva voce  vote a President to fill such vacancy. Each Senator and Representative having one vote, a quorum for this purpose shall consist of a majority in each House of the Senators and Representatives duly elected and qualified, and a majority of all the votes given shall be necessary to the choice of a President. The person thus elected as President shall discharge all the powers and duties of said office until the inauguration of the President elected at the next regular election.

If the Congress be not in session then the acting President shall forthwith issue a proclamation convening Congress within sixty days after the death or disability of the President.

On the assembling of a quorum in each House the Senators and Representatives shall meet in joint convention and elect a President as herein before provided.

Amend article fourteen proposed by the Thirty-Ninth Congress by striking out section two and inserting the following:

SEC. 2. Every citizen of the United States twenty-one years of age and upward (except Indians not taxed and persons non compos) shall be an elector in any State or Territory in which he may have resided one year next preceding the election at which he shall offer to vote. Each State shall prescribe uniform rules for the registration of all qualified electors residing therein and complete the said enrollment at least twenty days before each presidential election; they shall provide by law against fraud at elections, and may disfranchise any person for participation in rebellion against the United States, or for the commission of an act which is felony at common law.

SEC. 3. Representatives in Congress shall be apportioned among the several States according to the number of inhabitants in each.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. On these several propositions I intend to ask the judgment of the country and eventually a vote upon them in this House.

SHALL THE OFFICE OF VICE PRESIDENT BE ABOLISHED?

The proposition to abolish the office of Vice President will, I trust, commend itself to the considerate men of all parties. The creation of the office was objected to by some of the ablest men of the Revolution as "unnecessary and dangerous." Experience has confirmed the wisdom of their opposition. The Vice President is, as all know, a superfluous officer, having few duties to perform, and those might more properly devolve upon a member of the Senate, selected because of his fitness, as the duty of presiding in the House devolves upon a member of the House who is elected Speaker.

The objection to the selection of a member of the Senate as Presiding Officer would hold equally good against selecting a member of the House of Representatives for its Presiding Officer. Indeed, the power conferred on the Speaker of the House is far greater than is conferred on the Vice President or President pro tempore of the Senate.

In the House the Speaker appoints all the committees and can participate in debate on the floor of the House. He may also vote at any time he so elects. In the Senate the regular standing committees are selected by a party caucus, and appointed or confirmed afterward in open Senate by a vote of that body. The Vice President is not permitted to debate any proposition before the Senate, and can only vote when there is an equal division, while the Speaker can vote at any time if he desires to do so, but is not compelled to vote except in case of a tie.

The country has been distracted and its peace imperiled more than once because of the existence of the office of Vice President. The nation would have been spared the terrible ordeal through which it passed in the contest between Jefferson and Burr in 1801 had there been no vice presidential office. Had there been no such office we would have been spared the perfidy of a Tyler, the betrayal of a Fillmore, and the baseness and infamy of a Johnson.

Party interest and party necessity, under our present convention system, usually seeks to compensate the friends of a defeated presidential candidate in any national convention by conceding to them the privilege of naming the candidate for the Vice Presidency.

This is done in order to soften the sting of defeat and to bind the defeated party in the convention to the more certain support of a ticket which a large minority, and sometimes even a majority, of the party would refuse to support at the election but for such compromises, aided by the despotism of party caucuses and party conventions. Often the mere question of locality has more to do with the nomination of a Vice President than the question of his fitness.

The country rejoices with me in the fact that no such narrow consideration controlled the action of the Republican convention at Chicago in selecting our honored Speaker as the candidate of the party for Vice President. Not to locality is he indebted for that position, for locality was against him, but rather to his long and faithful public services, his fidelity to Republican principles, and to his personal worth is he indebted for the distinguished honor of being associated on the same presidential ticket with the most extraordinary man of this or any age.

While each of the candidates for President and Vice President professes to subscribe to the so-called platform of principles adopted by the conventions which nominate them, they nevertheless represent, as a rule, opposing factions in the party, and often at heart antagonistic ideas, which are only subordinated for the sake of party success. This was the case with Harrison and Tyler, Taylor and Fillmore, Lincoln and Johnson. When each of these Vice Presidents on the death of the President-elect came into the presidential office he attempted to build up a party which should secure his reelection. For this purpose they did not scruple to betray the great body of men who elected them to the office of Vice President, nor did they hesitate at the open and shameless use of public patronage for that purpose. The weakest and most dangerous part of our executive system for the personal safety of the President is a defect in the Constitution itself. I find it in that clause of the Constitution which provides that the Vice President shall, on the death or inability of the President, succeed to his office. The presidential office is thus undefended and invites temptation. The life of but one man must often stand between the success of unscrupulous ambition, the designs of mercenary cliques, or the fear and hatred of conspirators.

Whether pro-slavery conspirators, representing party cliques, caused the death of Harrison and Taylor I know not. I am confident, however, that a wide-spread conspiracy, representing the pro-slavery rebel faction in the nation, was organized for the purpose of assassinating Mr. Lincoln, and all know of its success. That the conspirators who plotted the murder of Mr. Lincoln had a purpose to subserve, which they supposed could not be accomplished while he remained in the presidential office, will hardly be questioned.

Mr. Chairman, history will record the fact that the conspiracy which resulted in the assassination of Mr. Lincoln was the offspring of the rebellion, and almost gave success to a cause which millions of rebels failed to secure after a deadly war of four years. Had assassination done more than it did it would have overreached itself. By sparing and using Andrew Johnson it gained a temporary triumph for those whom it represented.

Whatever may have been, and whatever may now be, my suspicions as to the complicity of Andrew Johnson in the assassination plot, the schemes and hopes of the conspirators can easily be explained upon the hypothesis of his innocence and his entire ignorance of their bloody purposes. Let me present it from that stand-point.

The failure of the rebellion found a large number of disappointed and desperate men in the late rebel States under disability for treason and rebellion. If justice was meted out to them they knew that they ought to be arrested, tried, and punished, and that if the law was administered their property was subject to confiscation. They expected, in any event, to be politically disfranchised, if they escaped imprisonment, banishment, or the confiscation of their property. Having staked all on the hazard of a die and lost, their condition was desperate, and to escape punishments, confiscations, or political disfranchisement thousands of them would not hesitate at any desperate expedient which promised success. The men who without cause had inaugurated fratricidal war, who had murdered unarmed Union soldiers after their surrender, who had deliberately starved to death thousands of our heroic men at Andersonville, Salisbury, Belle Isle, and Libby prison, and committed enormities upon the living and the dead which no human tongue can describe, would not hesitate at taking the life of any one man by assassination, however exalted his position, if thereby it secured them exemption from the punishment due their crimes.

On surveying the situation they found that the Republican party had, by a blunder, which in such an hour was worse than a crime, elected Andrew Johnson Vice President of the United States. I can imagine how carefully they examined his antecedents, his personal and political history; how they weighed well his words, and made themselves familiar with his public and private acts, his weaknesses and his ambition. During this examination they undoubtedly learned his view of the "situation" before he left Tennessee to be inaugurated Vice President. They heard of his declaration to Stanley Mathews at Cincinnati while on his way to the capital, before his inauguration, and to others afterward, as to the necessity of reorganizing the Democratic party. They were informed of what he had repeatedly said he would do about reconstruction "if he were President." They knew of his condition when inaugurated Vice President, and that to them was an augury of success. Of his vanity, his unscrupulousness, his love of power, and his capacities as a demagogue they were fully advised. They satisfied themselves that, with proper management, he could be used to shield them from punishment, and, perchance, restore them to political power. From that moment the doom of Mr. Lincoln was sealed. The pretense that Mr. Johnson was to have been assassinated was never believed by any but willing dupes. The assassination of Mr. Johnson would have defeated the hopes and purposes of the conspirators, and no one knew this better than they.

After Mr. Johnson came into the presidential office the conspirators and their friends at once openly and unblushingly surrounded him, flattered him, took possession of him, and promised him a reelection and a brilliant future. They reminded him of his old political record, of his denunciation of abolitionists, of his utterances to Stanley Mathews and others as to the necessity of reorganizing the Democratic party by a union with conservative Republicans, leaving the "anti-slavery element in the Republican party to sluff off," as he repeatedly expressed it. All this, I submit, could have happened, and Mr. Johnson be free from any guilty knowledge of the assassination, either before or after the act.

I only present this panoramic view of what has transpired and is now history to illustrate how weak and indefensible in this particular is the presidential office; so that I may appeal to the nation to fortify it against this danger, by removing the temptation now presented to conspirators and assassins, and thus make the presidential office a citadel against which they may hurl themselves in vain.

Adopt this plan, and the occupant of the presidential office is effectually guarded from all political conspiracies which thrive by assassination. It also precludes the possibility of an interregnum in that office. In addition to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House, each of the eight members of the Cabinet in turn, and after them the entire Senate, stand ready to assume, temporarily, the duties of the presidential office until Congress can elect a successor. It would not be possible for any conspiracy to succeed which contemplated the wholesale assassination of entire Cabinets and Senates.

If, as I propose in this amendment, there had been no Vice President, and the Constitution had provided, as I suggest, that on the death, resignation, or removal of the President the vacancy should be filled forthwith by the election of any citizen of the United States eligible under the Constitution, each Senator and Representative having one vote, the nation would never have been cursed with the Tyler, Fillmore, or Johnson administrations, nor is it to be supposed that Mr. Lincoln would have been assassinated, because it would not have been possible to foretell who would have been elected his successor. If this amendment had been part of the Constitution the country would have been spared much anxiety during the late impeachment trial, and Senators who constituted the court of impeachment would have been spared much of the suspicion and criticism to which they were subject. No man could then have known in advance who would have been the choice of the two Houses of Congress, in joint convention, for acting President to fill the vacancy. The question of Mr. Johnson's successor would, therefore, never have disturbed or embarrassed the proceedings of the Senate during the recent impeachment trial.

THE ABOLITION OF PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORS AND NATIONAL CONVENTIONS.

Instead of the intervention of presidential electors, I propose the election of President by a direct vote of the people by ballot, on the democratic principle, so fully recognized in our theory of government, "that all political power is inherent in the people and of right belongs to the people." I hold that it is safer and better for the people to exercise this power directly without the intervention of nominating conventions or presidential electors or any intermediate agency. To withhold from the qualified electors of the nation the right to vote directly for the choice of a President is a violation of the democratic idea, an act at war with the fundamental principles of our Government, and utterly indefensible.

The adoption of the proposition which I have made will secure at once the abolition of the plan of electing a President by indirection, in the selection of electors chosen as now, by a plurality of the votes in each State, thus enabling the minority, when there are three or more candidates, by concentrating their votes on one electoral ticket, to secure the election of their candidate. This plan will also secure the early abolition of all national nominating conventions, and eventually of all State and county conventions, thus relieving every voter from the despotism of party cliques and party caucuses.

This provision is itself enough to commend the proposed amendment to the favorable consideration of the great body of the American people who have so long been controlled by the despotism of party conventions.

As a rule, not one voter in ten is consulted under our present caucus system as to his first choice of a candidate for any office, and yet when nominations are made, no matter whether fairly or by fraud, each voter is compelled to support the nominee of his party or aid in the election of the candidate of the opposite party.

For years I have been opposed to the present system of nominating all candidates for elective offices, including that of President of the United States. I have long held that all nominations should be made directly by the people under the authority and protection of law. In other words, that there ought to be two elections for all officers, to be elected by the people, unless at the first election one of the candidates should receive a majority of all the votes cast, an event not probable at any election, and certainly not for President nor for Governor of a State or a Representative in Congress. If any one should receive a majority of all the votes cast at the first election he would be declared duly elected, and there would be no second election to fill that office. If there were no choice at the first election for President, I provide in the proposed amendment that all candidates but the five, or possibly it may be advisable to say all but the three highest voted for at the first election, shall be dropped.

If I were making a State constitution or a law for the election of any elective officer, I would provide that at the second election all but the three, or possibly all but the two, highest voted for at the first election for any office should be dropped, and that at the second election only the candidates thus nominated should be voted for; that no other votes should be counted, and if there were three candidates that a plurality of the votes cast should elect as now.

This plan, as all can see, would supersede the present corrupt and unsatisfactory convention system, and enable every elector to vote without caucus dictation at the first election for his first choice, and without fear of electing the candidate of the opposition because of scattering votes.

After the most careful and deliberate examination of the question I am compelled to confess that the convention system now in use by both the great political parties of the nation is demoralizing in its practical workings, unfair in its representation of the great body of voters, and repugnant to the principles of true democracy and republicanism.

I look upon the present convention system for the nomination of a President as far more objectionable than the old congressional caucus system which it superseded, and which I would not restore if I could.

The theory is that the national conventions of both parties are composed of delegates fresh from the people, elected by the people, and that they represent the people. All know that, practically, nothing can be further from the truth. History will confirm what I say, when I declare that a majority of the national conventions of both parties which have been held not only have not reflected the wishes of the party for which they assumed to act in making nominations, but that they have repeatedly and deliberately disregarded their known wishes.

Instead of our national, State, or district conventions being made up of delegates elected directly by the people, they are made up of delegates selected by packed committees in State conventions composed of delegates appointed on the recommendation of like committees appointed by other delegates in county conventions, who, in the first instance, are often nominated in township and ward caucuses, which are packed by the leaders of cliques and controlled by political machinery in the hands of a few, without regard to the wishes or interests of the voters for whom they assume to act. Thus the delegates in our national conventions are always removed three, and usually four, degrees from the people. Indeed, the people seldom have a voice in the election of the first delegates from townships and wards, owing to the political machinery employed by the few who work it. If the voice of the people is partially heard in the ward and township caucuses, which is well nigh impossible under our present practice, at each successive remove from the people their will is less regarded, until at last when it reaches our national conventions no voice is heard but the clamor of the office-seeker and the violent contentions of warring factions. Especially is this the case in the Democratic party when they adopt the two-third rule. As to consultation and deliberation at such conventions, that is impossible, nor is it now expected.

Often more than otherwise the delegates who attend these conventions vote for men of whom they know but little and of whose political record they know absolutely nothing. Witness the action of the Republican convention at Baltimore which nominated Andrew Johnson. The indecent scramble of the bullet-headed politicians and demagogues for the honor of first announcing the name of Andrew Johnson as a candidate before that convention was one of the most disgusting exhibitions I ever witnessed.

A majority who attend such conventions are always clamorous for prompt action and adjournment, never for consultation. They are usually more anxious about the size of their hotel bills than about the record of the candidate to be nominated. Their object is gained when their names are recorded as delegates to the convention and they have voted for the nomination of the successful man.

Benton, in his "Thirty Years' View," in speaking of national conventions and comparing them with the congressional caucus system, uses the following language:

"But it [the convention system] quickly degenerated and became obnoxious to all the objections to Congress caucus nominations and many others besides. Members of Congress still attended them, either as delegates or as lobby managers. Persons attended as delegates who had no constituency, [as delegates, professing to be from Texas and other States, appeared at the Chicago Republican convention in 1860.] Delegates attended upon equivocal appointment. Double sets of delegates sometimes came from the State, and either were admitted or repulsed, assuited the views of the majority. Proxies were invented. Many delegates attended with the sole view of establishing a claim for office, and voted accordingly. The two-thirds rule was invented to enable the minority to control the majority, and the whole proceeding became anomalous and irresponsible and subversive of the will of the people, leaving them no more control over the nomination than the subjects of kings have over the birth of the child which is born to rule over them. King caucus is as potent as any other king in this respect; for whoever gets the nomination, no matter how effected, becomes the candidate of the party, from the necessity of union against the opposite party, and from the indisposition of the great States to go into the House of Representatives to be balanced by the small ones. This is the mode of making Presidents, practiced by both parties now. It is the virtual election! And thus the election of the President and Vice President of the United States has passed, not only from the college of electors, to which the Constitution confided it, and from the people to whom the practice under the Constitution gave it, and from the House of Representatives, which the Constitution provided as ultimate arbiter, but has gone to an anomalous, irresponsible body, unknown to law or Constitution, unknown to the early ages of our Government, and of which a large proportion of the members composing it, and a much larger proportion of interlopers attending it, have no other view, either in attending or in promoting the nomination of any particular man, than to get one elected who will enable them to eat out of the public crib—who will give them a key to the public crib."

I do not overdraw the picture, nor did the great Missouri Senator.

In order to realize how Democratic and Republican national conventions are made up, let me state as briefly as I may the manner of their organization.

NATIONAL CONVENTIONS—HOW MADE UP.

A national committee issue a call some five or six months in advance of the time appointed for the meeting of the convention, in which they call upon the electors of their party in each State to appoint two delegates for each congressional district and four for the State at large, to meet in Chicago or New York. State committees of each party issue calls for State conventions, to be composed of delegates from each county. County committees issue calls for the voters in each ward and township or voting precinct, to select delegates to a county convention. Township and ward committees issue their call, and the voters of each party are supposed to comply with the invitation of the authorized local committees of their respective parties and attend the caucuses.

What is the fact? On an average I do not believe one voter in ten of either party ever attends the caucuses, simply because they are so unfairly and often so improperly conducted by a few political managers and office-seekers that the great body of honorable men become disgusted and remain away. Should they attend, they are permitted to have no voice in the caucus if they are in hostility to those who live, and expect to live, by controlling them. Oftener than otherwise not more than ten, and seldom more than fifty, meet at these caucuses in each ward or township, unless there is some local excitement growing out of a contest for local nominations. Sometimes not more than three or five men will go to the place appointed for caucus, and organize and appoint delegates in the name of the party and adjourn before the time named in the notice, and before the regular meeting could possibly be held. This is always done so quietly and speedily that not unfrequently the regular caucus know nothing about the pretended caucus which has just adjourned.

If time is not thus taken by the forelock by the tricksters when the people meet at the place designated it is attempted in some other manner. Usually Mr. Smith, by previous arrangement, nominates Mr. Pogram for chairman and Mr. Thompson for secretary, and puts the affirmation of the motion and declares it carried. Whereupon Mr. Smith moves that a committee of three be appointed to report to the meeting the names of suitable gentlemen to be appointed as delegates to the county convention. The chairman declares the motion carried without putting the negative, and appoints on said committee Mr. Smith and two others whose names have been handed to the chairman by Mr. Smith before the meeting of the caucus. The committee retire and soon return with a unanimous report, including the name of the chairman and Mr. Smith as delegates, which, on motion of Mr. Smith, the caucus accepts, and the delegates reported are declared appointed.

If any one has the courage to object to such proceedings, he is promptly ruled out of order by the chairman and denounced as a disorganizer by Mr. Smith and his friends and the caucus adjourns. If Smith, Pogram & Co. fear they cannot thus manage the caucus, they do not hesitate to resort to any chicanery which in their opinion may be necessary to carry their point. To do so, Mr. Smith will sometimes nominate Mr. Pogram for chairman and Mr. Thompson for secretary, and put the motion affirmatively and declare it carried, notwithstanding honorable members of the party protest and demand a division. The well-drilled caucus chairman will take no notice of this demand, and Mr. Smith will take from his pocket a paper and read from it a long list of names, which he moves be appointed delegates to the county convention, and Mr. Chairman Pogram puts the motion and declares it adopted, refusing to put the negative, and before the members of the caucus have time to recover from their surprise Mr. Smith moves that the caucus do now adjourn. The chairman at once puts the motion and declares it adopted, and in less time than it has required me to tell it the so-called caucus has been organized, appointed delegates, and adjourned, and the officers, with Mr. Smith and his clique, retire to some convenient place for refreshments and to make out the certificates of election for the delegates. The people who are present then consult whether they had better organize the caucus and elect delegates as honorable and honest men should do, or whether they had better submit to the outrage thus perpetrated rather than hazard the success of the party and incur the risk of having their delegates refused seats in the county convention, should they elect any; and, in a majority of instances, the people submit to just such shameless proceedings rather than hazard the defeat of their party. If, however, they should decide not to submit to such an outrage, and proceed to elect delegates regularly and fairly, they are usually excluded from the county convention, because they organized and elected their delegates after the regular caucus had adjourned.

I have known members of the Democratic party come into a Republican caucus to aid a desperate and unprincipled clique, and men claiming to be Christian gentlemen permit themselves to be nominated and serve as chairman and secretary under a pretended election such as I have described, and put motions and declare them adopted, and that the persons named by Mr. Smith or Jones as delegates to a county convention were duly elected in a caucus where the majority against the proposed delegates were three and four to one, and if they had been permitted to vote in the negative would have so voted.

Where an attempt is sometimes made to have a fair vote by ballot Mr. Smith and his followers do not hesitate to pack the caucus with men who belong to the opposite party whom they can use, and in addition stuff the ballot-box to carry their point. If from any cause they fail, even with their ballot-box stuffing, to elect their delegates, the next move is to proclaim, in a boisterous manner, the whole proceeding unfair and retire from the caucus with well-feigned disgust to an adjoining room or into the open air and elect delegates, who go to the convention and demand admission. If they cannot displace the fairly and regularly-elected delegates they will propose, "for the sake of harmony in the party," and as a compromise, that both sets of delegates be admitted, with authority for the two delegations jointly to cast the vote to which the regular delegation would be entitled. This dodge is often repeated by the election of double delegations from county to State conventions, and sometimes by State to national conventions; and oftener than otherwise both sets of delegates thus elected are admitted, and the voice of the party in the township or ward, county or State, is neutralized in the conventions to which fraudulent delegates are thus admitted. Men are often admitted in this way to county, State, and national conventions who could not possibly be elected by their own party to any position. It is due to fairness to state that a large majority of such frauds as I have described are usually perpetrated in large towns and cities.

When men claiming to be respectable citizens are guilty of such dishonorable and fraudulent practices in their own party caucuses it is not surprising that the demoralization which is inseparable from such conduct should show itself in ballot-box stuffing, illegal and double voting, and all kinds of fraud when the contest is between the opposing political parties at a regular election.

A convention of delegates, elected as I have described, meet, organize, and go through the routine of appointing a committee to report to the convention the names of persons to be selected as delegates to State conventions, and, if necessary to success, the same unfairness which marked the proceeding at the ward and township caucuses are repeated in county and State conventions, and the persons whom the schemers desire for delegates are usually selected. At State conventions the delegates are so far removed from the people that they represent for the most part the cliques to which they belong, and the delegates who are in turn selected by them to our national conventions represent, as a rule, first themselves, next their personal friends, and last of all the people.

The demoralization inseparable from such disgraceful proceedings cannot be overstated. As Mr. Benton says, a majority of the delegates who attend national conventions do so for the purpose of establishing claims for office, and we all know that they are usually candidates for an appointment at the hands of the President whom their votes help to nominate. Where there are three or more rival candidates for President before a national convention, and a balance of power party can be formed, they do not hesitate to demand as a condition to the vote of their clique or State the promise of a Cabinet appointment. This unblushing demand has been made as a condition to the support of cliques and factions at more than one convention and succeeded to. In pursuance of such arrangements Cabinet ministers have been appointed, and were thus enabled by their official position to provide offices for their friends, who, as delegates, voted as required in convention. Entire delegations from States sometimes permit themselves to be bartered and pledged for a candidate on condition that one or more of their own number shall have a designated official appointment, and sometimes even for the empty honor of having one of their number act as the presiding officer of the convention; and this is called representing the people. Thus in our national conventions, where oftener than otherwise there are more than two candidates, the most unscrupulous are the most likely to succeed. A few leading men combining for Cabinet positions or foreign appointments can, by concentrating their votes, secure a majority in the convention, and thus nominate any candidate upon whom they unite. If this has been and may be by combinations such as I have described, it is certain to be repeated again under like temptations.

The desire for place and power can, as it has done, bring the most hostile political leaders together. "If we combine," they whisper to each other, "we shall conquer. If we divide we shall be conquered." With the cohesive power of self-interest to urge them on they combine, and by the aid of party conventions make nominations in the name of the people to which the people are opposed, and thus live upon the Government at their expense.

The Republican national convention for 1864, which renominated Mr. Lincoln, and the Republican convention which met at Chicago on the 20th of this month, formally to ratify the wishes of the people in placing General Grant in nomination, are exceptions to this rule. The man of destiny is made a candidate in spite of cliques and cabals. As no combinations could have been made by party cliques formidable enough in 1864 to have defeated the nomination and election of Mr. Lincoln, so none could be made this year of sufficient magnitude to defeat the nomination and election of General Grant. Such was the condition of the country in 1864, and such is its condition to-day, that the people with a unanimity unprecedented commanded, and the political schemers, making a virtue of necessity, yielded, and were as clam-orous for Lincoln in 1864 as they are to-day for General Grant.

As a rule, however, national conventions do not, as I have shown, nominate the first choice of either party. Especially is this the case with the Democratic party. The two-thirds rule makes their cliques more formidable, and the schemers usually so manage as to get their favorite or secure a compromise on some new man whom they know they can use.

If the President and all elective officers were nominated by law as I propose, no compromise on a new and unknown man could possibly be made by political managers.

Under such a system as I propose it will be conceded that General Taylor could not have been nominated by the Whig party in 1848 nor General Scott in 1852; nor could the Democrats have nominated James K. Polk in 1844, Pierce in 1852, or Buchanan in 1856. It is doubtful whether more than two of the five men just named could, under the proposed system, have obtained votes enough at the first or nominating election to have been included in the list of the five highest, so as to have been voted for at the second or regular election; and, of course, in that event, they could not have been, as they were, the candidates of their respective parties.

Instead of conventions representing the people, in my judgment no plan could well be devised which would more certainly divest them of all power and transfer it to party managers and party cliques.

The appointment of delegates in the manner which I have described tends to put the whole political machinery of each party into the hands of a few who make politics a trade and live by scheming.

The further the selection of delegates to national conventions is removed from the people the more certainly does power pass into the hands of the few. In such conventions the voice of the people is not heard, and the will of the delegates, who are usually office expectants, becomes supreme. An active, trained, and united clique is thus sure to be formed in every party, who will devote their entire time and attention to manipulating and controlling conventions. They will retain in their hands the appointment of all delegates from the ward and township meetings up to the national conventions. In order to increase and concentrate their power they will, if they can secure a bare majority in their State conventions, cause the delegates to national conventions to be instructed to vote as a unit on all questions, thus silencing the voice of the minority, if by any mischance there should happen to be a minority in either county or State conventions. In this way the most experienced, cunning, and unworthy men often control the great conventions of both the great political parties.

When these schemes are successful and their nominations are made the people are called upon to elect the nominees. If any member of the party hesitates to give his unqualified support to a ticket thus nominated he is branded as an apostate and deserter. In the mean time, these gentlemen who graciously assume to provide the people with candidates for all places divide the offices in the States among themselves and their adherents and join in recommending to the presidential candidate whom they have just nominated every delegate who has voted right, for an appointment of some kind, to be made when he shall have been elected.

This corruption is the legitimate fruit of the convention system, and appears to be inseparable from it.

For this reason I have long been opposed to any system which interposes between the people and the nomination and election of the President or any officer elective by the people.

The proposition which I have submitted, if adopted, abolishes at once all this, and destroys absolutely the power of factions and cliques, so that thereafter they would no longer be able to control or dictate nominations; and in this important particular the Democratic theory would be fully recognized in the Constitution.

It may, and probably will be, claimed by the friends of the convention system, that the proposition securing a nominating election under the protection and security of law would not prevent the caucus nomination of candidate to be voted for at the first election. There is unquestionably some force in this suggestion. I am confident, however, that its adoption would practically abolish the convention system. As congressional caucuses were superseded by the convention system, so all nominations would thereafter be made by the free and voluntary expression of the people at the ballot-box; and it would soon become unpopular and dangerous to the success of any candidate to be the nominee of any clique or caucus as now. In short, the convention system would be repudiated, as congressional caucuses were repudiated, and if a candidate attempted to force himself in advance upon the people by the use of such machinery he would meet with certain and just defeat.

The people may safely be intrusted with the management of this whole matter. All they ask is the protection of law, and they will soon dispose of party tricksters and convention cliques. A nominating election, under the safeguards of law, is their security. If cliques and conventions attempt to dictate and control at the first or nominating election, their defeat will be inevitable at the second or regular election. It will thus be seen that the system has, in itself, the inherent power of protection against caucuses, conventions, and frauds.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I would like to ask my colleague if he has not attended conventions and been nominated by conventions, and if he does not support all nominations made by the Republican party?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I answer the question of my colleague in the affirmative. I have attended conventions and expect to attend them as long as my party adheres to that system. I have been nominated by conventions, and have accepted those nominations, because I believed they were honestly made, and because I believed they fairly represented the wishes of the party. I would not accept a nomination secured by bargain and sale, or by fraud and corruption. I would not accept a nomination for any office if made by a "balance of power" clique, with the understanding, expressed or implied, that in case of my election I should appoint the leaders of such clique to office. I have been nominated and elected five consecutive times by the Republican party of my district, and I never made, nor permitted to be made, such a promise to a single man. I have always supported the regular nominations made by my party, and expect to do so until the system of nominating conventions is abolished, and some new and better system adopted.

This, however, does not prove that the convention system is not justly obnoxious to all the objections which I have urged against it. It only the better illustrates the fact, that the great body of electors in both political parties are often compelled to vote against their better judgments by the machinery of party caucus and party conventions.

THE INDEFENSIBLE MODE OF ELECTING OUR PRESIDENTS MAINTAINED IN THE INTERESTS OF SLAVERY.

But for the existence of slavery the present indefensible anti-democratic system of electing the President by the appointment of electors in such manner as the State Legislatures may by law provide would long since have been changed, and a system more in accord with the democratic spirit of the age adopted.

That the present system of nominating and electing a President is in antagonism with the principles of democratic government will not be seriously questioned. It has more than once defeated the popular choice for the nomination and election of President. Since I became a voter a majority of our Presidents have been elected by a minority of the popular vote. Under the present system the incentive to fraud in ballot-box stuffing, illegal voting, and the importation of voters into the large and closely-contested States cannot be overestimated. If an electoral ticket obtains by any means, fair or foul, a plurality of one or more votes, it controls the entire electoral vote of the State, which may decide the result of a presidential election, as in the case of the vote of New York in 1844. This electoral machinery has, and may again, defeat the popular will.

In 1824 Maryland gave Adams a larger popular vote than either Jackson, Crawford, or Clay. But of the eleven electoral votes to which the State was then entitled Jackson received seven, Adams three, and Crawford one.

The electors in Maryland were elected at that time by districts, whereas they are now elected on a general ticket for the State at large, as in all the States. Two districts in Maryland (the third and fourth) elected at that election two electors each, to act as senatorial electors.

In 1824 the electors of President and Vice President were appointed in the several States as follows:

In Maine, Massachusetts, Maryland, Kentucky, Tennessee, Illinois, and Missouri, by the people in districts. Seven States.

In New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Virginia, North Carolina, Mississippi, Alabama, and Ohio, by the people on general ticket. Ten States.

In Vermont, New York, Delaware, Georgia, Indiana, Louisiana, and South Carolina, by the Legislatures. Seven States.

In a few years all the States except South Carolina adopted the general ticket system, so that the vote of the States should not be divided, thus securing to the large States the power to elect the President, and often by a mere plurality of the vote of the State.

At the election of which I am speaking Jackson had ninety-nine electoral votes, Adams eighty-four, Crawford forty-one, and Clay thirty-seven.

The Constitution requiring a majority of all the electoral votes cast to elect a President, and there being no choice of President by the electors, the election devolved on the House of Representatives.

THE STATES WHICH REPRESENT A MINORITY OF THE PEOPLE IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MAY ELECT THE PRESIDENT.

Here, again, the machinery provided by the Constitution for the election of a President by the House of Representatives makes it possible for a minority of the people residing in small States to defeat the will of a majority of the voters in the nation.

At the election in 1824 for electors of President Mr. Adams had a majority of the electoral vote in but seven States. When the election took place in the House of Representatives, each State having one vote, which is cast as a majority of the Representatives in the House from each State may determine, Mr. Adams had a majority in each of the Representatives from thirteen States. The vote stood as follows:

For Adams.....13
For Jackson.....7
For Crawford.....4

Mr. Adams, having a majority of all the votes cast, was declared duly elected President for the ensuing term.

It will be observed that Mr. Adams had not only fifteen electoral votes less than Jackson in the Electoral College, but that he had a majority of the electors chosen in only seven States, whereas he obtained in the House of Representatives when elected President the vote of thirteen States, three of these being States which gave Jackson a majority of their electoral vote, namely, Alabama, Louisiana, and Maryland; while three of the States which gave a majority for Clay at the election voted for Adams in the House, namely, Kentucky, Missouri, and Ohio. North Carolina gave her vote in the Electoral College for Jackson, but in the House of Representatives her vote was given to Crawford by a vote of ten to three, in utter disregard of the popular vote of the people of the State as expressed at the ballot-box.

I present these facts to show how, under our present system, the voice of the people has been and may again be disregarded. Nothing could demonstrate more forcibly than this simple statement the necessity for a change in the manner of electing a President, if the will of the people as expressed at the ballot-box is to determine every four years who shall discharge the powers and duties of the office of President of the United States.

I also desire to call attention to the fact that the machinery of electors, as provided by our present Constitution, makes it possible for the will of the people to be defeated after the appointment of electors. For instance, if a candidate for the Presidency should have in the Electoral College but two or three majority of the electoral vote, and four or five electors chosen by the majority in the different States should, either corruptly, ignorantly, negligently, or for any cause, fail or refuse to attend at the place and on the day designated by law for their meeting in each State, to vote for the person designated on the ticket for President, or should appear and vote for the opposing candidate, or vote blank, the people who voted for such electors would be either misrepresented or unrepresented in the Electoral College, and the candidate for whom a majority of electors was chosen to vote would be legally defeated, although fairly elected. This is not unlikely to happen at any election, unless each State should provide by law for the contingency of absentees. They could not provide a remedy for the betrayal of an elector.

Of the presidential electors appointed for 1792, two in Maryland and one in South Carolina failed to appear at the time and place appointed for the meeting of electors, and did not vote. For 1808 there was one in Kentucky. For 1812, one in Ohio. For 1816, three in Maryland and one in Delaware. For 1820, one in Pennsylvania, one in Alabama, and one in Tennessee. For 1824, one in Rhode Island. For 1832, three in Maryland. For 1864, one in Nevada. The entire electoral vote for the State of Wisconsin was legally lost to Fremont in 1856 by the accident of a snow storm, and would probably not have been counted if thereby the result of the election could have been changed. There may have been others which I have overlooked.

In 1797 Adams had seventy-one votes and Jefferson sixty-nine, giving Adams but two majority. If three of the electors who voted for Adams had failed to appear at the time and place designated by law to vote for President, or had refused to vote, or voted blank, Mr. Jefferson would have been elected. It will thus be seen that of the number of electors who have been appointed and three or four times failed to vote for President, in one instance in our history such neglect or refusal to act would have changed the result of an election and defeated the legally expressed will of the people in the selection of a President.

But I need not detain the House longer by presenting reasons against a system so indefensible.

If the proposition which I have introduced should be adopted and become a part of the Constitution, it will abolish all the machinery of intermediate bodies, which now often control or defeat the will of the people, whether it be national conventions, electoral colleges, or the choice of a President by the House of Representatives.

THE ELECTION OF A PRESIDENT BY THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

We have had two elections in our history of a President by the House of Representatives, and I trust the Constitution may soon be so changed that we shall never have another.

Each State in such an election has one vote, and a majority, as I have already said, of the Representatives in Congress from the States whose members are present and voting determine for which of the three persons returned to the House the vote of the State shall be cast. At such an election the Representatives in Congress elected by a minority of the people may, and as a rule will, in such a contest elect the President.

Counting all the States, and we now have thirty-seven; of these, under our present system ten may elect a President if united. I will name them:

	Votes.
Illinois.....	16
Indiana.....	13
Kentucky.....	11
Massachusetts.....	12
Missouri.....	11
New York.....	33
Virginia.....	10
Ohio.....	21
Pennsylvania.....	26
Tennessee.....	10

Ten States.....168

	Votes.
Alabama.....	8
Arkansas.....	5
California.....	5
Connecticut.....	6
Delaware.....	3
Florida.....	3
Oregon.....	3
Georgia.....	9
Kansas.....	3
Louisiana.....	7
Maine.....	7
Maryland.....	7
Minnesota.....	4
Mississippi.....	7
Nevada.....	3
Nebraska.....	3
New Hampshire.....	5
New Jersey.....	7
Rhode Island.....	4
South Carolina.....	6
Texas.....	6
Vermont.....	5
West Virginia.....	5
North Carolina.....	9
Wisconsin.....	8
Iowa.....	8
Michigan.....	8

Twenty-seven States.....154

If at any time an election for President should devolve on the House of Representatives, a majority of the Representatives in Congress from nineteen of the thirty-seven States, representing not more than one fourth of the people and less than one third of the electoral vote, could by uniting elect the President.

Let me name the States:

	Votes.
Delaware.....	1
Florida.....	1
Kansas.....	1
Nebraska.....	1
Nevada.....	1
Oregon.....	1
Minnesota.....	2
Rhode Island.....	2
Arkansas.....	3
California.....	3
New Hampshire.....	3
Vermont.....	3
West Virginia.....	3
Connecticut.....	4
South Carolina.....	4
Texas.....	4
Maryland.....	5
New Jersey.....	5
Mississippi.....	5

Nineteen States.....52

Thirty-eight of the fifty-two members from the States just named can control the vote of said States and elect the President.

It will be observed that in the table from which I have just read, we have six States, with but one vote each, while seven others have but nineteen votes, and the six remaining but twenty-seven. In all fifty-two votes. These nineteen States have two Senators each, making in all thirty-eight Senators, which, added to the fifty-two Representatives in the House, makes ninety votes, and that number of electoral votes.

In a few years, at most, six new States will be organized out of our present Territories and admitted into the Union. When admitted, they will be entitled under our present system to cast three electoral votes each for President, making eighteen votes, and in case the election of a President devolves on the House of Representatives, they will each have all the political power of New York or Ohio, with the certainty that they cannot lose their vote in the House by an equal division of their Representatives as the larger States may; thus increasing the inequality of political power which now exists in the House when the election of a President devolves upon it, to an extent which I fear the statesmen of the country do not fully recognize. Admit six of the Territories, and the number of States would be increased to forty-three, and the electoral vote, if the States already named retain their present number of votes, would be three hundred and thirty-five.

Now, take Georgia, with her nine electoral votes, and add to the ten States in the first table, and eleven States can give one hundred and seventy-two electoral votes, while the remaining thirty-two States can give but one hundred and sixty-three electoral votes. Thus eleven States out of forty-three, if united, may, by a plurality of their voters, elect a President; yet, if they are so divided that a majority of all the electors are not chosen for one of the candidates, there is no election, and the election devolves on the House of Representatives, when twenty-two States, representing only eighty-nine electoral votes out of three hundred and thirty-five, or a fraction more than one fourth and not one fourth of the popular vote, may elect a President.

Add the six new States, each with their three electoral votes, to the six States now in the Union with but three votes each, and we will have twelve States with one vote each in the House, and but thirty-six electoral votes. When that time comes—which will probably be within ten years at most—we shall have, as I have shown, forty-three States, of which twenty-two will be a majority, and this majority of States can be controlled by thirty-five members; eight votes less than there are States in the Union. Thus it will be seen that THIRTY-FIVE MEN IN THE HOUSE, WHEN COMPOSED OF TWO HUNDRED AND FORTY-NINE MEMBERS, WILL HAVE THE POWER TO ELECT A PRESIDENT SHOULD THE ELECTION DEVOLVE ON THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

I need not add a word in condemnation of a system so utterly repugnant to all right thinking men. The fact that so small a body of men will have it in their power to elect a President, if the election can be carried into the House of Representatives, will make it for the interest of desperate political adventurers and place hunters to combine and force the election into the House. I would not have you forget that the Representatives who are to determine the choice of a President when the election devolves on the House of Representatives are members of the Congress which expires on the day the new President is to be inaugurated: that the term of all members not reelected will cease on the 4th of March after the election of the President, and that such members will then be prepared to accept appointments under the new Administration.

With the States all restored, as we soon hope to see them, there will be thirty-seven, as I have before said, and the number of members in the House will be two hundred and forty-three, one hundred and twenty-two of whom are a majority. YET THIRTY-EIGHT MEMBERS REPRESENTING NINETEEN STATES BY VOTING TOGETHER CAN CONSTITUTIONALLY ELECT THE PRESIDENT WHEN THE ELECTION DEVOLVES ON THE HOUSE.

These calculations are based upon the hypothesis that every State will have a vote in such an election; whereas it will sometimes happen that the larger States will lose their vote by an equal division in their delegation. This, of course, cannot happen where a State has but one Representative.

When there is but one majority in a delegation, any member from such a State may change the result, or he may refuse to vote, and thus deliberately, and for a purpose, cause the vote of his State to be equally divided and lost, thus increasing the power of the few in the House who vote as a unit.

The proposition which I make brings the Senate and House of Representatives together in joint convention within sixty days after the death, resignation, or removal of the President, and secures to each Senator and Representative one vote.

An election of a President by a joint vote of the two Houses of Congress can only happen under the plan which I have submitted, on the death, resignation, or removal of the incumbent; because the people will of necessity elect a President at the second election without the intervention of any body of men, thus taking away from the House of Representatives this dangerous power, now lodged by the Constitution in the hands of less than one third of its members, and securing it to the people.

Experience teaches that small bodies of men may be corrupted, the great body of the people never. Where there are more than two presidential candidates, those representing political parties known to be in the minority in any State, while acting separately, may unite and adopt a joint electoral ticket, composed of men representing their respective party organizations, and thus obtain a plurality of the popular vote in enough doubtful States to defeat an election by electors. The election of the President would then devolve on the House of Representatives, and one of the candidates of the minority could there be elected, as I have shown, by less than one third of the Representatives in Congress, with a constituency numbering less than one fourth of the popular vote.

After an election, in which there was no choice by the people, if they were permitted to vote the second time, they would never permit an election of President to go to the House of Representatives, as provided under our present Constitution. This is one of the important privileges which I propose to secure directly to the people, so that in a country extensive as ours the people may have an opportunity of voting for a second choice if they fail to secure their first choice.

In any light in which I am able to view the present mode of electing a President, whether by the appointment of electors or selecting him by the House of Representatives, it seems to me to be violative of the democratic principle, and dangerous to the peace and stability of the Government.

In conversing recently with one of the most distinguished men of the nation on this subject he said that should an election such as I have described occur, and the choice devolve on the House of Representatives, it would not dare to select for President the candidate having the smallest vote; that if they did so it would end in revolution, and that until some great agitation resulting from such an outrage came upon the country the people could not be aroused to the necessity of providing against its probability.

However that may be, I feel it to be my duty to present this subject to the consideration of this House and the country, with the notice that while I remain a member of this body I do not intend to rest until a judgment is rendered upon it by Congress and the people.

Believing in the capacity of the people for self-government, I ask that all who are duly qualified shall vote directly for President; that they be secured and protected in that right, and be freed from the dictation and control of all intermediate and irresponsible bodies of men. Any substitute for a popular vote makes it possible for intermediate bodies, who are commissioned to act for the people, to betray them or defeat their choice.

The system which now prevails of nominating and electing our Presidents tends directly to corruption and fraud, and to placing the Government in the hands of a minority of experienced and unscrupulous political intriguers.

Minorities cannot long administer a Government such as ours in this country by fraud and intrigue without inaugurating violence and bloodshed. The administration by the slave oligarchy of this Government for so many years by fraud, intrigue, and force is a case in point.

The history of all republics which have risen and fallen teaches us that liberty will perish if the people permit the establishment of any substitute for popular elections.

It is the province of true statesmanship to supply a remedy for the dangerous, unjust, and anti-democratic provision of the Constitution which provides for the election of our national Executive.

I have not provided for special elections by the people in case of the death, disability, or removal of the President, because I think the presidential term should commence and end as now.

The business interests of the country cannot afford to go through a presidential campaign oftener than once in four years. If an election to fill a vacancy devolves on the Congress, each Senator and Representative has one vote, which is as equitable an apportionment according to population as can well be made, and the choice of an acting President to fill any vacancy which may happen will probably give as much satisfaction in the mode proposed as any which could be devised.

OF THE EXECUTIVE AND APPOINTING POWER.

Mr. Chairman, in defining the executive power the framers of the Constitution declared that it should be in a President, intending thereby to say that the executive power of the nation should be vested in one person, to be called a President, and that he should exercise the powers and duties conferred in strict accordance with the grants and limitations of the Constitution. Gradually but steadily the executive power has strengthened itself and encroached upon the legislative department, causing the conflict through which we have just passed.

The power of appointment committed to the President under our Constitution has for years made him little else than a king for the time being, except in name.

Insidious usurpations, long submitted to, but never contemplated by the Constitution, have so grown into custom that to-day, without the tenure-of-office act, the vast power in the hands of an ambitious, aspiring, popular President is dangerous to the peace and stability of the Union.

When it is remembered that there are nearly forty thousand office-holders, whose salaries amount to millions, and whose appointment, directly or indirectly, depend on the word of the President, we will be able to comprehend something of the overshadowing power of the Executive.

We have all seen how dangerous a President may become who is without character and without ability, even when manacled with the civil tenure-of-office law.

Let the intelligent student read over our political history for the past forty or fifty years, and he will be surprised to find how large has been the number of Senators and Representatives who during that time have openly or covertly betrayed their constituents, and become the mere dependents of the Executives who during their official term filled the presidential office.

I will not now speak of the baseness which has been so open and unblushing within the memory of us all. For the sake of place and power a large number of public men, in the past half century, have abandoned cherished convictions, betrayed the people, and become the mere creatures of our acting Executives, so that to-day our political highway presents an almost unbroken line of unburied political skeletons, offensive to the sight and poisonous to our political atmosphere. Sir, let any man read our political history for the past forty or fifty years, and he will find that an executive nod to a Representative of the same political party has been more potent, as a rule, than the will of his constituents. I admit that this abasement was far more general than it is to-day, during the period in which the slave-masters of the South dominated over the nation and northern doughfaces did their bidding with alacrity and without question.

Experience has demonstrated the fact that executive blandishment and patronage has been used with marked success within the memory of us all. Senators and Representatives of all parties have alike yielded to its seductive power.

The men usually selected to do the bidding of an Executive in defiance of the wishes of their constituents are men elected from congressional districts which never reelect their Representatives, or reelect them but once. Such districts, as a rule, send men to Congress who are without State or national reputations, and as a consequence a large number of such men are always ready in the name of party to do the bidding of an unscrupulous Executive, and accept for their services, when repudiated by their constituents, a petty appointment, which men of character, ability, and a political future would spurn. So long as Representatives to Congress are elected for but one, or at most for but two terms, and because they reside in this or that county of a district rather than because of their fitness, ability, or fidelity to principles, and so long as the President is clothed with such vast appointing power, and he is permitted to demand, as now, of his appointees, an indorsement of "his policy," including his policy for a reelection as a condition to their appointment or continuance in office, so long will constituencies be betrayed and political adventurers be successful.

Practically, sir, the demand made, disguise it as we may, of the great body of men who are nominated to important positions by every Executive ambitious for a reelection is, will you pledge yourself to support "my policy?"

Dangerous and corrupting as the appointing power has become in the hands of our Presidents, who are candidates for a reelection, it is rendered still more dangerous by the system which limits the choice of electors in selecting their Representatives in Congress, and compels the electors to select their public servants within the limits of the district in which they reside; whereas they should be permitted to select them as they would select other agents, from any locality in the nation. This plan would tend to national unity and enable any constituency desiring to do so to secure men of the first order of ability to represent them in the national Congress. Men would then be selected for Congress because of their fitness, ability, and national reputations, and not, as is now too often the case, because they happen to reside in some county of a district which perhaps never before had a resident Representative. If there were no custom or law limiting the right of electors in the selection of their Representatives to Congress, they would be selected in a few years as railroad companies select their officers and business managers; as bankers select their cashiers, and as citizens select their agents or attorneys. As it is, we have a system which is anti-democratic and indefensible; a system at war with the rights and privileges of freemen and electors.

THE ROTATION SYSTEM—ITS STUPIDITY.

In a number of congressional districts personally known to me, the rotation system prevails so rigidly that they never reelect a gentleman to Congress, no matter how able or faithful. Political aspirants with their personal friends come together in what they are pleased to call conventions, and negotiations are deliberately entered into and a programme agreed upon, which must remain undisturbed for years and with which no national exigency nor local want of the people must interfere. In these convention conclaves the people are without a voice or vote, and in the name of party they are bound hand and foot. It is generally agreed that the nominee for the first term, in such district, after a new apportionment, shall be given to the county having the most political influence, if their local politicians can agree, and thereafter, if there are more than one county in the district, that the candidate shall rotate until each county shall in turn be served with a candidate. Experience has demonstrated how indifferent a majority of such Representatives are to the wishes and wants of their constituents.

Of the practical inefficiency of such Representatives I need not speak. It is not possible for them to be otherwise than inefficient. Let the constituencies who have so repeatedly suffered under this stupid system, and been humiliated, disgraced, and betrayed, apologize to the nation for sending such men into her council halls, by speedily changing a system which is the nursery of the most insufferable demagogues.

I have known men who ought never to have been intrusted with official position anywhere, and who probably never would have been but for this system, change their residence from one county to another for the express purpose of securing a nomination to Congress, and succeed. Their anxiety to serve the dear people would become so great that they would anticipate by removing into a county entitled under their agreement to the candidate at the next election.

Mr. Chairman, what is a congressional district? Legally and for the time being it is one political community, as much as any county? It is organized by law as an entirety for the election of a Representative to Congress. The system which provides for the rotation of the member from one county to another every two or four years was not adopted in the interest of the people but in the interest of politicians.

I know many constituencies will pardon me if I suggest to such as are pledged by their party leaders to the policy of electing a Representative from each county in a district, or a new and inexperienced man every two or four years, that they modify it so far, at least, as to select a gentleman to represent them because of his character, ability, and well-known fidelity to principles which they regard as fundamental, and that they require the candidate, as a condition to his renomination, that he "board round," when at home, in each county, after the custom of our western schoolmasters in early times, so that each county in such district shall have secured to it, at least once every year or two, a Representative in Congress who shall thus become a resident of the county. This would be a vast improvement on the plan so long adhered to in the North, which plan enabled the political adventurers who have so often held the balance of power in all our great national struggles to crawl into the national Congress. As a class these were the men who, at the bidding of the slave oligarchy, betrayed the nation into the adoption of the Missouri compromise of 1820; and again, when it was repealed, whose votes enacted the so-called compromises of 1850 into law, including the infamous fugitive-slave act, the Kansas-Nebraska acts of 1854, and the Lecompton constitution of 1856; in short, the men who betrayed the nation in every great struggle between liberty and slavery for the past half century.

A large proportion of the men who thus betrayed their constituents, after being repudiated at home, received petty appointments from the President. This custom of compensating the nation's betrayers, by their appointment to office, has been sanctioned and sanctified by long and successful usage, so that an act of successful treachery against a confiding constituency opens the door for promotion at the presidential mansion. All can understand that so corrupt and corrupting a custom could only be maintained by having reckless demagogues and small men without character rotated in and out of Congress as fast as possible. The South favored the "rotation principle" for the North, but were too wise and wily to adopt it themselves. The result was that with the immense patronage of the Government in the hands of a President controlled by the slave power liberty was always betrayed.

Had I time I might here present some interesting and instructive facts, showing how few men the North maintained in Congress beyond a single term, or beyond four years in the House for twenty-five years before the war, and how the South continued her Representatives until her men of ordinary abilities became so familiar with the public business of the country that they came to be leaders in Congress, and by a careful organization of the committees, controlled the legislation of the nation.

When I came into the Thirty-Sixth Congress the two Senators from Florida—a political community without the voting population of the congressional district which I have the honor to represent—were each at the head of an important committee; one at the head of the Navy, the other of the Post Office; and this was a fair sample of the manner in which committees were organized both in the Senate and House for many years before the war. The whole State of Florida did not have as many letters go through its post offices in a year as go through one city in my district in a single week; nor did its entire commercial interests reach in one year an amount equal in value to the commerce of Toledo every ten days; and yet these two men shaped, and in a great measure controlled, the postal and naval legislation of the country. Thus the representatives of a class interest, numbering but a few hundred thousand slave owners, the most offensive and infamous oligarchy in history, by the political machinery of conventions took possession of the Government in the name of Democracy and filled its most honorable and responsible offices from their own number. I am glad to be able to state that thousands of good men all over the country are beginning to see and feel the necessity of a radical change in this matter. Of the many letters which I have received, and seen when received by others, none is more to the point than one shown me a few moments ago by my colleague, [Mr. LAWRENCE,] an extract from which I will read. He says to my colleague:

"Go on. You have borne the heat and burden of the day. We do not want to trade horses while crossing the stream."

"We like your bold, manly course, and have learned to appreciate it the more since we see so many going over to the enemy. We want to make the example that it pays better to remain with our colors than to sell out and desert."

DANGEROUS POWER OF THE PRESIDENT IN CONTROLLING CONGRESSIONAL NOMINATIONS AND ELECTIONS.

At least one third of all the congressional districts in the nation may safely be classed, in ordinary party times, as politically doubtful. Such districts are organized by the dominant party in every State Legislature for the purpose of securing, if possible, to their party, every Representative in Congress from the State.

A majority of all doubtful or close districts have what is known as a balance-of-power faction in each party, composed for the most part of dissatisfied and disappointed men, with political adventurers for leaders, who are always plotting for office, especially for congressional nominations, on the principle of "rotation," and "that this or that man has had it long enough; and that it is their turn now." If they cannot secure a nomination from one party they do not hesitate to ask a nomination from the opposite party. If they cannot secure a nomination from either party they do not hesitate to "bolt," or to enter into any coalition which promises to secure defeat to any man who stands in their way. In short, they will do any act which they believe will compel one or both parties to a compromise in the selection of its candidates, under the threat of defeat if compliance with their demands is refused. These demands are usually the petty offices at the disposal of the Representative from the district and a bargain as to which faction and county in the district shall have the congressional candidate for the next term.

In this way, with the aid of the plausible cry, "rotation in office," political apostates and adventurers and men without character, ability, or principle have so often in our history crept into the council halls of the nation and misrepresented and betrayed the people.

In such districts as I have described the question too often asked by the best men of both parties is not who is the most reliable and competent man to represent us in Congress, but "who can the most certainly defeat the candidate of the Opposition." To accomplish this men who never were Republicans have been selected as candidates and voted for by Republicans since the organization of that great party, and sometimes apostates, or men but recently members of the opposite party, have been nominated by Republican conventions, as in the case of Andrew Johnson, not because they ever advocated or honestly entertained Republican ideas, but because political tricksters and schemers promised their support, and induced the party to believe that success could thus be secured at the election by the nomination of such candidates, and that defeat would be inevitable without it. As a rule the men thus nominated are but political adventurers, thrown to the surface like drift-wood in a flood, and, though they soon sink with their own rottenness, while they are in power they corrupt and debase the nation.

The insane desire for mere party success rather than the triumph of ideas in the election of honorable and responsible men of unquestioned fidelity has invited and encouraged, in almost every congressional district in which the party majority is uncertain, a score or more of "bolters," apostates, and political trimmers to thrust themselves upon both the great political parties as candidates for nomination to Congress. As a class these are the men who in the past thirty or forty years have so often betrayed constituencies at the bidding of an unscrupulous, ambitious Executive, and received their reward in some petty office.

When a State or congressional district accepts as its Representative a drunkard or a man without moral character and destitute of political principles it treads the path which leads the nation on the highway to ruin. Far better that a party be defeated than that it should elect a man morally base enough to betray it. Far better defeat with men of character representing its ideas than success with men who represent neither moral nor political convictions. That a system so vicious and corrupting should so long have continued in any State or locality, even under the despotism of party conventions, is one of the inexplicable mysteries of American politics.

To the fact that the rotation system was in a measure abolished by the Republican party, and faithful and experienced men retained in Congress from a large number of northern States during the war and since, does the nation owe in great part the successful legislation which carried it triumphantly through the war and prepared it the better to resist the usurpations and defeat in part the conspiracies of the acting President and his co-conspirators and allies. With new, untried, and inexperienced men every two or four years such a result would have been impossible.

So long as the system which I have described of nominating and electing Representatives to Congress is adhered to—and I concede that the district system is infinitely better than the general ticket system plan which at one time prevailed in a number of States, where the entire congressional delegation from a State was elected on one ticket—I say that so long as the system now prevailing of selecting Representatives to Congress continues and the vast patronage of the Government remains, as now, in the hands of the Executive, so long will a new set of unknown and unfaithful men be found in Congress to do the bidding of any Executive of their party who is unscrupulous enough to employ the Government patronage for that purpose.

Had Mr. Lincoln desired the defeat of the radical Republican candidates for Congress in 1862 he could have secured it in a majority of congressional districts in the nation. Had Mr. Johnson been a man of character and ability he could in 1866, by ordinary management and a judicious use of the public patronage, have secured in close districts the defeat of all Republicans opposed to "his policy." Through his thirty or forty thousand appointees and his newspaper organs professing Republicanism, and such Republicans as he then had in Congress coöperating with him, he could have said, in a way not to be misunderstood, that such a result would be agreeable to him, and that a large number of leading Republicans, in Congress and out of it, concurred with him in believing that the defeat of all radicals was necessary to the complete success of the Republican party. And there were a number of professed Republicans then in Congress stupid enough or base enough to listen to such stuff and to say that the President's purposes were "to fight out his differences with the radicals in the Republican party;" that "in no event would he go over to the enemy." Fortunately for the nation, Mr. Johnson's open apostasy and base betrayal of the great party which elected him; his offensive and disgusting exhibition of himself throughout the country, and the want of character in his so-called Republican adherents was all that saved us from division and defeat at the elections in 1866 and since.

Mr. Chairman, there are but few congressional districts in which any President of character and good standing with his party may not, by a free use of the vast patronage in his hands, defeat, either for nomination or election, any candidate of his party for Congress who is obnoxious to him. That such vast power ought not to be lodged in the hands of any President will be conceded by all true friends of Democratic Government.

As the nation grows in population and wealth this vast, uncontrolled, and uncontrollable power increases and becomes more dangerous. Its corrupting influence reaches out and subsidizes men in every county of the Republic.

Sir, on behalf of all who cherish the Democratic idea I plead for the submission, by this Congress, of such an amendment to the Constitution as shall, when adopted, give security against the corruption and the danger which is inseparable from the selfish use of the vast appointing power in the hands of any President desirous of a reelection.

Before the rebellion such Representatives in Congress as I have described were always sufficiently numerous to prevent, by uniting with the Opposition, the passage of any important measure obnoxious to the President if he exercised the veto power. Hence we see that a President of character and ability may, with the vast patronage at his disposal and a liberal use of the veto, defy, in ordinary party times, both Congress and the nation for his entire term.

THE REMEDY OF IMPEACHMENT BUT "A SCARE-CROW."

As to the impeachment and removal of a President, that will probably never be attempted again. The late melancholy failure or refusal of the so-called high court to convict and depose an admitted usurper and violator of law, who was without a party and powerless to resist any order of that tribunal, has practically settled that question for all time to come. The nation must seek some other protection from the usurpations of its Executives than the high court of impeachment. Jefferson said that the clause of the Constitution providing for the impeachment of the President would prove but "a scare-crow." To-day we all know that it is a dead letter.

We have all witnessed the resort which was had by artful men to technical subtleties and legal sophistries in order to release the President from all accountability to the nation.

If Jefferson at the time of the adoption of the Constitution could foresee and declare that "impeachment would prove but a scare-crow," we who have witnessed its practical workings may, I think, without incurring the charge of rashness, proclaim it "a national farce."

In the light of what has so recently transpired I am more profoundly impressed than ever with the great wisdom and prophetic foresight of the real statesmen of the Revolution. They comprehended the danger of executive power and the impossibility of successful impeachment before the Senate.

In the Virginia convention Mr. George Mason, in speaking of this defect in the national Constitution, said:

"It has been wittily observed that the Constitution has married the President and Senate—has made them man and wife. I believe the consequence that generally results from marriage will happen here. They will be continually supporting and aiding each other. They will always consider their interests as united. WE KNOW THE ADVANTAGE THE FEW HAVE OVER THE MANY. They can with facility act in concert and on a uniform system; they may join schemes and plot against the people without any chance of detection. The Senate and President will form a combination that cannot be prevented by the Representatives. The executive and legislative powers thus connected will destroy all balances. This would have been prevented by a constitutional council to aid the President in the discharge of his office; vesting the Senate at the same time with the power of impeaching them. Then we should have real responsibility. In its present form the guilty try themselves. The President is tried by his counselors. He is not removed from office during his trial. When he is arraigned for treason he has the command of the Army and Navy, and may surround the Senate with thirty thousand troops." * * * "He may frequently pardon crimes which were advised by himself. It may happen at some future day that he will establish a monarchy or destroy the Republic. If he has the power of granting pardons before indictment and conviction, may he not stop inquiry and prevent detection?"

Mr. Madison answered Mr. Mason as follows:

"There is one security in this case to which gentlemen may not have adverted. If the President be connected in any suspicious manner with any persons, and there be grounds to believe he will shelter himself, the House of Representatives can impeach him. They can remove him if found guilty; they can suspend him when suspected, and the power will devolve upon the Vice President. Should he be suspected also, he may likewise be suspended till he be impeached and removed, and the Legislature may make a temporary appointment. This is a great security."

I do not forget that Mr. Madison, after becoming President, yielded to influences which have controlled other men after obtaining power, and that he denied the authority of Congress to suspend the President during trial. I prefer the opinion of Madison, when speaking in the Virginia convention, to the opinion of Madison after he became President. Mr. Monroe, who afterward became President, declared that the power conceded to the Executive under the Constitution was dangerous to the liberties of the people. He said:

"The President ought to act under the strongest impulses of reward and punishment, which are the strongest incentives to human action. There are two ways of securing this point. He ought to depend on the people of America for his appointment and continuance in office. He ought to be tried by dispassionate judges. His responsibility ought, further, to be direct and immediate." * * * "To whom is he responsible? To the Senate, his own council. If he makes a treaty bartering the interests of his country, by whom is he to be tried? By the very persons who advised him to perpetrate the act. Is this any security?"

Mr. Grayson, another distinguished member of the same convention, during the debates from which I have just quoted, said:

"Consider the means of importance he (the President) will have by appointing officers. If he has a good understanding with the Senate they will join to prevent a discovery of his misdeeds." * * * "As this Government is organized it would be dangerous to trust the President with such powers. How will you punish him if he abuse his power? Will you call him before the Senate? They are his counselors and partners in crimes. Where are your checks? We ought to be extremely cautious in this country. If ever the Government be changed it will probably be into a despotism."

Has not our recent experience justified all that was said by the considerate statesmen from whom I have quoted, of the danger of executive power and the impossibility of redress by impeachment and trial before the Senate. These brief speeches are so conclusive, when coupled with events which have just transpired, that I do not hesitate to declare the remedy by impeachment for executive crimes and misdemeanors "a national farce." From all that has transpired am I not justified in so proclaiming? What are the facts?

The great criminal of the nineteenth century was brought to the bar of the nation's appointed court, and the issue proved too much for the weakness of human nature. The executive power asserts its defiance of laws and Constitution and its supremacy over both, and the people are powerless in the presence of the usurper. Weeks ago he is said to have communicated the forthcoming decision of the Senate and named the very members thereof who were to vote for his acquittal. The people with one accord had pronounced him guilty, but the high court enter up a verdict of acquittal. All this is done under the sanction of a judicial oath, and the people are told that they must not go behind that to question the judicial verdict of Senators. In answer to this I need only reply that the vilest enormities ever inflicted on mankind of which we have any record in history were committed under the sanction and solemnities of a judicial oath.

If public rumor be true, the verdict acquitting the President was not rendered because of law or evidence, but was the result of a secret, deliberate, and carefully organized combination, brought about by personal hatreds, individual ambitions, presidential electioneering schemes in the interest of office-holding and office-seeking cliques; and, alas! all fear by a more monstrous prostitution of the great trust committed to each individual member of the court which shall be nameless here.

If such combinations, with the means which are said to have been employed, may successfully prevent the removal of a dangerous and guilty President, by the great tribunal provided by our fathers for the protection and security of the Republic, we may look for the early inauguration of a policy which will speedily bring into entire subordination the legislative to the executive department of the Government.

From the judgment of this high tribunal, made under the solemn obligations of a judicial oath, we intend to appeal to a higher and safer tribunal, the great tribunal of the people, who, though not acting under the sanction of official or judicial oaths, will render a verdict quite as honestly and quite as free from partisan hatred—a verdict which shall, at all events, be free from the taint of dishonor and corruption.

To me the only hope of the nation is in that power which can make Presidents and Senators. To that incorruptible power we shall appeal from a verdict which is utterly indefensible and a mockery of justice.

To the people we also intend to appeal for an amendment to their organic law which shall abolish the Vice Presidential office and provide against the reelection of any man to the Presidency, as a means of obtaining additional security against the encroachments of the executive power. Pass this amendment; secure a fair representation to the minority; provide for a modification of the veto power by authorizing the President to return a bill with his objections, but provide that on a reconsideration a majority of the members elected and qualified in the Senate and in the House of Representatives shall be required to enact the bill into law over the veto, instead of two thirds of a quorum, as now, and the people will have all the security necessary to protect them against hasty, partisan, or unconstitutional legislation. Add to this a civil tenure-of-office act which shall take away from Senators and Representatives the authority which custom has secured to those representing the administration party of designating persons for appointment, and lodge it with a board of examiners, as free to act as the examining board at West Point; which board shall examine all applicants for appointment and for promotion, and before whom all shall have a fair hearing, with a copy of the charges and specifications prior to their dismissal from office; and we will do something toward remedying the present unjust and indefensible system of appointing persons to office in our civil service. Provide with this a modification of the pardoning power, which ought never to be lodged in the hands of any one man, and a provision authorizing the House of Representatives, by a two-thirds vote, to demand a change of any member of the Cabinet, and the people will retain in their hands such control of their public servants as will be a guarantee of their fidelity and faithfulness. In this way the dangerous assumptions of the Executive can be successfully provided against and the rights and liberties of the people preserved. If some such provision as I have suggested is not adopted, then the declaration made by Franklin in the Convention which framed the Constitution, that—

"The executive power will be always increasing here as elsewhere till it ends in monarchy," will, I fear, some day not far distant become a prophecy fulfilled.

PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES NOT SELECTED BY CONVENTIONS BECAUSE OF FITNESS, CHARACTER, OR ABILITY.

Mr. Chairman, the considerations which so often prevail in the nomination of Representatives to Congress in closely-contested districts have too often prevailed with both parties in the nomination of their presidential candidates. The question asked by the leaders and active men in each party is not, as it should be, "Who of all the public men of my party is the best qualified, because of executive ability, character, culture, and fidelity to principles, to discharge the duties of the presidential office with credit to himself and honor to the nation both at home and abroad; who has the most honorable record, the most blameless public and private life with which to adorn and dignify the most exalted and honorable political office on earth?" But the question asked is, "Where can we find a candidate without a public record, a man of whom our opponents can say nothing, and of whom we may say what we please, to satisfy the interests or prejudices of any locality without fear of contradiction; a man who will the most certainly secure the electoral vote of this or that State which political prophets declare to be doubtful; States which are conceded to hold the balance of power in the presidential contest?" These are the questions asked.

It could not well be otherwise under such a political system than that untried, unfaithful, and incompetent men, comparatively unknown to the great body of the people, should so often have reached the presidential office. I need not cite more than one instance in our history to show how successfully the honest voters of a great State have been defrauded and betrayed by the nomination of such men as I have described.

In 1844 the people of Pennsylvania were induced to vote for James K. Polk and against Henry Clay, because the Democratic leaders in that State adopted and carried upon all their banners the rallying watchwords, "Polk, Dallas, and the tariff '42," watchwords which would have defeated them if placed upon their banners in the South or West. After the election the people whose votes had thus been obtained were openly and unblushingly betrayed by the repeal of the tariff of 1842, which act received the casting vote of Vice President Dallas in the Senate and secured the approval of President Polk.

The people who have been so often betrayed begin to recognize the fact that treachery in politics has become a trade, and that so long as the convention and electoral system prevails they are powerless in the hands of its managers.

They know that, as a rule, so long as the people submit to this system, no man will be nominated by either party for the Presidency who is their first choice, or for whom a majority of the electors of either party would voluntarily vote for nomination at the ballot-box, if they could do so under the protection of law.

Adopt the system which I propose and no third or fourth-rate man would probably ever be nominated for President, certainly no man could by any possibility be nominated whose political opinions were unknown and with whose political record the people were not familiar. The Republican party with such a system would never have been guilty of the folly of nominating Andrew Johnson—nor would the voters in the Democratic party entertain for a moment the proposition to nominate the Chief Justice as their candidate. Yet Johnson was nominated by a Republican convention and some of the Democratic managers profess to favor the nomination of Mr. Chase in their convention.

All know that Johnson was the choice of a few tricksters in the Baltimore convention, and not the choice of the Republican party. Mr. Chase would not be the first choice of one Democrat in a thousand, yet men are plotting for his nomination in the Democratic convention, knowing that if he can be nominated the despotism of king caucus would compel the party to yield him its support.

In order to obtain a sufficient number of votes to be included in the list of the five highest or the three highest voted for at the first election, it would be necessary, under the plan which I propose, to present to the voters of both parties or all parties, men of well-known character, ability, and political integrity. No faction or minority in any party could then form combinations and secure nominations by fraud, nor could they defeat, as now, the nomination of any man who was the choice of the majority; schemers could not hold the "balance of power" in any State, and compel the nomination of their candidate on pain of defeat at the election. The voice of each party in the nation would speak and be heard as a unit, and there would be no desperate efforts made, as now, by either party to secure a bare majority in large States by fraud and corruption, in order to secure their electoral vote.

This proposition is so just that I hope it will commend itself to the Congress of the nation, as I am confident it will to the great body of the American people. Its adoption will secure to the voters of the nation a system, plain, simple, natural—a system free from complications and from the control of minorities—one which permits no body of men or party machinery to interpose between the people and the ballot-box.

CITIZENSHIP SUFFRAGE.

Mr. Chairman, if we adopt the proposition for the election of the President by a direct vote of the people, the necessity of securing the privileges of the ballot to every citizen without distinction of race or color, whether native or foreign born, will be conceded by all who desire the unity and stability of our Government.

While I hold that Congress has the power, under the Constitution as it is, to clothe every citizen with the privilege of the ballot, I am confident it will never be secured to them except by an amendment to the national Constitution.

I am ready now, as I have been for years, to vote for an act of Congress securing the great privilege of the ballot to all citizens without regard to race or color in every State and Territory of the Republic.

I cannot, however, shut my eyes to the fact that such an act of Congress passed so soon after the rejection by a number of States of amendments to their constitutions proposing to confer suffrage on colored citizens, would meet with such determined and united opposition from the so-called Democratic party and from some professed Republicans, that in many localities it would end in violence and resistance to the execution of the law.

I need not add that this resistance and violence would be inaugurated by the very class who to-day would demand the prompt and merciless execution of the infamous and brutal fugitive-slave act, if slavery were not abolished.

In the name of democracy and Christianity the enslavement of men has been sanctioned, and the most God-defying laws executed with the basest alacrity; while those enactments which ennoble and dignify the human race and recognize the rights and privileges of men are condemned and resisted by its professed disciples.

I want citizenship and suffrage to be synonymous. To put the question beyond the power of States to withhold it, I propose the amendment to article fourteen, now submitted.

A large number of Republicans who concede that the qualifications of an elector ought to be the same in every State, and that it is more properly a national than a State question, do not believe Congress has the power under our present Constitution to enact a law conferring suffrage in the States, nevertheless they are ready and willing to vote for such an amendment to the Constitution as shall make citizenship and suffrage uniform throughout the nation.

For this purpose I have added to the proposed amendment for the election of President a section on suffrage, to which I invite special attention.

This is the third or fourth time I have brought forward a proposition on suffrage substantially like the one just presented to the House. I do so again because I believe the question of citizenship suffrage a question which ought to be met and settled now. Important and all-absorbing as many questions are which now press themselves upon our consideration, to me no question is so vitally important as this. Tariffs, taxation, and finance ought not to be permitted to supersede a question affecting the peace and personal security of every citizen, and I may add, the peace and security of the nation.

No party can be justified in withholding the ballot from any citizen of mature years, native or foreign born, except such as are non compos or are guilty of infamous crimes; nor can they justly confer this great privilege upon one class of citizens to the exclusion of another class simply because one is white and the other black.

True democracy pleads for the equal rights of all men before the law. It demands the ballot for every man, because, under a Government such as ours, the ballot is the poor man's weapon of protection and defense. It gives him dignity and power; it recognizes his manhood and secures him justice; it makes the Government his agent instead of his master. We all know from experience something of the educational influence and self-protecting power of the ballot.

It quickens and expands the thoughts of men and enables them the better to comprehend their own interests and the higher and more important interests of the State. To secure this self-educating, self-protecting power to all, I again press upon your consideration this amendment. Its adoption will make the national Constitution what it ought to be, the shield of every citizen, so that no State may ever again deprive him, without just cause, of this highest privilege of American citizenship; so that hereafter, if a citizen remove from one State into another, he shall not on that account be deprived by State law of the ballot and be treated in his own county as an alien.

Pass this amendment, and we shall conform our national Constitution to our new condition as a nation. We will thereby place in the hands of each citizen a new power for its preservation, so that we shall become, in fact, one people, living under a common Constitution, which is the outgrowth of civilization, experience, and necessity; a Constitution which recognizes justice as the supreme law and reflects the convictions and aspirations of a free and united people. To this proposition, so long cherished and believed by me to be for the best interest of my country, I invoke the considerate judgment of all men and an impartial verdict at the bar of public opinion.

FINANCES.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, while it is an admitted fact that in all free governments political parties holding opposite views will exist, yet it is also a fact well established by the history of nations that free institutions have been invariably overturned by the madness of partisan spirit. I am one of those who have ever believed, nay, I will say more, I know that the great body of the American people are honest and patriotic, but while such is the undoubted fact, we have seen them at times carried away by the delirium of passion, and hurried forward, not only to their country's peril, but to their own detriment as individual citizens.

